Having the Spirit of God in him, he was enabled to interpret several remarkable dreams of Nebuchadnezzar, showing his superiority to all the learned Magicians and Astrologers of Chaldea. For these services he was rewarded with the highest offices of State. The powerful combinations formed for his destruction were thus signally defeated, and a happy illustration furnished of the security of those who maintain unshaken confidence in God. The Book of Daniel contains the most remarkable prophecies on record, and at an epoch of the most important character and which carries us down to the setting up of

THE KINGDOM OF GOD,

At which time Daniel himself will stand in his lot. The prophecy of Daniel fills a very important place in the prophetic word. How clearly mapped out are the events of this world's history before the eye of God. He forms his plans in reference to the purpose which he hath purposed in himself, kings, generals, and statesmen, rise up at appointed times and work out their appointed schemes; and while they think they are carrying out their own plans, God is employing them in bringing about his own designs which he hath purposed from the beginning. We have a striking instance of this in the case of Daniel, a vessel prepared for God's use at the crisis of the captivity. A witness for the God of Israel in one of the most trying periods of the world's history. Infinite wisdom bore long with the stubborn rebellion of Israel and Judah and permitted them to go just so far and no farther. There was no remedy. Their seven times punishment were about to commence in their being carried captive to Babylon. Their cup of iniquity was filled up, and their kingdom overturned. A crisis of peculiar importance had arrived. A great turning point in history was reached at this juncture, which was an era of solemn change to the chosen people.

Was it not a fit crisis for a fresh outburst of prophetic light? The throne of Judah was overturned, had fallen to rise no more—until days yet to come.

The times of the Gentiles were about to commence. The kingdom of Israel was over. The heritage of Judah lay waste. The temple of God was a heap of ruins. The corporate nationality of the Jews was shattered. It was an hour of utmost gloom and deepest discouragement. The outward ordinances of religion, the typical ritual was suppressed or suspended. The Davidic Covenant apparently broken. How intensely was the light of further revelation required! Mercy was mingled with judgment at this sorrowful crisis. It was during this captivity that God gave an outline of the world's future history resulting in the establishing of a kingdom which should break in pieces and consume all other kingdoms and itself to stand forever. This may be called

THE DANIEL PROGRAMME.

It was revealed first to King Nebuchadnezzar in a dream and which only Daniel could bring to his mind and interpret. In this wonderful image which Nebuchadnezzar saw in his dream, we find outlined the future kingdoms of the world. "known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the ages." "Remember the former things (saith Isaiah) of old for I am God and there is none else. I am God and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done; saying my counsel shall stand and I will do all my pleasure." See illustrations from Kings and Isaiah. Daniel had the same outline of the governments of the world revealed to him through the symbols of beasts, and ending in the same glorious result. "In the visions of his head upon his bed. He saw one like the Son of Man come to the ancient of days and they brought him near before him, and there was given to him a kingdom and dominion that all peoples, nations and languages should serve him, whose dominion is an everlasting dominion that shall not pass away and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." "But the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and

POSSESS THE KINGDOM FOREVER AND EVER.

And all dominions shall serve and obey him." This surely is a glorious result held out to a sin-stricken world. Behold a King shall reign in Righteousness." This kingdom when established, will be the world's panacea for all existing evils. The present shame and future glory of Israel, as revealed through the prophets, is often coupled together. The present interegnum of long duration, was not taken into account. Their error consisted in their concentrated view of the glory of their Messiah, overlooking his sufferings, and so fulfilled their own prophets in condemning him.

Thus they have stumbled over that stumbling stone; but not that they should fall forever. "The Redeemer will yet come to Zion and turn away ungodliness from Jacob." "God will yet remember his mercy and his truth toward the house of Israel." "They are yet to bud and blossom and fill the whole world with fruit." "And it shall come to pass that as ye were acurse among the nations, O house of Israel, and house of Judah, so will I save you and

YE SHALL BE A BLESSING.

Thus we see that the blessing of the nations is associated with the lifting up the Jew in his true place at the return of their Messiah. While they are outcasts the world will ever be tempest tossed, and according to Isa. xlix. Jesus is the restorer.

It is a singular fact, that the great prophetic judgment upon the succession, career, and final termination of worldly sovereignty, was given out from the original head, "Nebucnadnezzar," of world empires, and from a princely Capital, "Babylon," whose very name denotes the "Gate of God." Equally striking is the further fact that the Holy Prophet through whom these divine decisions and fore-announcements were made was not only an illustrious sage and courtier in this Gate of God, but that his name, Daniel, means,

GOD'S JUDGE.

Thus by a group of coincidences which could hardly have been accidental, we see "God's Judge," in the "Gate of God," giving forth the predestination and decrees of God with regard to political power, in its whole course of earthly career.

Thus the object of this prophetic Book (Daniel) is to describe these voices of God, from the Gate of God, through the Judge of God. As the world approaches its end, errors will increase and impiety and infidelity abound. And Daniel is preeminently the man of God raised up in these evil times to instruct and stay the heart of faith. Such was his office to God's erring people in his own day, and such his book is meant to be to us, as we see the shadows of the coming judgement gather upon the world. Nowhere does the Spirit of prophecy and miracle stand out more illustriously in the eyes of men than here.

Nowhere is there a more marvelous demonstration to mankind of the power,

PROVIDENCE AND PRESENCE OF GOD

in human affairs than in this book. By the accurate fulfillment of these predictions of the Spirit through Daniel, through the entire roll of ages since, those miracles are ever more and more confirmed. It is hard to conceive what sort of Divine manifestations could be better adapted to encourage and establish God's people against the philosophies of the age, and nurture that fullness of faith which alone can withstand the storms and tempests and darkness which is already thickening around us, and to enable us to look beyond, to that heavenly light and eternal calm which are at length to take possession of this afflicted and misruled world.

Unfortunately, however, these voices from "Babylon" have not been receiving the sort of attention to which they are entitled.

Modern Theology in general has so dwindled and sunk away from the original and

PROPER FAITH OF GOD'S WORD,

That the Spirit of this Book has become estranged and uncongenial, if not offensive to it. Where do we hear its sublime teachings referred too? The general silence of the pulpit in regard to it, is very suggestive; only a very few (and those few of a very unpopular character) are taking heed to the sure word of prophecy, "while the wicked will do wickedly, the wise shall understand." "No prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation or invention." What the world needs with regard to this Book is that it be ventilated, emancipated from all clogs and fetters, and that the great "Daniel" be made to speak for himself in the majesty of his own inspired words: that those sublime foreshadowings vouchsafed to him by the God of heaven, be recalled and restated as they were, and were meant and received at the beginning, and which principally relates to the

SETTING UP OF GOD'S KINGDOM ON THE EARTH.

And which is never to pass away, never to revert to another people. Of its glory and peace there is no end. It is the kingdom of the Stone, the eternal representative of the Eternal God. There is but one such kingdom, and it is the sum and fulfillment of all prophecy, the crown of dispensations. The grand consummation of Jehovah's administration toward our world. It is a wonder and an astonishment to the enlightened mind, to see professed teachers of God's word allow themselves to be turned away from this the sublimest doctrine of God's word. The doctrine of the kingdom so vividly set forth in the Book of Daniel, and which has been confirmed by subsequent history.

Twenty-five hundred years have added their seal of demonstration to the truth and accuracy of the prediction as respects the ancient Empires of this world. How can it fail in that greater and more important phase, viz: "The Theocracy" which is soon to take their place.

No matter what reverend unbelief or popular infidelity may say; let us remember the words of the Prophet,

THE DREAM IS CERTAIN

And the interpretation thereof sure. Our caviling scepticism and rationalizing, will not hinder the eternal decrees of God.

From the beginning of earthly empire Jehovah has made known to the children of men the coming of a kingdom which shall break in pieces and consume all other kingdoms and which shall stand for ever.

A kingdom of which the God-man is to be the head and King. The possessors of the authority of which are the immoral saints, and its establishment in our world will be the consummation of that redemption to which all dispensations look and for which all ages wait.

MARRIED

By John L. Wince at the home of the Bride's parents, in Sidney, Kosciusko Co. Ind. Feb. 12th, 1893, Mr. Ira Tillman of Hopeville, Iowa, and Miss Ida Viola Musselman.

The well wishes of the guests present on this happy occasion, and the prayers of the church of which Sister Ida was an esteemed member, will go with them to their home in Iowa, to be remembered and called to mind in future days, in times of calm reflection. May God bless and prosper them in life, and guide them by His counsel, and fit and qualify them for His kingdom.

JOHN L. WINCE.

"Pray for Us."

To Mr. and Mrs. Ira Tillman, Hopeville, Iowa.

Yes, fair young bride, so well beloved,
Your last words linger in our ears,
And bring a sudden rush of tears,
—Our souls to lowest depths are stirred.

"O pray for us!" that earnest cry,
How much it means in this glad hour,
Of trust in Him whose arm of power,
Can reach to thee from worlds on high.

And we will pray—O blessed Lord,
Do Thou watch o'er this goodly pair,
Make their abode a place of prayer,
And keep and guide them by thy Word!

—S. ROXANA WINCE.

DIED.

Nathan C. Smith died at his home in Donalson this County, Feb. 8, 1893, aged 33 years 4 months and 22 days.

He was born and raised in this county, and by good deportment won the esteem of his neighbors and associates. He leaves a wife and three little children and one brother to mourn his loss, as immediate relatives, with a large circle of relatives and friends, not so near a kin. Early in life he united with the M. E. Church, but being of that investigating turn of mind he some years ago endorsed the faith of the Gospel of the Kingdom, which faith and hope he rejoiced in even to the day of his death.

Funeral services held at Poplar Grove Church, by the writer, after which we laid him to rest to await the trump of God.

N. H. GEISELMAN.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

The Spirit of Worldliness.

There is scarcely a more comprehensive exhortation in the New Testament than that one with which St. Paul begins the twelfth chapter of his letter to the Romans: "Be not conformed to this world." It is, of course, understood that the word "world" does not here mean the visible earth and sky, nor yet the existing social order as such. The material world, being a tangible expression of the divine thought and the open theatre of our moral probation, is not evil, but good; and human society, with all its necessary appointments, canons, and customs, answering as it does to the ultimate needs and instincts of our nature, is an ordinance of God, and not an institute of the devil.

The "world" against which the apostle puts us on our guard may be defined as the sum total of all those forces and influences, political, commercial, scientific, social and domestic, which both singly and unitedly are antagonistic to the kingdom of God. Or, to speak in concrete fashion, it denotes the aggregate of those persons over whom these ungodly forces and influences hold a dominant sway. This is "that present evil world," which "hated" the Master before it hated his disciples, "the friendship of which is enmity to God," and to "deliver" us from which our Lord Jesus freely gave his own life. "If any man love the world" in this sense—"the love of the Father is not in him."

The spirit of this "world" is as subtle and pervasive as air or light. It encompasses our whole life at every point, and, consciously or unconsciously, colors our thoughts, shapes our speech, and affects our actions with more or less force from our bright and joyous youth down to our decrepit and feeble old age. To resist it is the most difficult of tasks, requiring for its complete accomplishment a clarified spiritual discernment, an instinctive and cultivated aversion to evil of every form, and a settled and abiding personal loyalty to Jesus Christ. The well-meaning, but narrow-minded, people who suppose that they are unworldly simply because they put on an unusual kind of garb, decline to adopt the customary forms of speech, and refuse to comply with the ordinary usages of their neighbors, make a great mistake. Worldliness of the most intense kind may coexist with even the most scrupulous regard for any technical and conventional standard of outward department.

Nevertheless, and not without propriety, the church has from the beginning sought to make a pious non-conformity simpler and easier by singling out for express disapprobation certain actions, practices, and habits, which, though not by name condemned in the Scriptures, are yet supposed to represent in an eminent sense the spirit and essence of worldliness. Nothing is more interesting to the attentive student than to follow up the process by which during the first three centuries the body of believers gradually worked out a code of prohibitory rules designed to control the conduct of individual Christians in their daily life.

A good example of what we mean is furnished by the following quotation taken from Neander's Church History, Vol. 1, page 262: "Whoever followed a trade or occupation which was contrary to the generally received Christian principles, was not admitted to baptism till he had pledged himself to lay it aside. Among such occupations were reckoned all that stood in any way connected with idolatry, or which were calculated to promote it; those, for instance, of the artists and handicraftsmen who employed themselves making or adorning images of the gods." Equally stringent were the regulations against participating either as combatants or as spectators in the brutal gladiatorial games; against being present at theatres, circuses, and chariot races; against countenancing in any way the licentious dances and other forms of revelry of which the heathen were so fond, and which often constituted a part of their religious ritual.

But as times went on, and the church grew strong, many of the half-hearted disciples who had been attracted into its folds by wrong or imperfect motives, rebelled against this strict discipline, and decried the necessity for it. The arguments that they used in favor of indulgence 1,500 years ago are strangely like some of those that we hear nowadays. Verily there is nothing new under the sun. They said that the idol images were to be looked upon merely as works of art and not at all as objects of devotion; that dancing could not be wrong since even as holy a man as David had danced before the ark; that attending theatres and circuses must be harmless as Paul had drawn from them many figures descriptive of different aspects of the religious life; and that the moral propriety of the chariot races was vindicated by the fact that Elijah was carried to heaven in a chariot of fire. These are only specimen instances. Others could be easily adduced.

Nothing is more elusive and tricky than the spirit of worldliness. The effort to catch and hold it in a given form of words is like trying to dip up water in a sieve. Without breaking the letter of the law it will find some method of virtual disobedience. Or, if estopped of coveted indulgence by carefully framed enactments in one direction, it will seek to compensate itself for this enforced self-denial by excess of riotousness where the bars are down in some other direction. The merely symptomatic method of dealing with it is a form of religious quackery. Diagnosis and remedy, to be effective, must go to the root of the matter. If we wish to cleanse the church entirely from the taint of secularity, we must inculcate the great principles of the Gospel, and teach the universal supremacy of God's law.

The only complete summary of Christian ethics is: "Whether, therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatever ye do, do all to the glory of God." When men recognize this fact the inquiry with them will no longer be how much of carnal satisfaction they may seek without utterly forfeiting their standing as Christians, but how fully they may express in their thoughts, and words and works, their fealty to God. That is to say, non-conformity to the world is to be secured only by such a "transforming" of our minds as shall enable us "to prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God." If "the old man" be "crucified" within us, and "the new man in Christ Jesus" be "raised up" in its place, then we shall find obedience a joy, and service a delight. Those who "are risen with Christ" out of the death of sin into the life of holiness, naturally and easily "set their affection on things above where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God." To them the sacred Scriptures, instead of being a disagreeable and difficult code of mechanical rules, have become a vast depository of spiritual inspirations, under whose stimulating power they move with flaming heart and quickened step to the performance of all duties and the improvement of all opportunities.—Christian Advocate.

A Word to the Undecided.

Dear reader are you one of those who, from time to time, have heard the Gospel of God's grace, and it has sounded to you like a beautiful story that has charmed you by its grace and sweetness, yet you feel you have no part in it? You have heard the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ and you intellectually believe them, and therein you find a refuge from the prevailing doubt and uncertainty which enshrouds so many. You love to dwell in hope and contemplation on these glorious themes and hope somehow at sometime, through the mercy of God, that you may have a place in that on-coming age when earth redeemed from the curse, shall once more be the abode of holiness and happiness under the sway of its rightful sovereign; but you have no certainty, you have no settled peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, you are a stranger to the blessed assurance of sins forgiven, and a good hope towards God. You would fain join yourself to the people of God, but you feel that you dare not.

If this is your case, dear reader, I pray you consider well your position in the light of God's word—God's word is plain and his requirements are easily complied with. It may be, nay, it should be, your privilege to call yourself a Christian, not only in name, but in deed and in truth, by virtue of a living union existing by faith between you and the risen Lord, by which you have the witness of the indwelling spirit that you have been begotten again unto a living hope (bright with immortality) unto an inheritance incorrupt and undefiled. If you would have this blessed experience, the knowledge of sins forgiven, and a certainty of an inheritance among all those who are sanctified, delay no longer; today is yours, seize the present opportunity, make your calling and election sure by at once complying with God's divinely appointed conditions. God has done all He can do for you. In His boundless love He sent His Son to die for you. Christ, the Son of His love, went all the way to the cross for you. He has suffered, died, risen, and ascended on high where, endowed with all power and authority, He has given us simple terms on which salvation and eternal life are offered to you. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him shall have everlasting life." "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation."

The Master said, "If ye love me, keep my commandments;" while James tells us that faith (belief) without works (or obedience) is dead, being alone. Peter, when earnestly asked by those who believed his words at Pentecost, "What shall we do?" replied, "Repent (turn again, right about face) and be baptised (immersed) for the remission of your sins." These, then are God's terms; comply with them, they are for your eternal welfare. Believe God; accept joyfully His gracious invitation and the provisions of His love. Be buried with Christ by baptism into death; rise with Him (by faith in the operation of God) to newness of life looking for and waiting unto the appearing of our great God and Savior Jesus Christ. Do not trust or look to feeling, it is often delusive. Believe God; take Him at His word, and rejoice in the great salvation He has provided. Thus, and thus alone you can obtain forgiveness of sins and peace with God. Then by patient continuance in well-doing seek for glory and incorruption. The Christian life is no bed of roses. Here we have no abiding city; we seek one to come, whose builder and maker is God. While we journey on through life we have our duties and responsibilities to God, to ourselves, and to our fellow-men. God demands heart perfection, and that we should love the Lord our God and our neighbor as ourselves.

It is enjoined on Christians to assemble themselves together to break the bread and partake of the cup in remembrance of the Lord's death, until He comes. Blessed duty! Duty, did I say? Nay, privilege, thus to assemble. How it carries us back to the past when Jesus met with those disciples in that upper room; then see how it carries us forward to the time when we shall yet meet with Him at the great marriage supper of the Lamb. Blessed memory, blessed hope, how calculated to inspire the hope, joy, and faith, of every true Christian.

Dear undecided reader, in closing, let me again urge upon you to neglect and delay no longer; at once accept God's proffered terms, live the Christian life, rejoicing in the Christian hope, then you shall not be ashamed before Him at His coming. G. A. G. in Bible Standard.

The Restitution.

The Restitution advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Then, while I [illegible] note the day,
What [illegible] to [illegible],
For these [illegible], I am praying
To the [illegible] I must go;
But if the early hours go past
Shall I have oil enough to last?

Ah, I have thought this over,
And what folly it would be,
When the blessed bridegroom-lover
Shall come down for you and me,
To have the waiting hours gone past
And not have oil enough to last.

So my oil shall be kept ready,
And, with other oil beside,
I will watch till midnight, steady,
Jesus coming for his bride;
Then I will rise and follow fast,
With light and oil enough to last.

I need watch and wait till he foretold,
Though [illegible] I may not see;
But by many a token, flashing light
That will fainter, fainter grow;
And, as the darkness deepens fast,
Have oil to trim my lamp at last.

Current Events and Sundry Thoughts.

The achievements of modern science and the rapid increase of knowledge, the pride and boast of our time, has induced many superficial thinkers to take a very roseate view of human progress, and the apparent possibilities that give promise of great social moral and physical improvement in the near future. The ideal picture is very fascinating on its face, at first sight, but there is a dark and hideous background, which on closer inspection reveals so much that is actively and energetically unpromising that a few at least of the more thoughtful find it difficult to shut their eyes to unwelcome facts.

Prof. Huxly summing up his views upon the present discontented and discordant condition of things declares "that even the best of modern civilization appears to me to exhibit a condition of mankind which neither embodies any worthy ideal, nor even possesses the merit of stability. I do not hesitate to express the opinion, that if there is no hope of a large improvement of the condition of the greater part of the human family, if it is true that the increase of knowledge, the winning of a greater dominion over nature which is its consequence, and the wealth which follows upon that dominion, are to make no difference in the extent and the intensity of want, with its concomitant moral and physical degradation among the masses of the people, I should hail the advent of some kindly comet which would sweep the whole affair away as a desirable consummation." And again he says "what's it to the human Prometheus that he has stolen the fire of heaven to be his servant, and that the spirits of the earth and air obey him, if the vulture of pauperism is to eternally tear his vitals, and keep him on the brink of destruction?" And yet so mighty is the task of human betterment, and universal well-being that this same thinker, and great naturalist that he is, in looking over the wreck and ruin of human failure declares "if I were offered a free hand by Almighty power I should like Hamlet shudderingly object to the responsibility of attempting to set right a world out of joint." If there is one thing more than another that satisfies the intelligent and earnest believer of the Gospel of the kingdom of God, that the writings of prophets and apostles, are the media of divine thoughts and ideas, it is in comparing their teaching with the utterances of the world's wise men. What an element of uncertainty, doubt and fearful foreboding of general wreck and disaster pervades almost every line of the foregoing quotation from Huxley. Everything with him is suspended upon an if. But how conspicuously absent is this element of uncertainty in the writings of inspired penmen, and not only [illegible] but how clearly is the cause and cure of a disjointed world exposed and defined.

God has ordained a man who will not like "Hamlet shudderingly object to set right a world that is out of joint." He will not only be offered a free hand with Almighty power, (for power alone is not sufficient) but clothed with infinite wisdom, goodness and an inexhaustible store of life. No man fettered with frailties of mortal existence is equal to the work of readjusting the disjointed, disjointed and chaotic condition of human affairs that depresses even the worldly wise with the unwelcome shadows of doubt and uncertainty. Something more than the increase of knowledge is necessary for the betterment of the human species. The world may have knowledge and yet not be wise. What is knowledge? It is acquaintance with what is. What is wisdom? It is the right use of knowledge for the betterment or highest well-being of those attaining it. He who created us knows best what is for man's betterment, and therefore the fear of God is said by one to be the beginning of wisdom, for the simple reason that the fear of God insures the right use of knowledge.

It is in vain that man turns his back upon God unconscious of the fact that the only remedy for the mistaken and perverse step is a return to his maker. So long as the world is out of harmony with God, just so long will it continue in a disjointed condition without the merit of stability, and with the certainty of intensifying all the ills of which it complains. But of what avail is it to reason and argue with the agnostic spirit so triumphantly abroad in the world?

One of the ambassadors of Christ was confronted at Athens by the same spirit that now prevails in the hearts of the self-reliant and sufficient. The world by increased knowledge knows not God. What are we here for? What are the issues of the invisible future? What is the purpose underlying the structure of the present cosmos the earth and its millions of inhabitants? What is to be the end of the discontent, instability, poverty of the many, and wealth for the favored few?

Has the present state an allotted time of duration under the dominion of diabolism and [illegible], or are we sailing up a [illegible] sea assured of nothing but final wreck and universal disaster. Verily no other literature in all the world save the Bible can give us light, where light is most needed and most welcome; yet one of the most popular writers and thinkers of modern times rejoices in what he terms the decline of Bibleolatry. He says "the phraseology of supernaturalism may remain on the lips of men, but their practice will be natural." What aversion for the supernatural? How distasteful the idea of God interfering in human affairs? But how I ask could the phraseology of supernaturalism still remain on the lips of men, if it had not in the first instance found a lodgment in their understanding, and more especially since their practice contradicts their phraseology? It only proves that by the law of hereditary truth, as well as falsehood, may become our heritage in spite of our dislike and opposition. The voice of God has never been audibly heard by the men of this generation, but nevertheless that voice echoes through our mental chambers as an effect, however stoutly we may deny the cause. There were those who heard the voice, and the result has been to change the history of the world. It is to be regretted that while the words of God remain on the lips of men, they no longer linger in their understanding and affection. The phraseology of supernaturalism had never seen born, save as the offspring of him whose voice was miraculous and whose words were expressive of ideas that otherwise could never have been known. "The wisdom of God came not in old time by the will of man, but holy men spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit." In olden times God spake unto the world by the prophets, but in these last days, "He has spoken unto us by his Son." This is why the phraseology of supernaturalism still remains on the lips of men, while their hearts are far from him, and their practice natural that is, animal in accordance with the innate instincts of their animal nature.

Jehovah does not now interfere with man supernaturally, but circumstantially he does, controlling and guiding all things in accordance with his Eternal purpose. Chaldea's proud king after chastizement acknowledged that "the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men." The time is coming when all nations shall remember and turn unto the Lord. They will not do it however voluntarily of their own volition, until they have felt the chastening rod of divine indignation and authority. Mankind can only become truly wise, by sad experience. "When the judgments of God are abroad in the earth then will the people learn righteousness" and not before. Jehovah hath appointed a day when this work will be done and he hath ordained a man, who will by no means recognize the peoples' assumed right to govern themselves independent of their Creator, and regardless of his requirements. His judgments will be right, unbiased by the blinding illusion that the people are justified in defending their homes, and their country against him who rightfully demands their submission and obedience. No man whose thoughts, and feelings are on a level with the dead flat of naturalism, would be equal to the task of executing God's judgments upon the obstinate and rebellious. But God has ordained one, whom he tested in the furnace of affliction, making him a polished shaft, for the express purpose of assuming without a shudder or faltering step the responsibility of destroying the diabolism of confusion and disorder, now holding high carnival in the earth.

"How long to the end of these wonders," is the question on the lips of all, who are heartily in earnest, and patiently waiting the return of him in whose presence is fulness of joy. I cannot well close this article, without suggesting anew the consideration of an old question "What think ye of Christ" the man whom God hath appointed to perform a work, that even makes the wise of the world shudder to think of. What is your impression-conception of Christ? Is it one founded upon the modern biographies that men have written of his life and work? If so how feeble and inoperative that conception must be? What think ye? How necessary that men and women think; and then as by reason of use strength is acquired think more. But do not let your minds always dwell upon the local scenes of our Lord's trials and temptations. Open the prophets and read of him, turn to the Psalms, and they will bring you into rapport with the inner workings of his mind and his emotional feelings both in the days of his humiliation, and the days of glory that are to follow.

We shall all be fortunate if we succeed in obeying the apostolic injunction "arm yourselves with the mind of Christ." The time is not far distant, when the question "What think you of Christ" will be reversed, so as to read "what does Christ think of you?" It would be agreeable, yea delightful, to know that he thinks well of us not only now but when he comes. Our service must please him if he thinks well of us. We cannot afford to be indifferent in this matter, for the righteous even are scarcely saved. The truth as it is in Jesus is not merely an intellectual toy to play with, if this is all better we never had heard it. It requires of us active and earnest work in the circle of our individual surroundings and opportunities. We are to stand aloof from everything that opposes or hinders us in making our calling and election sure. He who is patiently enduring in hope, frets not his soul because of evil in the world, and he has no cause to be despondent at the sight of human failure to better the world's condition, nor need he in case of continued failure be dismayed, and like the great naturalist already quoted from "hail the advent of some kindly comet" to engulph the world in disaster. Comets were always the terror of the pagan world, and to this day they have not lost the power of frightening men with the possible wreck of the material universe. The world's feverish dream will soon be over, its distressing nightmare of uncertainty, the servant of Christ can endure, knowing that the day of release will surely come. How long to the end?

Geo. Moyer.

Peter's First Epistle. Chapter 1.

1. Peter an apostle of Jesous Christ, unto elect ones away from home, of a dispersion in Pontus, Galatia, Kappadokia, Asia, and Bithunia.

2. According to God the Father's foreknowledge; may grace be yours and peace have been multiplied unto you in sanctification of Spirit unto an obedience and sprinkling of Jesous Christ's blood.

3. The God and Father of our Lord Jesous Christ be praised who according to his great mercy hath rebegotten us unto a living hope through Jesous Christ's resurrection from among the dead.

4. Unto an incorruptible and unpolluted and unfading inheritance watched to be kept in heaven for you.

5. Who are being guarded in God's ability through faith unto a salvation made ready to be revealed in a last period.

6. In which gladden yourselves though it may be expedient for you just now for a little while to have sorrowed in manifold trials.

7. That the test of your faith more precious than gold that perisheth through fire that testeth its value, may have been found unto praise and honor and glory in a revelation of Jesous Christ;

8. Whom ye love though ye have not seen him, in whom ye put faith though just now ye do not see him and are glad with joy unspeakable and full of glory,

9. Realizing the end of the faith to be a salvation of souls;

10. Concerning which salvation the prophets who prophesied about the grace for us, sought and diligently enquired.

11. Searching to know what or what sort of a period the Spirit of Christ in them was indicating in testifying beforehand of the sufferings for Christ and the glorious things after them;

12. In whom it was revealed that not for themselves, but for you were they ministering these things, which now have been announced unto you through those who evangelized you with sanctified Spirit sent from heaven; into which things angels longed to stoop to look.

13. Therefore gird up the loins of your thoughts and live soberly and hopefully for the grace that is being brought unto you in a revelation of Jesous Christ;

14. As offspring of obedience, who are not yielding in conformity to the inordinate desires formerly yours in your ignorance.

15. But rather become according to the saint who hath called you yourselves also saints in all your conduct:

16. To this end hath it been written, Become saints, because I am a saint

17. And if ye invoke the Father who judgeth impartially (without face-taking) according to each one's work, conduct yourselves in fear, during the time of your sojourn, (absence from home.)

18. Knowing that ye have not been redeemed with corruptible things, with silver or with gold, from the useless conduct of life handed down to you from your fathers,

19. But with Christ's blood, with the blood as it were of a lamb without blemish and spotless;

20. Foreknown before the founding of a cosmos, but made manifest on a last of the times for your sakes,

21. Who through him are justified to God who awakened him from among the dead, and gave him glory, so that your faith and hope might be in God.

22. Having purified yourselves in your obedience to the truth unto an unfeigned friendship for the brethren, may ye have loved one another assiduously from out a pure heart;

23. Having been begotten not from a corruptible seed but an incorruptible, through God's living and abiding word.

24. For all flesh is grass as it were; and all its glory the grass, flower as it were. The grass hath withered away and its flower hath fallen off.

25. But the oracular Word of God abideth forever. And this Gospel that hath been announced unto you is the oracular word.

COMMENT.

Peter, our English of Petros, meaning a stone not a rock; but what we mean in common parlance by a stone that one can throw with the hand, a small piece of a rock or a pebble. The same in Syrophenician the vulgar dialect of that day among the common people was Psephos, which word was also Greekized and became an adopted Greek word interchangeable with petros.

The Greek word for a large mass of stone or rock imbedded in the earth was petra.

The importance of understanding the difference between these two words is not to be overlooked, for the Catholic Church by confounding the meaning of these two words has boldly asserted the absurd claim that the Church of Christ was founded upon the man Peter, quoting Christ's language to Peter "On this rock will I found my Church," ignoring any difference between the two words petros, and petra, and the ridiculous absurdity of founding a building upon a "pebble," and while Protestantism has been all this time protesting against the church being founded upon the man Peter, no one as a commentator has gone to the foundation of Christ's statement to show the general reader what Christ did say till I published it in the columns of THE RESTITUTION some years ago.

"The Rock" that Christ refers to in his oracular statement is the same rock that the old prophet Ambakoum (Habbakkuk) says he as a watchman in Israel 2nd chapter went up to take his stand or to take a look in the way of vision into the future, namely, the hypostasis of God or faith. "Now faith is a hypostasis" &c. 1st verse of the 11th chapter of Hebrews.

Peter had a wonderful experience "in faith" or "in hypostasis," and we must expect to find some wonderful statements in the oracular word put into his mouth. We cannot be too careful then in finding out just what he did say in his Epistles.

"Gird up the loins of your thoughts" instead of "your mind" C. V. & R. V. for instance.

"Inordinate-desires" instead of "lusts" C. V. & R. V. Lust is too specific a term in English to cover the use of this Greek word in the Scriptures. In Adam all our desires of every name and nature were originally ordinate and proper; but all alike became inordinate with the entering in of sin into our human nature, requiring an absolute regeneration of the man in order to make them ordinate again.

"Saint" and "Saints" instead of "holy" etc. "who" instead of "which" as the antecedent here is a person not a thing.

"Invoke" instead of "call on" R. V. I see no evidence that the oracular word was written as poetry in any such sense as we use the word now, although much of it is in the highest degree poetical in its thought and the figures of speech used, there is no evidence that it was measured or subjected to any of the laws of metrical composition, and I think the revisers have made a great mistake in trying to make poetry of portions of the prophetic word. Ancient Hebrew poetry was never metrical in such a sense as we use meter now, and it is an anachronism to infer or assume it at this late day.

Chas. Gardner.

What is the Gospel?

This is a question that seems to trouble some of our brethren. But why should it, I ask. Paul says it is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth. . . . for therein is the righteousness of God revealed, from faith to faith: as it is written, the just shall live by faith, and again Paul says, Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the Gospel, for the preaching of the cross is to them that perish, foolishness, but unto us that are saved it is the power of God.

We see here that preaching the cross, or the atonement, is preaching the Gospel.

But is this all the Gospel? No, by no means. Still I have heard it preached from the pulpit that it is all that is necessary for salvation, but we should preach Christ, and the things concerning Christ, if we would preach the Gospel.

Webster defines Gospel to be this. (and he is good authority) Glad Tidings concerning Christ, and salvation through Him. This seems about correct.

This is the way some would render it that I have heard talk. "Gospel is Glad Tidings concerning Christ and salvation through Him and destruction through the work of the Evil One." That is the way it sounds when they say that to preach the whole Gospel, they must preach the destruction of the wicked.

Why should there be a misunderstanding as to what the Gospel is. In every place that I know of where it is spoken of, either in the Bible or any other book, it is spoken of as something good, but the Bible should be our authority.

In Galatians we read "and the Scriptures foreseeing that God would justify the heathen (Gentiles) through faith, preached before the Gospel to Abraham, saying in thee and in thy seed shall all the nations be blessed."

Does this mean every individual man in those nations?

No, for in the next verse we read, "So then, they which be of faith are blessed with the faithful Abraham." Now certainly this must have been good news to Abraham who lived so long before the Gentiles had any hope, and were without God in the world, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenant of promise.

There is the Gospel of the Kingdom, Matt. iv. 23. There is the Gospel of Jesus Christ, spoken of in Mark i. 1. In the 14th verse it says, "now after John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom of God, saying, repent ye and believe the Gospel." What was the Gospel? It was the Gospel of the Kingdom of God, or the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

In the 16th chapter and 16th verse, Christ says to his apostles, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." What is to be preached? The Gospel. What is the result to those that believe and obey it? They are to be saved.

This is the result of obeying the Gospel. What is the outcome to those that do not believe? They shall be damned or condemned. Is this a part of the Gospel, or the result of not obeying the Gospel? I should certainly say the latter.

In Romans x. 15 we read, "How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the Gospel of Peace, and bring glad tidings of good things."

In Paul's first missionary sermon as I shall call it, he said, "Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached the forgiveness of sins, and by him all that believe are justified from all things from which you could not be justified by the law of Moses." This that is preached then is Glad Tidings.

We shall be justified, that is stand before our Savior, as though we had not sinned. But the 40th verse of the 13th of Acts, where you will find that sermon, as, "Beware therefore, lest that come upon you which is spoken of in the prophets. Behold ye despisers, and wonder, and perish, for I work a work in your days, a work in which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you."

Now the law could set no one free from the penalty that is promised to those that sin, but justification is complete through Christ.

They that hear the Gospel should beware, lest by rejecting it they shall receive the punishment threatened, but this punishment threatened is not the Gospel. It is the result of not obeying the Gospel that has been preached.

This woe or punishment threatened should be preached as well as the Gospel, but it never should be called the Gospel, which is Glad Tidings.

We should study to rightly divide the Word of Truth, and above all war not with the brethren, lest some fall out by the way.

Your Sister in hope.

Mrs. Almira Brooks.

How dreadful such an awakening and death! One moment peacefully sleeping in supposed safety, secure from danger, in one's own house and bedchamber—the next moment awaking in horrible confusion, deafening tumult, crushed by unknown disaster, cruelly suffering, helpless, dying—without one moment's warning. What an illustration of the divinely predicted destruction ere long to overtake the heedless, pleasure-loving world! Millions of those now living, entirely confident of safety, are exposed to this sudden, overwhelming and irretrievable destruction. Dear reader, will you heed the warning? The only hope of safety lies in immediate submission to Christ, and obedience to his commands. Then from out the awful ruin of that dread hour, angels will bear you with all the faithful to the prepared place of refuge. Matt. xxiv. 31. Oh, ye worldly, careless throng! Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAR. 1, 1893.

BRO. F. M. Clifton is moving from Nebraska to BoneSteel, South Dakota.

ANY one wishing the address of any correspondent for this paper can get it by sending a card to this office.

A LETTER from Bro. W. H. Wilson of Chicago, states that he immersed two persons last week, and that Bro. H. V. Reed is lecturing to large audiences every Sunday evening.

SOME of your friends want a "question corner." Any question you want to ask that is within our limits, may be sent, and will be published, and answered if it can be done.

WE presume our friends who send orders for Bro. Joblin's tract on "The Thief on the Cross," understand that the work is not yet printed. Send in your orders, and they will have careful attention soon as the work is ready.

WE have received word of the death Jan. 29, 1893 of our aged brother M. I. Lewis, whose name is familiar to all readers of our paper. The last article he sent us was received here the week previous to his death, and was printed in our issue of Feb. 1. We hope to have a more extended notice than this for a future paper, as Bro. Lewis was an old and valued friend of THE RESTITUTION.

"IF children, then heirs," says the Spirit. If not children then what? Then not heirs of the kingdom which God has promised. •

HUMAN map makers for Europe are puzzled over the coolness springing up between Russia and Germany, and the internal condition of France. •

THE divorce mills are grinding fast. In New York last year fourteen hundred men secured divorces from their wives on the ground of drunkenness, and during the same year over twelve thousand wives secured divorces for the same cause. And yet the world is said to be growing better. •

"IT is now rumored that Profs. Briggs and Smith, may at no distant day secede from the Old School of Presbyterianism and form a new one. These heresy leaders are said to have been assured of support by the largest congregations of New York, Chicago, Cleveland and Cincinnati. •

AN item of good news for those of limited means, is, that the "Reading Combine" which compelled them to pay a dollar and a half per ton, over the usual price, has gone down with a crash, creating the intensest excitement in the stock exchange. It seems that McLeod of the Reading trespassed on the Vanderbilt territory and met his Waterloo! •

SUGGESTIONS for legislation on the school question by arch-bishop Ireland are being scattered broadcast through the land. He suggests that the city and state might affiliate parochial schools to the public schools, the secular education being under the state or city superintendent. The parochial school buildings might be rented at a nominal price to the state: the teachers could be Catholic, holding their certificates from the public commissioners. Yes, yes; Catholic teachers, supported by all denominations;—quite a stride, that. •

SOME twenty-six hundred years have passed since God remonstrated with men by Isaiah (lv. 2) for spending their money for that which is not bread, and their earnings for that which did not satisfy, and pleaded with them to give him audience, while he enjoins them to eat only that which is good; but his pleadings are still unheeded; they lavish their means upon things that please their fancy, but are never satisfied; and instead of delighting in fatness, say, "My leanness, my leanness." Astounding that God's offer to make an everlasting covenant with them, "even the sure mercies of David," should not influence them. Surely they must be strangers to those sure mercies. •

OUR OWN improvement answers a double purpose; it has a beneficial effect upon others. •

IF the right of governing was inherent in God alone, is not human government really an usurpation of God's rights? •

IF man slights the offer of God's kingdom, and alters the law of pardon to suit himself, does he not leave God out of his reckoning and undertake to save himself? •

SOME one has said that "love flows downward." This would appear to be so. The love of parents for their children is usually more powerful than that of children for their parents, or else there would be less disobedience. Witness, too, the love of God for us, and our want of love to him. •

IT is worse than a waste of time and strength to argue about baptism with one who is ignorant of his own origin, and the grand outlines of truth. It gives them the idea that you consider them fit subjects for baptism if they would but yield to that ordinance. A great mistake. The first fruit meet for repentance toward God, is faith in the Gospel of his Son. •

THAT downward, morally, is the constant tendency of the human mind, was suggested by a quotation from the works of Calvin. Much of the error he taught is most tenaciously held by the great Presbyterianism Body, while many will not tolerate what he wrote concerning the coming of the Lord. Dr. A. J. Gordon's Ecce Venit credits the following words to Calvin: "In plucking up the faith of Christ's coming Satan aims directly at the throat of the Church. For what end did Christ die and rise again, but that along with himself he might some day redeem us from death, and gather us into eternal life." •

THE preparation was the day before the Sabbath. The work of preparation goes steadily on. The Sabbath will dawn before long: everything shows that the powers of earth are determined to be ready to perform their part in the conflict that brings Gentile times to a close. A despatch dated London, Feb. 10, says the government has definitely adopted a quick fire, six inch gun, weighing seven tons, and which sends an elongated shot of 100 pound weight, a distance of four miles, so rapidly that there are four shots in the air at once. Forty of these guns are about ready for British war ships. What is the Peace Congress doing in view of these things? •

"BUT my God shall supply all your need, according to his riches in glory, by Christ Jesus." Phil. iv. 19. What a sermon. The apostle has been telling the brethren not to be too anxious about anything, —to take God into their confidence, make known their requests to him, and not to forget to mix thanksgivings for the past with petitions for the future, and then the God of peace which passeth all understanding, shall keep their hearts and minds through Jesus Christ. Happy frame of mind this: when nothing disturbs—nothing distracts—perfect confidence in God obtains, come what will. Be it observed, God promises to supply all our need, not all we think we need or want. •

"HUMBLE yourselves, therefore," says the Apostle Peter, v. chapter and 6th verse. The "therefore," directs us to the fact stated in the previous verse, that "God resisteth the proud and giveth favor to the humble." Reason enough, motive enough for humility. If God resists the proud, what madness to resist him by pride! What madness to resist him in any way, especially after he has declared himself as opposed to anything? Seven hundred years before Peter God had declared himself on this subject by saying that he scorneth the scorners, but giveth grace unto the lowly." Prov. iii. 34. This proves that pride is the cause of scorn. And again, "A man's pride shall bring him low; but honor shall uphold the humble in spirit;" in beautiful harmony with the Word by Peter, "Humble yourselves, therefore, under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time," or season. Never fear, the exaltation will be on time; it will not be over due. Only disappointment and vexation and loss can come of exalting one's-self before the time. •

Steadfastness.

It denotes a healthy state of the Body when the members of it relish face to face talks respecting the requirements of the gospel. Presuming on this healthy condition, let us see what our Father offers to do for those who are steadfast. We will go back to Isaiah's prophecy. At the third verse of the 26th chapter it says, "Then," addressing Jehovah, "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is staid on thee, because he trusteth in thee;" the promise applies to no others. Steadfast trusters are kept in perfect peace: and it is safe to say that the degree of peace is guaged by the degree of trust. In all the walks of life steadfastness is considered a sterling quality, and unsteadiness is regarded as a serious drawback. No one knows where to find a man of a changeful disposition and of a flighty, fanciful turn of mind. Men of very moderate ability, with steadfastness, distance the most gifted if they yet lack this valuable characteristic. Men of that stamp, trust nothing till they have good reason to do so; but having found the rock foundation they build upon it. On the other hand double-minded men are unstable in all their ways, religious, or secular. Many of that make up hear the gospel and accept it for the novelty of the thing, without counting the cost, and the first shock of persecution astonishes and staggers them. Presently some other novelty attracts them; and thus they amount to nothing anywhere; they may witness for God today, but they may witness against him tomorrow.

Workers together with God must be of sterner metal than that. Listen to the apostle in view of victory over death through our Lord Jesus Christ. "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, not merely working, but abounding in the work of the Lord." The victory over death warrants our utmost endeavors; "forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord," no matter how abundant it may be.

In I Thess. v. 21, we are told to "prove all things," take nothing for granted, and having put all to the test of the immutable word, "hold fast that which is good;" that which is proved to be good. In 2 Tim. i. 13, we have another hold fast: "Hold fast the form of sound words which thou hast heard of me in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus." This can only be addressed to those who have taken hold of the sound words. And if we want to see the folly of fickleness or carelessness about the soundness of the words, we may have what we want by turning to Heb. iii. 6. "But Christ, as a Son over his own house, whose house are we IF we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end;" so that everything depends upon holding fast to the confidence. Whence came their confidence and hope? Why, the sound words were the words of life, the gospel of their salvation or life; and as soon as they believed and obeyed they would have confidence and rejoice in hope. If they let the words slip the hope and confidence must slip; so that they can only hold fast to the confidence and hope by holding fast to the words they grew out of. The 14th verse says, "For we are made partakers of Christ, IF we hold the beginning of our confidence, steadfast unto the end." And Heb. x. 21 says, "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering, for he is faithful that promised;" in keeping with Rom. ii. 7 where only patient continuance in well doing is shown to secure eternal life. In 1 Pet. v. 6, we are told to humble ourselves before the mighty hand of God that he may exalt us in due time, casting all our care upon him, for he careth for us. Would to God we could always do this—cast all our care upon him—we could if our confidence were where it should be. What a gracious invitation this is! When we fail to cast some care upon him, is it not pretty good evidence that we have cares that we ought not to have? Does it not imply that we are ashamed to cast them upon him? Or, that we know that we ought to throw them clean away, instead of throwing them upon any one? But the apostle goes on to enjoin soberness, vigilance, and steadfastness in the faith notwithstanding the afflictions it would involve, inasmuch as that the God of all grace purposes to make us perfect after we have suffered awhile.

It will be well for us who have espoused the unpopular cause of Truth to consider trials a part of our patrimony; they are sure to come; and it is well. How could we overcome them if they did not come? It is he who overcomes, not he who dodges the trials, that sits down with Jesus. If we please God by implicit confidence he will keep us in perfect peace. If we do not trust God, will he entrust to us his choicest blessings? We must remember that we have to live lives of faith in what God has promised; and it is only by fixing the eye of faith on the prize offered in the promises, that spiritual life can be maintained in these days of apostasy. If we only look round about ourselves the flame will flicker and die. The mark of the prize is what we must look at. Faith will starve to death on the husks dealt out by traditionists.

Hold fast the form of sound words, brethren and sisters; they are not cold abstractions—they are spirit and life. The difficulty of living a life of faith grows greater every day; ample provision has been made for this emergency, but we must employ it. We can be kept by the power of God. 1 Pet. i. 5, through faith; through faith. Faith in the power of God. What is the power of God? The answer is given by Paul in Rom. i. 16; "the gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Here the gospel is proven to be the power, and faith the means just as Peter puts it. This excludes the idea of a blind confidence that we shall be mysteriously kept, and places the responsibility upon ourselves. We must use the means.

The philosophy of this plan is this, as we understand it. The gospel reveals Jehovah's loving purpose, discloses the riches of his grace; and exhibits his wonderful offer of life and glory, attainable through the gift of his only begotten Son. This begets in us love and obedience when believed; and, like Christ, we for the joy set before us endure all the crosses presented to us, and despise all the shame attaching to them now, and live for the bright to-morrow; love being the motive power of the gospel all the way through.

Let us be sure not to overlook the double fastener by which we must hold fast the form of sound words, viz: "faith and love which is in Christ Jesus." Love without faith will not do. We would have no sound words without faith in them; and in the nature of things we could not love what we dis-believed. Faith without love would not keep us, because we would not then endure the discipline.

Finally, as an incentive to steadfastness, let us contemplate him who was the faithful and true witness—he was faithful unto death. •

Do You Bear the Name of Jesus?

If not, in what are you trusting for salvation? Remember the affirmation of the word of the Lord: "Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." Luke says: "Repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name." Our Lord bears the all-powerful name, and apart from that sacred name there can be neither salvation or the remission of sins. Paul was sent to bear that glorious, powerful, and saving name before the Gentiles, and in order that they might receive the benefits connected with the all-powerful and glorious name of the Lord he directs that they should be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus." In Acts x. 48, we read: "And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord." There is no way in which a believer can become a bearer of the sacred name, except it is called upon him in the sacred ordinance of baptism. It is by virtue of being a name-bearer that he is entitled to all the glorious privileges that are proclaimed in the name of Jesus. The right to Sonship is received in that holy name. See John i. 12: "But as many as received him, (in his own way) to them gave he power, (margin—right or privilege) to become the Sons of God, even to them that believe on his name."

Those who trust in their morality, apart from becoming a name-bearer will find themselves sadly disappointed. There is salvation in no other name. Paul, before his conversion received authority to place in bonds all who called on the name of Jesus, "But the Lord said unto him, Go thy way: for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel: For I will shew him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake." And oh, how he did suffer on account of the proclamation of that holy name.

Dear reader, do we bear that precious name? then let us honor it by a godly life. It is a very serious matter to become a name-bearer and then dishonor it.

Yours trusting in that precious name,

W. H. WILSON.

An Exhortation.

"Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints." Jude 3. The M. E. brethren have recently been holding a meeting in this vicinity. My mind was brought to bear upon the above Scripture from the fact that they were continually preaching their sky kingdom, as well as other doctrines—contrary to Scripture.

We invited one of the ministers to our home, if perchance we might drop a word of truth that would do him good. I accosted him concerning the doctrine which he was preaching. Said he, "I do not care to argue it." I then quoted Jude 3, to him, and told him I considered it my duty to heed that exhortation. We then turned to Acts xxvi. 6, "And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers," said I, "What is the 'hope of the promise,' brother? Let's turn to Gen. xiii. 15. God speaking to Abraham said, "For all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever." Now Brother T., why do you talk so much of going to heaven?" "To thee and to thy seed," who is the "seed" brother? Let Gal. iii. 16, tell us, "He saith not, And to seeds, as of many, but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ." Now Abraham and his seed have not yet come in possession of the land; for "These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth." Heb. xi. 13, 39-40. See also Acts vii. 5.

We believe that we must get into Christ in order to become the "seed of Abraham." "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ, And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Gal. iii. 27, 29. "Now then Bro. T., if we are Christ's, then are we Abraham's seed, and heirs to David's throne. Ez. in his twenty-first chapter, seventh verse says that David's throne should be overthrown three times, which according to history has been done. But "Simon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name. And to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is written, After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down: and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up." Acts xv. 14, 15, 16. Also Amos ix. 11, "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulders; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever." Isa. ix. 6, 7. Also Luke i. 32, "And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel," Matt. xix. 28. We also referred the brother to Rev. xx. and xxi. 1-7, Isa. lxv. 19-23, and many others, among which was this, "But though we, as an angel from heaven, preach any other Gospel unto you, than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." Gal. i. 8. Brother, are you preaching this Gospel, or some other? Paul says let any man be accursed that preaches any other. Let me admonish you to preach this Gospel. May the Lord bless you and help you to see the Truth. We submit the above, simply that those of "like precious faith may know that we, isolated as we are in Western Washington, are determined by the grace of God to let our light shine. Oh, brethren and sisters in Christ, let us be faithful, would to God that some brother who is abundantly able to defend the Truth were here. But we shall try to be content in the Lord.

A Question of Translation.

Tolstoi in his book, "My Religion" translates Matt. v. 32, thus, "Whoever puts away his wife besides the fault of libertinism, obliges her to be an adulteress." Count Tolstoi who is as familiar with the Greek language as with his mother tongue, claims that this is an exact rendering of the original Greek, and that all renderings which make adultery the exception are unauthorized. In the light of Tolstoi's translation there is no Scriptural ground for divorce in this dispensation. He asserts that porneia is entirely a different word from moicasthai; that the former has a very precise meaning and can never signify the act of adultery, and can never be properly translated by "adultery" or "fornication." He also asserts that all translations except his are ungrammatical and absurd. I can not here give his full argument affirmatively and negatively in proof that he is right in rejecting all translations which make adultery the exception. I now put this question to Professor Charles Gardner of Chicago. Is it possible that Tolstoi is absolutely correct in the translation he has given? If not why not? I have your translation of the passage, which translation agrees in meaning with all others, except Tolstoi's, as far as I know. If he is right we have been far from understanding God's will on this important practical point. If there is no ground for divorce we want to know it, though late the knowledge may come to us. Submitted for the sake of the truth.

Please answer through THE RESTITUTION and oblige one reader and perhaps more.

Prophetic Babylon.

The student of prophecy cannot fail to note with deep interest the announcements of the press respecting the sudden movement of the Turkish Government in railroad building. This movement gives a clue to the solution of one of the most puzzling problems of unfilled prophecy. The description we have in prophecy of the destruction of Babylon (Jer. l.) does not correspond with the historical fact. It has therefore long been the opinion of students of prophecy that the destruction foretold would be of another city, to be called Babylon, which would probably be built on the same site as ancient Babylon. But why and how should such a city be built in such a place at this time, and suddenly destroyed? It now appears that the network of railroads, projected and partly constructed, will have as the chief terminus the identical spot on the Persian Gulf where ancient Babylon stood. Here, then, unexpectedly is the reason for the creation of a great city at that point.

The articles on the roadways, published in the daily Journals, say: "The railway policy of the Ottoman Government has resulted, so far, in the construction of three trunk lines, through the northern and central portions of the Sultan's Asiatic dominions. These lines embrace a railway from Haidur-Pasha, a suburb of Constantinople, running right through the heart of Asia Minor and thence down the Tigris Valley, Bagdad, and to the Persian Gulf, the object being to link the latter gulf with the waters of the Golden Horn. The second, a line from Samsoun on the Black Sea southward to Ayas on the Mediterranean, and to link together the Black and the Mediterranean Seas; the third to connect the Mediterranean Sea through Damascus and the Euphrates Valley with the Persian Gulf."

Now there are over 8,000 people in the town of Hillah which stands on the site of Babylon, so that a future Babylon must appear and be destroyed suddenly by Divine wrath to fulfil the words of Scripture. Prophecy also speaks of Babylon as the glory of the Chaldees' excellency, showing the site to be the Euphratean Babylon, and not London, Paris, or Rome, as some would endeavor to prove, and the time of its downfall, to synchronize with the restoration of Israel and Judah is a thing of the future, ergo, the destruction of Babylon, the glory of the Chaldees' excellency, is also a thing of the future.

In the prophecy of Zechariah we have a summary of the events concerning Jerusalem and the restoration of Israel, the doings of the foolish shepherd, the Antichrist; the coming of the Christ, the Deliverer; and also in chapter v. details concerning the great commercial system of the Ephah, of which the prophet says, "This is wickedness," or lawlessness, as the Hebrew word, if properly translated, should be rendered, and lawlessness in connection with the lawless one as king of Babylon, thus he is termed in Isiah xiv. 4.

As the great railway projects are to have, according to the plans, one of their termini at the ancient site of Babylon, it is important to find out whether any indications are given us in Scripture of the character of the city that will spring up there. Turn to Zech. v. 6-11 and there is a vivid description in the strange symbol of the Ephah in which sits wickedness incarnate. "And behold there was lifted up a talent of lead: and this is a woman that sitteth in the midst of the Ephah. Then lifted I up mine eyes and looked, and behold there came out two women, and the wind was in their wings, for they had wings like the wings of a stork, and they lifted up the Ephah between the earth and the heaven. Then said I to the angel that talked with me, Whither do these bear the Ephah? And he said unto me, to build it a house in the land of Shinar, and it shall be established and set there upon her own base." An Ephah is a Jewish measure. The woman who sat therein is the personification of wickedness. This is wickedness, it is said of her, and she embodies the evil of the whole earth. This figure is carried to the land of Shinar, the very site of Babylon (Gen. x. 10; vi. 2), there she has an habitation built for her upon a spot described as "her own base." The city then is to be reconstructed upon foundations that are her own, that have already belonged to her. —W. Greene, C. E. in Christian Herald.

No. 1.

The reliability of prophecy is assured in the declaration that the prophecy "came not at any time by the will of man, for holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit." We are also assured that the interpretation of prophecy is not an arbitrary matter, subject to the evil or caprice of man, for "no prophecy is of any private interpretation." Should there be any doubt as to the correct application of prophecy, the doubt may be removed by subjecting the alleged fulfilment to the Scriptural test that has been furnished by the Author of the prophecies. It is the key that God has furnished for the use of all who read prophecy. Let it be rigidly applied to all alleged fulfilled prophecy and God will take care of the consequences. Let the facts of history fit into the facts of prophecy, and when this is done the adjustment will be so readily made that there will be no need of human "saw or hammer" to force prophecy and alleged fulfilment into the harmonious relation that they sustain when tested by the divine rule. Now with due deference to the learned expositors of prophecy we ask, has the divine rule been observed in the exposition of the fourth section of the metalic image as seen in the dream and interpreted by Daniel? In other words does Rome fill the measure of the prophecy concerning the fourth kingdom as seen in the vision and described by Daniel and John? That Rome does not or rather has not fulfilled the prophecy concerning the fourth member or section of the image, we shall show by proving that the things prophesied did not follow nor come to pass in the history of of Rome. 1st Neither Rome nor any other government that has ever existed upon the earth fills the description of the fourth kingdom as given by Daniel vii. 23. "The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth, which shall be diverse (different) from all kingdoms and shall devour the whole earth and shall tread it down and break it in pieces."

A kingdom that is diverse from all kingdoms must possess some element or elements that distinguish it from all others. Did Rome possess a single trait that other kingdoms before and since have not possessed? Farther did Rome do what Daniel says the fourth beast would do? Did Rome "tread down the whole earth and break it in pieces? That she made extensive conquests is admitted, but instead of recklessly destroying them did she not as other nations do, utilize them for her own aggrandizement?

But the fourth kingdom is to possess an element that will in a most remarkable manner distinguish it from all other kingdoms, and that is a superhuman element that will "mingle" themselves with the "Seed of men", the human element.

Inspiration has chosen a very expressive word to describe this strange union of the human with the satanic, the word primarily means "among," indicating that kind of a union that has no coalecing properties, as in the late war the colored troops were "among" the soldiers.

These two elements are described by Daniel as follows: "And whereas thou sawest iron (the Satanic) mixed with miry clay (the human) they (the two elements) shall "mingle" (be among) themselves with the seed of men; but they shall not cleave one to another (coalesce) even as iron is not mixed with clay. "The forces thus organized will perform deeds of valor that will call forth the inquiry "Who is like the beast? Who is able to make war with him?"

In accounts of sanguinary conflicts the reports have said the "troops fought not like men, but like devils incarnate."

Both Daniel and John speak of one who will be mighty, but not in his own strength or power, hence in the power of another, and this a Satanic power. What a fearful picture of debased humanity led by the arch-enemy who will control and direct the movements of this motley army composed of the now rapidly growing elements of anarchy, nihilism, Spiritualism, and all the discontented elements that this age of skepticism has produced. The reckless destruction that will mark the bloody path of this heterogeneous mass of humanity may be imagined by calling to mind the fearful creed that the nihilists adopted, which involves the literal "breaking up" of all the existing state of things. All ties that now bind the social compact must be broken up, Christianity must be destroyed, the idea of God-abandoned. In short a complete breaking up of the present order. With such an element the fourth beast with Satanic power will indeed "tread down the earth and break it in pieces."

The fourth beast in all its power and destructive tendency was to remain intact until the fatal blow is struck by the Stone cut out of the mountain without hands.

Where now is Rome? Alas for the claim that she fills the measure of the prophecy concerning the fourth kingdom.

The "Decline and Fall of Rome" tells with most fearful distinctness that the "thing spoken did not follow or come to pass" with Rome as a factor in the allelged fulfilment.

Her power is gone, her sceptre broken, her vast domain dismembered; upon her very ruins other powers exist. But it has been claimed that it was to be in the dismembered state of Rome, symbolized by the ten toes of the image that the Stone was to strike the image and break it in pieces. And here has been displayed an ingenuity worthy not of a better cause but certainly of a better claim.

Expositors have looked over the dismembered state of the Roman Empire, and not ten, but fourteen powers that occupy the original territory have been found. Not all by one expositor, but different expositors have presented us with fourteen powers that they claim as the ten kingdoms represented by the toes of the image. Here is the list as furnished by expositors.

1. Ostrogoths; 2. Visigoths; 3. Sueves; 4. Alans; 5. Vandals; 6. Franks; 7. Burgundians; 8. Heruli and Turingi; 9. Saxons, 10. Britons; 11. Huns; 12. Lombards; 13. Allemans; 14. Greeks. And even all these, four at least too many, have been found not in all the area of what was once Rome, the vast regions of Asia Minor, Syria, Egypt, Mesopotamia, Media and Armenia once owned the sway of Rome, why not take them in in the enumeration? Ah! the reason is plain, too many have already been found.

At this time if all the petty States of Germany were counted, and they certainly ought to be, it would give in addition to the fourteen already enumerated thirty-three distinct powers all located in the territory once occupied by Rome.

Existing co-temporaneously with the fourth kingdom and running parallel with its history are the two witnesses of Rev. 11, and in the attempt to locate these two witnesses in the past expositors have certainly shown but little regard for the rule given by inspiration to test a prophetic utterance. To admit the personality of these two witnesses would be fatal to locating their history in the past, hence the necessity of denying their personality. This is the only instance in the Bible where the personality of witnesses is denied by any Bible student, but their personality is not only taught by analogy, but by positive affirmation. God calls them "these two prophets."

The supernatural power ascribed to these two witnesses (prophets) puts it beyond the shadow of a doubt that they are real personal witnesses, and that through them will be duplicated the fearful plagues that Israel's ancient prophet wrought in Egypt. In the absence of direct proof as to who the true prophets are the inference certainly is very strong that Elijah is one, and the other translated prophet Enoch is the other. The unerring finger of prophecy points to one of these prophets, Elijah as having an important mission to fill in the closing days of this dispensation.

He is to be sent to the Jews before the great and terrible day of the Lord, and his mission is an important one, it is to "turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse." That is to readjust the relation of the Jews to the fathers to whom the promises were made; and through this restoration of their former relation, keep seed alive upon the earth; for at this time the Saints will have been translated, and unless the truth is held by the Jews, the earth will be just as it was when Noah and his family constituted the only righteous ones upon earth. Being taken away, the earth then being left without a righteous person was ripe for the curse.

The Jews will need powerful arguments to bring them under the covenant, when they are under the control and at the mercy of the "one who was to come, not in the name of the Messiah, but in his own name," the Antichrist or Satanic being who is to work such powerful miracles that if it were possible even the elect would be deceived. As in the days when Moses wrought God's mighty wonders in Egypt Satanic power duplicated some of them, so in the last fearful trial of the Jews will Satanic power be met by the omnipotent power of God.

Be Courteous.

Editor Restitution:

By the courtesy of my highly esteemed Brother, J. Lockwood, an able advocate of the theology promulgated by your paper, I have had the privilege of becoming acquainted with its pages. The rich mines of Divine Truth therein opened for the benefit of your readers, have been to me a source of much true happiness. I am not sure but I should have before this time been one of your paying subscribers, had it not been for some needless discourtesy indulged in by a number of your contributors, toward others who differ from them in some points of doctrine, and which have passed under your review without correction or rebuke.

I am much pleased with your constant appeal to the Divine Word for confirmation of your utterance on all questions in regard to morals and Christian faith and conduct.

Now I read in I Peter iii. 8, "Be courteous." Do you think The Restitution, heedful of that beautiful statute when it iterates, and reiterates, and applies the opprobrious nick-name of "Campbellite" to a body of people who like yourself repudiate human leadership, and wish to be called only by names having a divine warranty?

I have been acquainted with these disciples of Christ for near half a hundred years; I have had the means in that time to know the minds of thousands of their now 700,000 membership; yet I have never met with one of them, but what repudiated the slander with righteous disgust.

A few years ago the revisers of "Webster's Dictionary," inserted "Campbellite" as the Church name of the Disciples of Christ. Gen. Garfield corrected the error, and now in that work it is called "a nick-name for The Christian Church, or Disciples of Christ."

But, a greater than Webster, or Garfield, should dictate the utterances of Christians. Ignorance, or a design to insult, and slur the Disciples of Christ by giving them the repulsive cognomen of "Campbellite," it would seem must be the reason of its use by the contributors to The Restitution; either of which conclusion is painful to be forced to accept. Yours in the Great Hope.

Edward Brokeman.

[We can assure our contributor that the name Campbellite is not used by any of our friends with a desire to insult any one, but simply because it is the name commonly used to designate the people spoken of. Were we to inquire of a "Disciple of Christ," "To what church do you belong?" and get the answer, "Church of the Disciples of Christ," and we hesitate as to gaining a clear idea of the people meant, when he mentions "Campbellite" we at once understand where he is. No offense is meant, and we are sorry that any has been taken.—Ed.

Letter Drawer.

Dear Restitution:

As my subscription time is about expired, I will renew the same and also write a few lines for the letter drawer. I wish every one who renews his subscription would write for the letter drawer. It is pleasant indeed to read the heart-felt thoughts of unseen friends.

My brother's family and mine have found it expedient to leave the ones of like precious faith with whom we have been accustomed to meet with at Oleander, and locate for a time here at Graysville, where we still meet however each first day to partake of the sacred memorials left by our Savior for our observance till He should come again, and to further our knowledge in God's precious word of truth, and to stimulate or to aid to our faith virtue, knowledge, and all those Christian graces enumerated by righteousness that faleth not away

O, let us be ever mindful that a godly life of the child of God is equally important with the necessary pre-requisites which admit us into God's family. Thus the fight lasts till death or till Oh! glorious thought we shall see the Son of Man in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. What a glorious thought, the one of being alive when Jesus comes! To think of escaping the grasp of that grim monster death, of being caught up together with the risen dead to meet the blessed Lord in the air, of escaping that terrible time of trouble that signs proclaim so near. Oh, dear reader how much ought we to do to be worthy of all that.

Brother Joblin's excellent article on "The Thief on the Cross," came in the nick of time with me. I had just been warmly discussing that subject with Mr. S, our employer the day The Restitution came which contained that article. What an overwhelming victory for me with such fortifications at my disposal. Nor is that the only article that has been of great value to me. The Restitution has been invaluable to me the last year. Continue your good work ye heralders of the Gospel, and may God speed the day when you will get your reward.

Submitted in love and faith in God's promises.

A. M. Dart.

Dear Restitution:

Enclosed please find Money Order for $7.50, $1.50 to pay for the dear old Restitution for another year, the rest to go for the forwarding of the cause of Christ as you may think best. I would like a few more tracts on baptism. I want them for my Methodist friends. The restitution of all things spoken of by all the Holy prophets since the world began.

Oh, how it makes the heart leap with joy when we realize that Jesus the Life Giver and restorer is coming soon to restore all that was lost in Adam, that not only those who belong to Christ by faith will be regenerated but the whole creation will be renewed, brought back again to the state of purity and blessedness in which it came from the hand of the great Creator. What a change, what a God and Father of love to give His only begotten Son to redeem a fallen world. All praise to His Holy Name for His goodness to the sons of Men.

I dont know how I could get along without my paper in my old age. It keeps the precious, Blessed Hope aglow in my old heart, and I can but give thanks to God for His Unspeakable Gift, and cry, Come Lord Jesus, and come quickly.

May the Lord bless His own truth, and all who are in the fear of the Lord trying to proclaim it. Oh, that we as a people would hold up the hands of the servants of the Living God, and cry to Him to send more laborers, good earnest ones, into His vineyard. Oh, I do feel that what is done must be done quickly, that time for work in this dispensation is very short.

Mrs. E. J. Rathburn.

Dear Restitution:

Enclosed find $1.50 to apply on my subscription. I received the paper this noon and could not sleep till I had read all. This number is grand, the reasoning of Bros. Joblin, Niles, Bowdle, Lewis, Sister Wince, and Bro. Moyer's Current Events, the Exhortations of Bros. Hatch, Mitchell and Stewart and the letter drawer, makes a grand array that would be hard to excel.

I am alone here in faith—no preaching that I care to hear—others know the Truth and can't give up the pleasures of the world. I do hope and pray that I may so live as to be found worthy when the Lord shall come. Your Bro. in hope of the soon coming kingdom.

J. H. Symmson.

Dear Restitution:

I have been going to write a few lines to the letter drawer for some time, and have at last found time.

It encourages me very much to read the letters of our isolated brothers and sisters. Although we live quite a distance from any church of like precious faith, yet, thank God we can be present in Spirit if not with the body. We have only a few rods to go to attend church, but it is not a home.

I have been attending revival meeting in this place, and it seemed as though I could not keep my seat while men were misconstruing the Word of God to prove some fancy, or idea of their own.

O, brother and sister, both minister and laity, it is time for us to be up and doing. I feel the responsibility of all of like precious faith, to circulate the Gospel of the Kingdom. There are so many that do not understand the nature of the Gospel. Men and women are being deceived. They are being led to the Lord's table, those who have never risen to walk in newness of life, nor buried with him in baptism, or planted in the likeness of his death, yet, they have been allowed to partake of his broken body and spilt blood, and perhaps some may never comply with the requirements of the Gospel. It does seem as though people commenced at the wrong end of the Bible. They are born into the kingdom before they are begotten of God. Oh, what errors men will have to answer for. O, that I had talent to proclaim more forcibly the Word of Truth, but I am not going to bury what talent I have. If the Lord spares my life until another fall, I will with his grace assisting me, work out my apprenticeship for him.

We need more laborers, for the harvest is great, and the laborers few.

I am sounding the Gospel Truth every chance I get. Some say I am almost a materialist, and then they say they would as soon be an Infidel. I can truthfully say that I am very skeptical of a religion that robs Christ of his mission on earth.

I want to do a little missionary work in this place. You will find enclosed ten cents, for which please to forward one dozen tracts of "Twenty Important Questions," and oblige. Yours, striving for victory over self.

Edward Straight.

Dear Restitution:

How often in reading the letters of cheer in The Restitution do we feel encouraged to press on in the struggle against sin and self. It is cheering and comforting to live in this age of the world when the good Father in Heaven is about to make himself known to the people on the earth. If there ever was a time when the Christian has had occasion to "lift up his head and rejoice" it is now. Surely we can know that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand. What great need for each brother and sister to keep unspotted from the world, lest they be found in the condition of the sleeping virgins who were not prepared for the coming of the Bridegroom.

Many brethren will regret to learn of the death of our loved Sister Eunice Grant, on January 3rd, 1893. No one could be near her without feeling the inspiration of her unwavering faith and pure life. Most certainly in her case we need not sorrow as those that have no hope.

NOTICE.

The Brethren at Raisin, Mich., are in need of a Pastor for the coming year, and solicit correspondence with some of the Preaching Brethren, with a view of obtaining some one to preach for them the coming year. Address L. W. Chase, Box 241, Adrian, Lenawee Co. Mich

The Anointing. 1 John, ii. 27.

A few questions which it is hoped Brethren will answer through The Restitution.

1. Was the anointing to be restricted to the apostles and the early disciples?

2. As Jesus was made chief priest after the order of Melchizedek and was anointed with the Holy Spirit and with power, must not those who are to be kings and priests, and to reign with him, be anointed with the Spirit and with power also?

3. Is there a case on record where the Spirit was given that power did not accompany the gift?

Who will answer and oblige a lover of the Truth?

Dear Brother Underwood:

The Church of God in Cleveland herewith send ten dollars to help defray Bro. Wagoner's expenses West to baptize those anxious to obey the Truth as it is in Jesus; hoping that by the assistance of others he may be able to sow more of the incorruptible seed that shall bear fruit to God's glory.

Contingent Fund.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to The Restitution office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

The Evangelist Fund for Kansas.

Brethren and Sisters of Kansas, I was very much pleased to see Brother Randolph's suggestion for an Evangelist Fund for Kansas. It is just what we need. And I know of no better brother to put in the field than Bro. S. C. Oliver. He is an earnest advocate of the Truth, and preaches the Word in love and meekness. He has preached for years without any remuneration, showing by his arduous labor how dear God's blessed Word was to him.

Brethren help to keep the good seed, scattered, there are many perishing for the bread of life. Soon Jesus is coming, will he find us at our post and doing our duty? We must love the Truth so dearly that our lips and pocket books, are set apart for the service of God. There are other brethren in Kansas, if they would go who ought to be kept in the field too. Bro. Oliver is ready and willing to go at once. I would suggest that we all lend a helping hand in this good cause.

To this fund we subscribe $25.00.

DIED

At her home in Geuda Springs, Kansas, of consumption, Clarisa, wife of Rolando Chaplin, Feb. 18th, 1893. Age 46 years, 11 months and 7 days.

Sister Clara was born near Pierceton, Kosciusko County, Indiana, Feb. 20th, 1846. Was married to Rolando Chaplin in April, 1867. About two years after their marriage, she became a believer in the Gospel message and life only in Christ, and she with her husband embraced the Truth, and were buried with Christ in baptism. From Indiana they moved to Kansas in 1878. Soon after settling in Kansas she was taken sick and for one year was a helpless sufferer. Doctors and friends abandoned all hope of her recovery, but by the Providence of her Heavenly Father she was spared. But the ravages of disease had left her a cripple for life and her health greatly impaired. Few indeed have passed through such severe afflictions as she has, yet she was strong in the Faith, and her faith and hope buoyed her up all through the long years of suffering that she passed through.

During her last illness, many were the words of comfort and admonition that fell from her lips, while life was ebbing away and only the faintest whisper could be heard, she would clasp the hands of her friends, and beg of them to be faithful and meet her in the Kingdom. But the poor brow will throb no more with aching pains. She is sweetly sleeping in Jesus. She is at rest awaiting the glorious Resurrection of the blest. She leaves a husband and three children to feel the loss of a wife and mother's love; also three sisters, and three brothers in Indiana and many friends here. But we sorrow not without hope, for we have the blessed assurance of meeting her again, when the Life-Giver comes. She selected the hymns sang at her funeral. "Is it well with my soul," and "Asleep in Jesus" were sung. Funeral services were held at the M. E. Church, Bro. S. C. Oliver spoke words of comfort to the bereaved relatives and friends. Then we followed her to the cemetry and saw her placed in the silent tomb, where she will rest until the trump of God shall sound. Oh, may we all so live that we can clasp glad hands with her in the Resurrection morning.

Lydia Chaplin.

An Explanation.

Some of the dear brethren in other states are worried about the apparently small sum raised by the Indiana brethren for evangelizing purposes. Do not be troubled on this score. The amount is not all published. The fund was started in The Restitution that isolated brethren might know of it and bring forward their free-will offerings to lay upon the altar of the Lord. Brethren Wagoner and Geiselman are doing good work at new points, come to their help.

Poetry.

Anticipation of the Millennium.

The groans of Nature in this nether world,
Which Heaven has heard for ages, have an end.
Foretold by prophets, and by poets sung,
Whose fire was kindled at the prophet's lamp,
The time of rest, the promised sabbath, comes.
Six thousand years of sorrow have well nigh
Fulfilled their tardy and disastrous course
Over a sinful world; and what remains
Of this tempestuous state of human things
Is merely as the workings of the sea
Before a calm, that rocks itself to rest:
For He, whose car the winds are, and the clouds
The dust that waits upon his sultry march,
When sin hath moved him and his wrath is hot,
Shall visit earth in mercy; shall descend
Propitious in his chariot paved with love;
And what his storms have blasted and defaced
For man's revolt, shall with a smile repair.

Sweet is the harp of prophecy; too sweet
Not to be wronged by a mere mortal touch;
Nor can the wonders it records be sung
To meaner music, and not suffer loss.
But when a poet, or when one like me,
Happy to rove among poetic flowers,
Though poor in skill to rear them, lights at last,
On some fair theme, some theme divinely fair,
Such is the impulse and the spur he feels
To give it praise proportioned to its worth,
That not t' attempt it, arduous as he deems
The labour, were a task more arduous still.

O scenes surpassing fable, and yet true,
Scenes of accomplished bliss! which who can see,
Though but in distant prospect, and not feel
His soul refreshed with foretaste of the joy?
Rivers of gladness water all the earth,
And clothe all climes with beauty; the reproach
Of barrenness is past. The fruitful field
Laughs with abundance; and the land, once lean,
Or fertile only in its own disgrace,
Exults to see its thistly curse repealed.
The various seasons woven into one,
And that one season an eternal spring,
The garden fears no blight, and needs no fence,
For there is none to covet, all are full.
The lion, and the libbard, and the bear,
Graze with the fearless flocks; all bask at noon
Together, or all gambol in the shade
Of the same grove, and drink one common stream.
Antipathies are none. No foe to man
Lurks in the serpent now; the mother sees,
And smiles to see, her infant's playful hand
Stretched forth to dally with the crested worm,
To stroke his azure neck, or to receive
The lambent homage of his arrowy tongue.
All creatures worship man, and all mankind
One Lord, one Father. Error has no place:
That creeping pestilence is driven away:
The breath of Heaven has chased it. In the heart
No passion touches a discordant string,
But all is harmony and love. Disease
Is not; the pure and uncontaminate blood
Holds its due course, nor fears the frost of age.
One song employs all nations; and all cry,
"Worthy the Lamb, for he was slain for us!"
The dwellers in the vales and on the rocks
Shout to each other, and the mountain tops
From distant mountains catch the flying joy;
Till, nation after nation taught the strain,
Earth rolls the rapturous hosanna round.
Behold the measure of the promise filled;
See Salem built, the labour of a God!
Bright as a sun the sacred city shines;
All kingdoms and all princes of the earth
Flock to that light; the glory of all lands
Flows into her; unbounded is her joy,
And endless her increase. Thy rams are there,
Nebaioth, and the flocks of Kedar there;
The looms of Ormus, and the mines of Ind,
And Saba's spicy groves, pay tribute there.
Praise is in all her gates; upon her walls,
And in her streets, and in her spacious courts
Is heard salvation. Eastern Java there
Kneels with the native of the farthest west;
And Æthiopia spreads abroad the hand,
And worships. Her report has travelled forth
Into all lands. From every clime they come
To see thy beauty, and to share thy joy,
O Sion! an assembly such as earth
Saw never, such as Heaven stoops down to see.

—William Cowper.

Jewels in Christ's Diadem.

"They shall be mine when I make up my jewels." Mal. iii. 17.

A lesson that I want you to learn from the clear crystal is to strive to be one of Christ's jewels.

Two crystals are slowly growing, side by side, down in the dark soil, or in the solid rock. Many crystals are growing in just that way now. We will suppose that these two crystals are living things and can talk to each other. One of them says, "I am going to keep out of me all the mud, and all the specks of dirt, and every kind of impurity, so I may become a clear crystal."

The other says, "Oh! what's the use? It is all dark here; no one sees us; we cannot see each other, and we cannot see ourselves. Besides, it is a great deal of trouble to keep the clay and sand and iron all out. The air is full of their particles, and we shall have to watch all the time. It is too much trouble. I am go to take things just as they come, the pure and the impure together and I think I'll make a pretty fair crystal."

"Well," said the first crystal, "I have heard that up above these rocks there is a wonderful world, full of light and beauty, and I have heard that wonderful beings live there, and they sometimes come and dig the crystals out of the ground, and if they find us pure they will wear us for ornaments, or put us on nice shelves in their houses and show us to their friends. Now I believe this, and I am going to try hard to keep myself clean and pure. If a particle of dirt comes near me I cannot see it, but I can feel it, and I will drive it away. And though I may not grow very large, I shall try to be without spot and without blemish."

"Oh, well," said the second crystal, "you are a great fool to be so particular. I am going to work in everything that comes and try to be a big crystal, and I don't believe in any world above these rocks."

So they grew side by side, one working hard to keep all the mud out, and the other taking no pains at all.

A hundred years passed, when one day they heard a noise above them. It grew louder and louder, till finally there was a great crash, and the rock just above them was suddenly lifted, and a flood of light poured in on them. Then a man peered into the cavity and pulled them out and put them in a bag. When he reached home he washed them in water and looked at them very carefully.

The big crystal was so rough and full of mud and impurities that he threw it out on a heap of old rubbish and it was trampled in the dirt. The other crystal was so clear and beautiful, so sparkling and bright, so free from flaws and impurities, that he put it in a nice velvet case, and set a very high price on it, and afterward had it beautifully set in gold and wore it as a costly gem. Children, here in this world that is dark with sin, you are forming your characters. They are crystalizing. All around you are good things and there are bad things. There is plenty of material for building a pure, Christ-like character, and plenty, too, for building an evil character. You can attract the good and repel the bad if you choose. Or you can let all the bad come in and spoil your character.

You should try to keep out every impure thought and word and deed, for up in that world of light there is a being of wondrous beauty—the Savior—and he is gathering jewels—"all the pure ones, all the bright ones"—for a diadem such as the universe never saw. If we keep ourselves pure we shall be jewels in that diadem. "They shall be mine, when I make up my jewels." We shall shine in the light of everlasting life.

But if we are not pure and clear, we shall be thrown away, cast out into outer darkness, punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of our God.—R. T. Cross, in The Agressive Worker.

There are certain things which are hard to kill. Among them may be mentioned God's Word, God's church and God's servants. The world, the flesh, and the devil have been at work for ages trying to kill them, but they live. God's word lives, though all the powers of darkness have been arrayed against it. Princes and priest, persecutors and fault-finders, sceptics and scoffers, worldlings and idolaters, all have had their chance to assail the word of God for centuries, but it still lives, and is like to live, in spite of the rage and wrath of a helpless world. The more God's book is abused, denounced, prohibited, and burned, the more steady its onward march. The more active its foes the more courageous its friends are: and to-day, the book which has been more assailed and derided than any other book that the world has seen, is still moving onward in the calmness of a divine energy, triumphing over its foes.

There are now three piked roads in Palestine smooth enough for travel by carriage. The principal and most frequented one is the forty-mile road from Jaffa to Jerusalem, the second one runs twenty miles from Jerusalem to Hebron, and the third one, fifteen miles long, from Jerusalem down to the Jordan. Jaffa is 2,800 feet lower than Jerusalem, and the Jordan 3,500 feet, but Hebron lies 200 feet higher.

Go where duty calls, where there is ignorance to be enlightened, suffering to be relieved, vice to be reclaimed, character to be improved. These are works that must be done by living men and women.—Mark Hopkins.

To be truly happy, forget your unhappiness in ministering to some one more miserable than yourself. Whoever carries coals to another will warm his own hands.

If it be painful to bleed, it is worse to wither. Let me be pruned, that I may grow, rather than cut up to burn.—Bishop Hall.

Jesus waits to come with new and living power to the soul in the tender relationship of friendship.

"They Forsook Their Nets, and followed Him."

Jesus was walking by the Sea of Galilee. Two fishermen not far off, were casting a net into the sea, and Jesus saw, and said unto them, "Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men."

And straightway they forsook their nets and followed him."

There was no parleying as to what they should do to secure a living. The waters were prolific in fish,—great tempting schools blackened the surface, and danced and sported on the sparkling waves, but they were needed on a grander sea where the prizes were the souls of men. And "they forsook their nets."

Do you hear it young men, in whose ears the call of Jesus has been ringing for the last six months? He has said to you, "Come ye after me, and I will make you fishers of men," but still you abide by your nets,—all making excuse that "you do not know enough," that there is no opportunity to learn the great things of God in the mill or in the workshop, but let me tell you, God will free your hands, and will give ways to learn if you are but willing to break away from the chains of earth, and give yourselves to his service.

Let the mill go, leave the office, give up your nets, and join the glad army of willing fishers, whose crowns are to be the saved sons and daughters of men, the lost jewels gathered on the closing sands of this dispensation.

Take the matter to God, and let Him decide. We are praying earnestly for you.

S. Roxana Wince.

Dear Restitution:

I have been reading the letters, and thinking perhaps others would like to hear from us. I can truly say that there are a few of us here who are holding to the faith that is set forth by our dear paper, and are trying to make ourselves heard as we have a chance.

I read the letters from the dear ones scattered abroad throughout the land, and I am cheered and encouraged to go on, and press the fight into the very citadel of the enemy. I think those tracts of Brother Joblin's on "The thief on the cross," is just the thing to scatter abroad. I will take $1.00 worth when they are published and will send as soon as I hear they are ready. Now Brother Joblin, will you please tell the people when they say that the thief was not baptized, and then of course there is no necessity that any should be, that the ordinance of Christian Baptism was not instituted until after the death and resurrection of our Lord, and so has nothing to do with our case. What promise was made to him, does not give us the right to change times and laws.

I also think that it would be better to have more to say about this all important ordinance. I think there cannot be too much said, or done to dispel the delusion that has come on the people. I find by consulting Matt. xxviii. 19, that they were to be baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, and that it was to be done by his disciples. So we see that it was water baptism that is meant, as they could not baptize in any other way. "For as many of you, as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ," Gal. iii. 27, and as being baptized into his name is being baptized into him, thus making them Christ's and Abraham's seed according to the promise, and joint-heirs with Christ in the Kingdom. I conclude that it should be attended to as soon as the candidate is ready and willing to go forward understandingly. Not to wait for anything, only to have some one that is qualified to do it, and I think that any one that has been immersed is qualified to do it. I am rejoiced to say, that we have one daughter that is almost sixteen years of age, and has made up her mind that she ought to follow her Lord, and did so last Sunday by being buried with him in a watery grave, and raised to walk in newness of life. Rejoice with us, and be glad, all ye that are scattered abroad, for the Lord is dealing graciously with us today.

Your Brother in the faith.

Only.

Only a word for the Master,
Lovingly, quietly said,
Only a word!
Yet the Master heard,
And some fainting hearts were fed.

Only a look of remonstrance,
Sorrowful, gentle, and deep,
Only a look!
Yet the strong man shook,
And he went alone to weep.

Only some act of devotion,
Willingly, joyfully done,
"Surely 'twas no great thing!"
(So the proud world thought,)
But yet souls for Christ were won.

Only an hour with the children,
Pleasantly, cheerfully given,
Yet seed was sown
In that hour alone
Which would bring forth fruit for heaven.

"Only"—but Jesus is looking Constantly, tenderly down
To earth, and sees
Those who strive to please,
And their love he loves to crown.

No. 2.

Expositors of prophecy tell us that the events described in Rev. xiii. concerning the wonder-working beast, received their fulfillment during the papal supremacy. This is another instance of completely ignoring the rule for testing the fulfilment of prophecy. Is there an authenticated record that any pope, cardinal or priest of the Romish church ever performing such a wonderful feat as this, and that too "in the sight of the people?" That pretenses have been made, and alleged wonders performed is not even questioned; but the statement in Revelation is not what they will pretend to do, but what they actually will do. "And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire to come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men." That the remarkable display is real and not pretended is clearly shown from the next verse. "And deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast." That there is a wonder-working power that has been recognized from the days of Moses is a plain Scriptural fact. That this power is Satanic is also a Bible fact, and that there was to be a mighty display of this same Satanic power at the close of this dispensation is so well known to Bible students that it need not here be argued. Satan has disguised himself in his preparatory work, as by this means he can accomplish his purpose through the agencies employed. A being of vast knowledge and about six thousand years experience with human beings is well prepared to work the daring scheme of deception, and knowing that his time is short, knowing that Christ's exaltation means his debasement and final overthrow, as a command leading a forlorn hope, all the ingenuity of Satan will be taxed for the final effort. Valuable aids, too, Satan finds in men of influence over their fellows, in the general denial of any real Satanic existence. It is said of a noted robber whose exploits struck terror into his victims, that he was wont to employ men to report his death, and when the report was believed and the people thrown off their guard they became an easy prey to this rapacious robber. Satan acting upon this device has employed a number of influential ministers who tell the people that Satan is only a "myth," that no such being ever really existed. This work is supplemented by that vast army of Spiritualists who deny the existence of a personal devil, yet with all these aids the work of deception could not be accomplished without the valuable service of that other vast army of paganized Christians who teach the fundamental idea upon which Spiritualism is built—the immortality of the soul. With the whole world united in vast associations, or as inspiration has it, "bound in bundles" the work of mobilization of the world's forces will be comparatively easy. The "Man of Sin" the culmination of human wickedness, will be the natural outgrowth of this vast combination. The prince of the power of the air with his mighty host of fallen and doomed angels now openly operating with and through the vast army of unrestrained wicked ones of earth, will furnish the material for the fearful pictures that the finger of prophecy points us to as the closing scenes of earth's final judgment. To attempt to locate these scenes during the Roman government or the ascendency of the papal church, is certainly to admit that the "thing spoken by the prophet did not follow nor come to pass," but something else followed and we are told "this is the thing the prophet said should come to pass." "When a prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord, if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the Lord hath not spoken, but the prophet hath spoken it presumptuously: thou shalt not be afraid of him." Let us not put a weapon into the hands of the enemy whereby he may slay us.

Doubtless the many readers of this and the preceding article on the same subject are anxiously asking the question: "how will this view affect the belief that the coming of Christ is near at hand?" I answer, not in the remotest degree is the precious hope of his soon coming affected by the position taken, but on the contrary the writer is firmly convinced that the first stage of our Lord's coming is an event that may be expected at any moment. The hindering cause that prevents the open manifestations of Satanic power will soon be removed. The translation of the saints will remove the hindering cause, for as in a former judgment "we can do nothing till thou be come thither," the antetypical Zoar must be reached, "enter thou into thy chambers, shut thy doors about thee, hide thyself as it were for a little moment until the indignation be overpast, for behold the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity, the earth also shall disclose her blood and shall no more cover her slain." The pent up wrath of God against the antediluvians was stayed until Noah and his family were not only in the ark but shut in, and when the door was shut and the short period of awful suspense had elapsed, the guilty world, emptied of all the righteousness that was in it, became the theater of the fearful judgments of God, when the windows of heaven were open and the fountains of the great deep were broken up. Depend upon it brethren we are near the critical period, perhaps the last gleaning in the world's great harvest is now being done, in the highways and hedges. The strong appeals are compelling the last guests to come and fill up the complement that must be supplied before the feast is partaken of. But when will the predictions of Daniel and John be fulfilled? When will the two witnesses prophesy? When will the "Man of Sin" be seated in the "temple of God?" When will there be a time for the fulfilment of these prophecies if they are yet in the future, and the first stage of Christ's coming an impending event? To all these questions might be given the answer that God is never in a hurry to do his work, but while the time of preparation may seem, and indeed is long, yet a short work will the Lord make upon the earth. One hundred and twenty years rang out the world's impending doom, yet only forty days and nights were required to execute the terrible judgments that drowned a guilty race. Day after day was the righteous heart of Lot vexed with the filthy conversation of the doomed cities, yet the fearful judgment was wrought by the instantaneous lightning's flash. The electrical forces that had been slowly but surely gathering burst in all their fiery splendor with a suddenness that startled for a moment the guilty wretches, as the scathing lightning burnt its way through man, beast, city, and only spent its fury when the solid earth foundations of the place were consumed. Must the two witnesses yet prophesy? Certainly or the Word of God will prove a failure. But how long? The prophecy says 1260 days, and during their prophecy they have power to shut heaven that it will not rain during three years and six months! What a fearful drouth if each day in this prophecy represents a year! No wonder men deny the personality of the two witnesses and also of the "Man of Sin." But as to shutting heaven that it rain not for three years and six months, did not a prophet of God do this in a past age? Is that account literal? Did three years and six months then mean 1260 years? If it did not then mean that, why does it mean that now? Is there a recognized rule to interpret prophetic time given in the Scriptures that warrants us to call a day a year? True we have two instances in which this was done, but why specify two instances? That they do not constitute the rule is evident from the fact that time and prophetic time too is given in years where only years are meant. And a key to the meaning of the terms "time, times, and the dividing of time" is found in the "seven times" that passed over Nebuchadnezzar that all expositors agree the seven times represents seven literal years. That in certain prophetic times days mean days and not years is so clearly demonstrated that only a few instances need be given. Jericho was to be encompassed seven days. Jesus was to be raised the third day. The dreams of the butler and baker as interpreted by Joseph were interpreted by using days for literal days of time. But how is time reckoned in Daniel's 70 weeks? Do weeks represent literal weeks? Certainly not, for the inexorable logic of facts demonstrates that this is an exception and not a rule, as in the two cases when each day is made to represent a year. What then becomes of a portion of the 70 weeks of Daniel? Sixty-nine of these weeks or hebdomads reach to the "cutting off of the Messiah" while one week or hebdomad remains to be fulfilled. Could there be such a thing as a suspension of the time? In other words, could there be an interregnum in prophetic time? Certainly and to use a somewhat startling expression the clock of prophecy stopped at the expiration of the 69 weeks, and will resume its motion at the seventieth week!

The Railer.

In 1 Cor. v. 11; vi. 10, Paul classes the railer or reviler with the fornicator, the drunkard and idolator, and so he is found in bad company however respectable he may think himself to be. The railer is a person who scoffs insults, or censures. Webster. One who uses opprobrious and abusive language. Greenfield's definition of the Greek word translated "railer" and reviler in the two texts to which I have made reference. Doddridge says, one who labors to provoke others by foul language and insulting behavior, and seeks to injure persons by slanderous reports. Taking the foregoing definitions as comprehending the full meaning of this noun, it is not unfitting that Paul ranks the railer with the fornicator, drunkard and idolater, nor unreasonable that he forbids members in good standing to keep company and eat with such persons. This treatment shows the true estimate in which such characters are held in the church of the living God. How inconsistent with the Christian profession, and how unlike the spirit of Christ who did no evil, neither was guile found in his mouth. How common it is to hear Christians using insulting language, scoffing, censuring, abusing, pouring out foul epithets and acting in a way most offensive, and even circulating slanderous reports with a view to injuring the reputation of innocent persons whose characters are above reproach. A trifling fault, a mistake, some fancied slight, a difference of opinion, an error of the head and not of the heart—any one of these is quite sufficient to start the railer out on his tirade of abuse; and once under a full head of steam it is difficult to fix a limit to his words usable and unusable. He may not swear after the vulgar style, but will call heaven and earth to witness to the truthfulness of what he asserts, when every person of sound mind knows that nearly every word he is uttering is as false as Satan. He magnifies faults and is silent touching noble qualities; he is severe and unforgiving toward his brother. He is self-important, self-sufficient, and self-righteous; seeing the mote in his brother's eye, failing to see the beam in his own, is indicative of his terrible blindness. He is not satisfied with one airing of his victim, but repeats again and again. My dear brother are you an occasional railer? Beware. To persist in such a course will bar you out of the kingdom of God. We will suppose you are a model Christian except your railing. This is sufficient to exclude you from the kingdom: so Paul teaches. And suppose your brother makes mistakes or is guilty of some things that might be denominated sin are you under obligations to rail on him? What is the injunction? "Brethren if a man (a brother) be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, (if a railer is such) restore such a one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself lest thou also be tempted." Gal. vi. 1. This is one way of bearing another's burden and fulfilling the law of Christ. Again: "Brethren, if any of you do err from the Truth, and one convert him; let him know that he which converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." Jas. v. 20. There is no need of abusing and betraying him. This would provoke his worst feelings and confirm him in his sins. God knows best. He draws every man that is drawn by cords of love. "We love him," says John "because he first loved us." Railing does not draw but drives, and drives in the wrong direction—away from God. What a blessed thing it is to be in sweet accord with God's will in all things. Railing lowers the Christian immensely in the estimation of all sensible men, and this judgment is right. When the spirit of railing is in, the spirit of Christ is out; they are so antagonistic to each other they will not dwell in the same heart. The religion of Jesus was designed to sweeten human nature, to neutralize its acridness and smooth the sharp points of our tempers, to make us tenderly affectioned one toward another, and to mold and shape us after the moral image of God and his Son. Nonresistance is the New Testament attitude of the Christian. The weapons of his warfare are not carnal in any sense of the word. "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city." Prov. xvi. 12. He is not to array himself in the armor of passion, nor equip himself with all the mean words found in the vocabulary of the ruffian. God has furnished him with an armor befitting his high and holy calling as a soldier of the great Captain of salvation. His loins are girt about with truth, he has on the breastplate of righteousness; his feet are shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace, with the shield of faith he quenches the fiery darts of the wicked, he has the helmet of salvation, and with the sword of the Spirit which is the Word of God, he wages offensive warfare. This in Rom. xiii. 12, is called "the armor of light." Imagine the Christian soldier panoplied with these, and yet unwisely and wickedly resorting to the use of carnal weapons! What sadder sight did you ever see? Defeat is absolutely certain. The temper of a Christian who has been molded after the divine pattern is entirely different from that of the world. The world believes in one code, the Christian in another. The disposition of the one is to get even, to pay back in the same coin, to resent and resist evil; that of the other to suffer evil, to overcome evil with good. The railer is at the greatest possible distance from this attitude of the truly Christian man. For an imaginary evil, for some trifling sin, an error of judgment, or any little thing that his own harsh judgment can construe into an offense is made the ground for abuse. If for such little things he tongue-lashes his brother and seeks to injure him, how is it possible for him to act on the motto of Paul: "Being reviled we bless, being persecuted we suffer it; being defamed we entreat." Rom. iv. 12, 13. How can he exemplify the nonresistant spirit embodied in the sermon of Christ on the Mount, and Resist not evil; when smitten on the right cheek to turn the other also. How can he love his enemies, bless them that curse him, do good to them that hate him, and pray for them who despitefully use him and persecute him. All this is impossible with the brother who is a railer. How few Christians there are who have attained to the divine ideal. The great majority are sadly deficient in that charity wholly without which, but possessing even miraculous gifts a man is only sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. This ranks first, and in the Christian this must abound. It is this Paul personifies in the 13th chap. of 1 Cor. saying "Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity is not rash, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly; seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil * * * beareth all things * * * endureth all things.

Reader do you understand it? Take off the figure by substituting "Christian" for "charity" and then read these several predicates of him. If you can exemplify these in word and deed and sufferance you are the kind of Christian Paul had his eye on. Then the world will know that you are not of the world, the difference between you and it being so broad!

JOHN L. WINCH.

Present Commotion.

The innumerable trend of universal events; the present growing dissatisfaction and disturbance of families, and societies both State and Ecclesiastical; the wondrous commotion of nations; the increasing demands of socialism; the attempts at anarchism; the oppression against labor; the ruling of capital; the increasing knowledge of equal rights. Excessive inventions to reduce labor and contribute ease and comfort; sight seeing and the eye never satisfied; the mass of mankind traveling to and fro seeking rest and bliss, and finding nothing but unrest and dissatisfaction. The ever endless and increasing wickedness; the stir and vim of humanity, are all so many indexes pointing to the end of Gentile times, and a new epoch or dispensation, in the world's history, when the King in his beauty shall sit upon his throne, and the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Yours in the faith. C. M.

Prophecy.

In an article of Brother John L. Winch under the heading of "Are These the Fulfilments?" I would say that they are. Matt. xxiv. 3,5. His disciples asked him to "Tell us when shall these things be? and what shall be the signs of thy coming, and the end of the world?" And Jesus answered and said unto them, "Take heed that no man deceive you. For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ, and shall deceive many." I would ask are there not many false Christs on earth today? But to continue, verses 9 to 13. "Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you, and ye shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake. And many false prophets shall arise and shall deceive many, and because iniquity shall abound the love of many shall wax cold. But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved." Verse 24 says, "For there shall arise false Christs and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders (spiritualists) insomuch that if it were possible they shall deceive the very elect.

Is not this a fulfilment? If you doubt it attend some of their meetings. "Wherefore if they shall say unto you, behold he is in the desert (Indian Messiah) go not forth, behold he is in the secret chamber (modern experimentalist) believe it not." Has not his words so far been fulfilled? But follow up his prophetic words.

Verse 29 says; "Immediately after those days (spoken of in verse 9) shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken."

What are the tribulations spoken of here? I think it was the persecution of the Church by the different Romes. But when did the persecution cease? In the year 1775, when the Queen of Austria issued the proclamation that every person should have the right to worship God according to the dictates of their conscience. This was followed by her son then King of Italy, in the year of 1776, also by The Declaration of Independence of the United States in the same year.

Immediately after these proclamations on the 19th day of May within five years after the issuing of the first proclamation, the sun was darkened and the moon refused to shine. Then on the 13th day of November 1833 the stars fell. These were three of the signs that were to take place before his coming, and have been literally fulfilled. Our Savior said the powers of the heavens should be shaken, which was the fourth sign. Has this been fulfilled? I think it has. I think he had reference to the aerial atmosphere, which was first shaken by a cyclone in the year of 1860. Since then men's hearts have failed them for looking for those dread monsters and things coming on the earth. But whether these aerial electrical phenomena are what our Savior meant when he said "the powers of the heavens shall be shaken" or not, there is one thing I do know. In verses 34 to 37 he says, "Verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass away until all these things be fulfilled. Heaven and earth shall pass away but my word shall not pass away, but of that day and hour knoweth no man, no not the angels of heaven, but my Father only. But as in the days of Noe so shall the coming of the Son of Man be."

[illegible]

Now take notice, the [illegible] who saw the sun darkened, the moon refuse to shine, the [illegible] and the powers of the heavens [illegible] ken, was not to pass away [illegible] was fulfilled. Verse 34.

Verse 37 says, "But as in the days of Noe were so shall the coming of the Son of Man be." A generation in the days of Noah was one hundred and twenty years. I think within one hundred and twenty years from the time the sun was darkened the [illegible] will come.

But are there not other signs or moves being made on earth which show that all things will be fulfilled before 1900. Let us hear from some of the brethren who are able to give us light on this subject.

Yours in hope.

JOHN P. GLENN.

Damaged.

A sign, advertising damaged goods of one kind and another for sale, is not an infrequent sight. In large letters, painted in striking colors, it is announced that certain articles, or the entire stock of some store, has been damaged by fire, water, etc., and must be sold at a great sacrifice.

Things that are damaged, and hence have not their former value, are not limited to auction stores and houses where fire and water have made havoc. Men walk the streets of every city who do not need to have sign-boards strapped to their shoulders, announcing a damaged body and character—and, therefore, that a great sacrifice of moral worth may be made. Here is a young man with blood-shot eyes, bloated flesh and unsteady step, who has been burned out by fires of intemperance. To another, the strange and destructive fascination for gambling, which began with a game for the cigars or the drinks, or, alas, too often in the polite forms of gambling in social life—which so-called society is horrified to have designated by its proper name, has been the agency through which a life has been made a shameful failure, ending in despair that generally finds relief in self-destruction.

And so we might go on, naming the things that damage men—secret vices, dishonest practices in business, unholy ambition, covetousness—all tending to rapidly weaken noble purposes; destroy not only reputation—that which a man is said to be—but undermining character—that which he really is. As a result of all the forms of sin that ruin men, we have but to look around us to see the "victories of shame and contempt, and the harvest of hell that have grown from such a seed as this."

The only hope of manhood is in that kind of right living which is prompted by faith in Him who saw enough in souls damaged, ruined by sin, to lay down his life for them.—Young Men's Era.

The Cholera in Russia.

It is an extraordinary rate of mortality from cholera in Russia that is indicated by the latest body of statistics printed in the Official Gazette of St. Petersburg. Forty per cent of all the cases of cholera that are reported for a period of four weeks proved fatal. It is not often, even when the epidemic rages fiercely, that the ratio of deaths is as high as this. There have been such records from Hindustan, and from Persia, and from Arabia, and from the seaports of China, but hardly ever in modern years from any country in Europe. The epidemic must be peculiarly malignant in Russia; the means of dealing with it must be singularly imperfect; the prospect of exterminating it there this year cannot be regarded as encouraging. It has had a long course in Russia since it appeared at Bakú nearly a year ago.—New York Sun.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAR. 8, 1893.

THE Mohammedan Missionary from Ceylon has arrived, it seems; and brings with him the assurance of ample funds to build a Mosque.

GLADSTONE has introduced a bill for the disestablishment of the English Church of Wales. It seems to have roused the ire of the Tories, and heated debates are in progress.

AN exchange from over the waters intimates that Germany is a waning power, and, in its impatience at the loss by emigration, of her young men, and the rapid increase of her debt, may precipitate the fight.

THE Scriptural preparation to meet the Lord at his appearing, is an intelligent obedience to the good message from God concerning his kingdom. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."

THERE is a dispute as to the pastorate of the Metropolitan Tabernacle (Spurgeon's). Some want Mr. Thomas Spurgeon, a Baptist, and some favor the election of a Dr. Pierson, who is a Paedobaptist. What a tangle for a Baptist Church!

AUBERLEN wrote that "the Papacy took to itself, as a robber, that glory which is an object of hope, and can only be reached by the obedience and humility of the cross. When the church became a harlot she ceased to be a Bride who goes forth to meet her Bridegroom, and thus chiliasm disappeared."

FROM all parts of the world come the news of light spreading among religionists, to some extent; but we rarely find any intimation that life from the dead to inherit the kingdom of God's dear Son, is Gospel. We have known men to some extent in the Truth for 30 years stand in the fog concerning God's converting and saving power. But after all, the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation; and it is strange that they do not see that the life and kingdom offered are the Gospel.

BRETHREN do not wait for some great opportunity, or some opportunity to do great things for God and truth. Look close about you and make sure that you are not neglecting something that needs to be done now. You will travel not this road again, work while it is called to-day. The night approaches when no man can work. Speak a word of cheer to that burdened brother, or overloaded, sorrowful sister, if you can do no more. It will give them courage to battle on as if they had "quaffed some elixir of life."

News concerning the Bank scandal in Italy, at which the ministers have been winking, shows a [illegible] state of affairs. It [illegible] the great Bank of Rome [illegible] kept a duplicate series of its notes and thus doubled its legal issues; a six million dollar fraud - think of it! Smaller banks have followed their example till the whole system seems ready to collapse. Many of the great financiers have been thrown into prison, and the whole country is so convulsed that the throne itself may fall. Once more we quote. "In his day the righteous shall flourish and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth."

THE LONDON correspondent of the World says the shadow of the Great Plague has appeared at several different places, and medical authorities feel sure that it will shroud the whole continent of Europe in deadly black. Ten persons have died of cholera in St. Petersburgh; in Marseilles, France, people are trying hard to cover up the dead lest the season of pleasure there may be spoiled. At Hamburg four sailors have recently been stricken down with the disease. Vienna is inviting all nations to a congress there to formulate some plan of fighting the common foe. Southampton, England is begging Parliament to vote money to maintain a rigid quarantine.

DID you ever notice how more religious, as a rule, women are than men? Why is this? What particular trait is it that contributes to this result? Is it not because they love, and lean, love and confide, more than men? Habitual dependence makes them cling closely to the arm of safety, even when no special danger threatens.

ANOTHER soldier of the cross and the crown has fallen. We are pained to know that our dear brother M. I. Lewis, whose name has been a household word with the readers of THE RESTITUTION for many years, died on the 29th of January. As yet we have no particulars; but we tender to the family of the dear deceased one, our heartfelt sympathy, and earnestly exhort all to prepare to meet him in the goodly band, where one look from our Lord and Life Giver will make amends for all the ills of this life.

WHEN it is remembered that large cities are the hot-beds of vice, of extravagance, of political corruption and anarchy, the fact that only one-third of the population of this country lives in the country, is an alarming one to those who have no light to shine ahead. Of all the people on the face of the earth, only those whom God has taken into his confidence can calmly contemplate the swelling tide of iniquity. They know the cup will soon be full; then comes a crash, and then a brighter day.

ONE catastrophe follows another in rapid succession. A fearful loss of life and property has occurred on the railroads of this country during the last few weeks; and news from Europe is to the effect that an appalling disaster has overtaken the village of Gergely, near Pako, Hungary. A sudden rise of the Danube drove 1000 out of their mud huts into the church where pastor and people besought the intercession of the Saints (i. e. their Ghosts.) Presently the waters reached them there, and they rushed frantically into the flood hoping to reach higher ground, but only the strongest succeeded.

FORTY miles of track for the Electric railroad between Chicago and St. Louis have been laid, and the work is being vigorously pushed forward. The company expect to maintain the speed of a hundred miles an hour; the motors will be wedge shaped to cut the atmosphere, easily; switches of all kinds are to be avoided where the high rate of steam is to be maintained, and there are to be no grade crossings. An electric road is being built in Belgium, which, it is claimed will have a speed of 150 miles an hour, and the same is expected of one between Brussels and Paris. Surely these must be preparations for the age of centralized power about to dawn.

DON'T be scared by the cry of science, stand by the grand old record that was closed up with the message to John. Nothing the Spirit said needs correction or alteration; the times change, but there is no elasticity about the divine record. Like its author, it changes not, to suit times or seasons, although with a great flourish of trumpets so-called science every now and again declares it to be under a cloud. No; you must not be alarmed, brethren. That which is called science is constantly changing and correcting itself. You do not know what, of all it has said this year it may retract the next. Science was well summed up by Washington Irving when he said it "corrects the blunders of the last generation, and creates new blunders to be corrected by the next."

GOD is visiting the Gentiles with the Glad Tidings to take out a people for his name; the name in their foreheads by and by implies, we apprehend, that they will have been stamped with his divine nature. They, then, are for himself; and required to be like himself, holy because he is holy; perfect because he is perfect. A question of vast importance is it, why the righteous inherit the kingdom of God, and the unrighteous do not? Is it not because the former are like him and the latter not like him? If we must be like him in order to inherit the kingdom, our minds must be renewed in order that we may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God, for we cannot expect him to become imperfect in order to be like us.

The Woman's Seed. No. 4.

In resuming our study of this interesting subject, we remark, that as it is in the name of Jesus born of Mary, that shed his blood, and offered his body that we obtain remission of sins, is it not folly to talk about something that we know nothing about? Peter says it was Christ who "suffered for us, leaving us an example that ye should follow his steps, who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth; who when he was reviled reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not, but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously; who his OWN SELF bare our sins in his body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins should live unto righteousness; by whose stripes ye are healed," 1 Pet. ii. 21-24. Clearly it is the Body, the real Christ we are interested in.

We would ask our readers if they ever tried to unite two ends of a cord that were a trifle too short? If you have, you know exactly how it is; there is not enough to do anything with: it is just so with those who persist that something pre-existed, but do not know what. That something is not enough to take hold of, or believe in. What if something did pre-exist? We have no interest in, or concern with it. It is he who died for us and rose again we are interested in. Doubtless some are honestly afraid of detracting from the blessed Son of God, but be assured that nothing gives him so much honor as to believe the record which God gives of his Son.

Truly something did exist before Jesus, who was born of Mary. What was it? When the astonished maiden asked the angel how these things could be, she was told that the Holy Spirit should come upon her, and the power of the Highest should overshadow her: for that reason the Holy thing to be born of her was to be called the Son of God. That Holy Spirit, then, existed before Jesus. We mean that it existed before this miraculous work on the virgin;—before Jesus was made of a woman. It was the Eternal Spirit's power that was then and there exerted, but that work did not impart the divine nature of existence to the woman's seed. That would have frustrated the divine purpose. It would have made it impossible for him to have died. In the nature of things, Christ would have been immortal, and not subject to death if God had been his father in the same sense that man is father of a child. God WAS NOT in THAT sense his father, but in the sense described by the angel, Luke i. 32. In a word, he was made of a woman—that settles it. There was no immortality about the woman, or else we should have read:—"The woman brought life and immortality to light, by the gospel;" it does not read that way.

To prove that we have the key to the subject, it is only necessary to show by the second chapter of Luke that he grew in wisdom, waxed strong in spirit, and grew in God's favor as well as man's, just as any other perfectly obedient child would. How could he have grown in God's favor if from eternity he had been with him as a perfect being? God's Spirit was given him without measure, but that that was not divine nature of existence we have the proof in that he existed without that spirit in the awful ordeal of the cross, when he cried, "My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

The Spirit which was given Christ without measure, is what we measurably enjoy, doubtless; strengthening, comforting, and sustaining; but we are subject to death, all the same. It must be remembered, that it was the holy thing born of Mary, and that Mary was flesh, not spirit; and that Jesus said, "that which is born of flesh is flesh." John iii. 6. In this way we know of a certainty that Jesus when born was flesh, not Spirit. But Jesus also says:—"That which is born of the Spirit is Spirit." And, in addition to this, we learn that one who has been born of the flesh, can be born again, must be born again before he can enter the kingdom of God. The marvelous speaker had been once born as predicted. When was he born again? When did the flesh-born Jesus become Spirit? When did the corruptible Jesus, who was the subject of hunger and thirst, and weariness, and sadness, and pain, and death, get beyond this condition of things? These things ended with his death. We must hew to the line laid down by Jesus. "That which is born of the Spirit is Spirit." And in Col. i. 18 we learn that he was the firstborn from the dead. This was the second time he was born. And we know from Rom. vi. 9, that he was born into a deathless state of existence the second time; for we read, "that Christ being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him." The flesh had given place to the Spirit when raised from the dead. On the supposition that he pre-existed, the pre-existent part of him would not die, would not be born! would not be raised again would already be deathless; so that this Scripture would relate only to the tenement of the pre-existent part; and thus we are carried away back into the old theological rut of compound being; and we look in vain in the sixth of Roman for anything but a [illegible] of our tenement; the tenant is overlooked.

If Jesus lived before the woman's seed was born, what became of him when the woman's seed died, and was raised again, and ascended to heaven? Are there two Jesus' at the right hand of the Father now? Of course this is no difficulty with those who maintain that man is mortal and immortal at the same time. But those who have the key to man's nature and destiny, will find it hard to reconcile the pre-existent idea with it. It cannot be harmonized with it, for in all things he was made like unto his brethren.

To us it is a glorious truth, that Jesus, although begotten of God, was made of a woman; and as we see him plodding over the hills and valleys of Judea announcing the coming of God's kingdom, and offering life from the dead in order to inherit it, we see one of our own race for the first time living a spotless life by reason of his miraculous conception, and the Spirit's sustaining power. We see one of our own race faithful unto death. Even when deprived of the Father's sustaining Spirit, he for the joy set before him endured the cross, and despised the shame. And as the angel rolled away the stone on the third day it was the woman's seed, and Abraham's seed, and David's seed, who was, agreeable to promise, redeemed from the grave without seeing corruption. And he who was taken up and received by a cloud before the astonished disciples, and was seen by Stephen at the right hand of God was the "Son of Man," Acts vii. 56. And he whose brightness blinded Saul the persecutor on the road to Damascus, said "I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest." Who was Jesus? It was he named of Gabriel before conception, Luke i. 32. Yes; he was then as now, the One glorified specimen of humanity. The first ripe sheaf of the crop of dead ones, Col. i. 18. The firstborn of a family of brethren, Rom. viii. 29. The first CREATURE born of the CREATOR, Col. i. 15; the first man to be lifted out of the human into the divine—into the image of the invisible God; the commencement of the new creation; the pledge that the promise to make all things new, Rev. xxi. 5, will be performed.

Yes, it is our elder brother who beckons us on, and promises life and glory at his appearing, for he says, "I am he that liveth and was dead; and behold I am alive forevermore, Amen, and have the Keys of hades and of death." That all who have named his name may depart from iniquity, and live in daily and hourly preparation for his coming, we pray.

MARRIED

Married by M. Joblin, Evangelist, at his residence, 620 Woodland Av., March 1st, 1893, Mr. Joshua Bullock and Miss Annie Nicholls, both of Cleveland. One year ago they were both buried with Christ by baptism, into death; so that Joshua has a sister wife, and Annie has a brother husband. With this double tie we cannot doubt but they will share each others joys and sorrows while mortality lasts, and then enters into the joy of the Lord.

Peter's First Epistle. Chapter 2.

1. Putting away then all evil, and all deceit and acts of hypocrisy and jealousy and slander,

2. May ye, as recently-begotten unborn babes, have longed for the seasonable, unadulterated milk, that thereby ye may have grown unto salvation.

3 If ye have tasted that the Lord is a useful-good one.

4. Unto whom coming as unto a living stone which hath been rejected for want of value by men, but in the estimation of God is chosen, esteemed;

5. And upon which ye yourselves living stones, as it were are being built, a spiritual house, namely for a sanctified priesthood to offer spiritual sacrifices truly-acceptable to God through Jesus Christ.

6. Wherefore was there included in Scripture, Lo I am laying in Sion a chief-corner stone, chosen, esteemed, and the one who puts his trust on it will not have been put to shame.

7. The honor then is for you who have faith; but for those who are without faith, a stone which the builders rejected for value, this hath become a head of a corner,

8. And a stone of stumbling and rock of scandal for those who as they are without faith stumble at the word, unto which end also they were ordained.

9. But ye are a chosen race, a royal priesthood, a sanctified nation, a royal people for a special possession, that ye may have announced the intelligence of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light.

10. Ye who at one time were not a royal-people, but now are God's royal-people, ye who did not experience mercy, but now have experienced mercy.

11. Beloved ones, I exhort you as sojourners, and away from home, to refrain from the carnal inordinate-desires which war against the soul (organic-life)

12. Having your conduct among the nations good, that wherein they talk against you as evil-doers, being eye-witnesses of your good deeds, they may glorify God in a day of inspection.

13. Subject yourselves to every human institution for the Lord's sake, whether it be to a king or to a superior;

14. Or leaders, as though sent through his instrumentality for the requital of evil-doers and for the praise of good-doers.

15. Because in this wise is it the expressed will of God that lovers of good muzzle the ignorance of thoughtless men.

16. As freemen, and not holding your liberty as a cloak for evil-doing, but as bond-servants of God.

17. May ye have honored all. Love the brethren, fear God, honor the King.

18. Ye members of households, subject yourselves with all fear to your masters, not only to those who are good and gentle but also to the perverse.

19. For this is grace if for the sake of a conscious knowledge of God any one endure sorrows, suffering unjustly.

20. What sort of a good report is it though if ye endure patiently when ye sin and are buffeted. But if ye endure patiently when ye are doing good and suffering, this is grace in God's estimation.

21. For unto this end have ye been called, because Christ also suffered for your sakes, leaving for you an example, that ye may have followed in his footsteps;

22. And he did no sin, nor was guile found in his mouth;

23. Who when being reviled, did not revile in return, who when suffering did not threaten; but surrendered himself to the One who judgeth justly;

24. Who himself bore up our sins with his own body on the tree, that we having no more to do with the sins might live unto righteousness, with whose stripe have ye been healed.

25. For like sheep as it were were ye gone astray, but now have returned unto the Shepherd and bishop (overseer) of your souls (organic-lives.)

COMMENT.

"Unborn-babes" literally—this being the strict meaning of [illegible], and this being true to fact in the Spiritual regenerative process, as the resurrection is our birth into the full organic spiritual life.

"The reasonable, unadulterated milk" instead of "the sincere milk of the word" C. V. "That ye may have grown unto salvation" very clearly teaches that salvation is a growth analagous to the natural growth from the incipient begetting spiritual to the birth.

"A useful good one"—that is a useful-good lord is the Christ. See the idea of Christian utility here—too much ignored in so-called orthodoxy.

"Sanctified" not "holy" here.

"Wherefore" instead of "because," R. V.

"Puts his trust in or on it" instead of "believeth in him" C. V. & R. V. for obvious reasons.

"The honor" instead of "the preciousness" R. V. which is too remote a derived meaning of the Greek word [illegible].

"Those who stumble at the word" instead of "For they stumble at the word," R. V. which is some translator's thought and not Peter's. The "for" is inserted, and the whole construction of the sentence altered in its grammatical arrangement. The inference to be drawn from Peter's thought is that the Word, the oracular Word namely is this" Stone," or personified, "The Christ," the same first premise that John starts with in his Gospel. To those who accept God's word it is "a living-word," or changing the figure, "a living-stone;" while for those who reject it, it becomes "a stumbling-stone," etc. This makes the conclusion drawn here "Unto which end also they were ordained," no more difficult to understand than that if you use fire in an intelligent way it becomes a beneficient instrumentality to conserve and save life; but if you use it ignorantly or negligently it becomes a destructive agency only.

The whole Calvinistic doctrine of decrees can be resolved into an argument as simple as the first principle of common sense involved in this illustration above given. There are invariable laws operative in the spiritual-world as there are in the natural world. Conformity to their requirements in use brings the user beneficent results; while nonconformity in use involves the user in disaster and destruction. This is the whole truth in a nutshell.

"A royal people for a special possession" instead of "a people for God's own possession" R. V. for obvious reasons. The word "God" does not occur in the text, the word translated "people" means "a royal people" or "a people of a king," and the word translated "own possession" means "a special possession" among many other possessions of the same individual, and is the same word translated "jewels"—"When I make up my jewels" in Malachi. C. V.

"A sanctified nation" instead of "a holy nation." C. V. & R. V.

"The intelligence of him" instead of "the excellences" R. V. which is not a translation at all, but an interpretation.

"Were not a royal people" instead of "were no people." R. V. This passage is quoted verbatim by Peter from the 1st chapter of Osee. Read it and get the thought there and see how Peter applies it here.

"Being eye-witnesses" etc., instead of "behold" merely, R. V.

"Requital" instead of "vengeance." R. V. & C. V. God is not revengeful.

"Muzzle" instead of "silence" R. V. much more graphic and moreover literal.

"Good-report" instead of "glory" R. V.

"That we having no more to do with the sins" instead of "having died unto sins" R. V. which is an interpretation also and not a translation.

It is true that we are accounted "dead to sins" and this figure is constantly used in the Scriptures; but that is not the thought nor the illustration nor the argument here. The whole argument here is one of use and utility—the higher utility of the regenerate spiritual life and the things that belong to it.

"Stripe" instead of "stripes" R. V. which destroys the force of the figure in a measure, besides taking a liberty with the text. For Peter is quoting verbatim from the 53d chapter of Hessias, which all the church has always accepted as Messianic and oracular.

CHAS. GARDNER.

A. R. Underwood:

Dear Sir: Replying to your very kind letter of the 24th will say, my father, M. I. Lewis, was born in Vermont, Jan. 18, 1801, and was at his death, 92 years of age. He had always (with one or two exceptions) enjoyed good health. About three years ago he had a sick spell, heart trouble was the cause, and we never expected he would recover from it, but he did and has enjoyed good health ever since until his last sickness, which was a general giving away of all the vital forces. He was taken sick on Friday morning Jan. 27, and died on Sunday noon Jan. 29. He had his senses to the last and knew every one in the room, although he could not talk so we could understand him for several hours before he passed away, which he did very easy and to all appearance without pain or a struggle. He died as he had lived, a good, conscientious Christian; and will receive the reward of those who die in the Lord.

Father moved from the state of New York with his family to Fond-du Lac Co., Wis. in the year 1847, and has resided in this county ever since, and was therefore one of the oldest residents.

His funeral was very largely attended although it was one of the most blustery days of this winter.

Father was a very active worker in the cause of Temperance, and the organization that he worked with attended his funeral in a body. He wrote quite an article for the temperance organization to be read in their meeting on his 92 birthday, which was Jan. 18, 1893.

Yours very truly.

O. F. LEWIS.

Dear Restitution:

We have taken the paper ever since we were baptized by Uncle George Elton, (father's brother,) four years ago, and I read it a long time before at home. The letter drawer is of very much interest to me. There are but few that I am personally acquainted with, but I love to hear from them all, and hope I may get acquainted with them some time. We have Bible Class here every Sunday at father's house. There are but a very few of us but we try to encourage one another. We hear but very little speaking, once in a while some of the brethren come and speak. Bro. Almus Adams was here last fall and gave a few very interesting discourses.

Let us all try and be ready for we know not what hour our Lord will come. Yours in hope of eternal life.

AMANDA & GEORGE HAZARD.

To the Brethren in Kansas.

It has been suggested that Bro. Oliver take the field. This is a good suggestion. Bro. Oliver has shown his faith by his works. Is not waiting for a certain amount to be raised, but is improving every opportunity to tell the good news to a perishing world.

His modest unassuming way will never push him to the front, but his earnestness in proclaiming the good news of the Kingdom, will be commended by any body of believers. To those not acquainted with him, we would say, his life is strictly in accord with the Word. He carries no bad habits to set before the young. Wherever he goes he endeavors to build up the church by persuading the brethren to walk in the footsteps of the meek and lowly Savior. His preaching is all done in the spirit of love.

Poetry.

Littles.

Only a little sunbeam
Came shimmering on the wall,
But it made me glad and it made me sing
Of Jesus, the Light of all.

Only a little shadow
Descended across my path,
But it made me sad, as it whispered low
Of sorrow and pain and death.

Only a little songlet
Fell lightly on my ear,
But it wakened a thousand love thoughts
Of many a bygone year.

Only a little tear-drop
In the eye of a loving friend,
But it stirred my soul with a deep desire
My little help to lend.

Only a little snowdrop
In the garden by my bower,
But its pure white sweetness and tenderest mien,
Make me wish I were a flower.

Only a little brooklet
Came rippling along its way,
But its mirthful song and its dazzling light
Made me wish I were half as gay.

Away in eternal sunlight,
Away in the realm of bliss,
'Mid the harps and the songs of the angels,
It may be I'll think of this.

And the glory will be the brighter,
And the music be more sweet,
The memory of sorrow and shadow
Will make the bliss complete.

I Verily Thought With Myself.

I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth. Which thing I also did in Jerusalem; and many of the saints did I shut up in prison, having received authority from the chief priests; and when they were put to death, I gave my voice against them. And I punished them oft in every synagogue, and compelled them to blaspheme; and being exceedingly mad against them, I persecuted them even unto strange cities. Acts xxvi. 9, 10, 11. Was Saul of Tarsus a good man at that time? This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief. 1 Tim. i. 15. Then Saul was the chief of sinners when he persecuted the saints of God. Yes, he thought with himself, that was the thinkings of self when a sinner.

Oh how many now in our day think with themselves that this or that will do, when God has spoken entirely different. How many times I in my travels meet with men and women who will say, I believe if I am honest in my opinions, God will accept me in the great and final day of judgment. And others will say, I believe if I live honest and upright, and deal honestly with my fellow men, I will be saved on my morality. Then you, like honest Saul of Tarsus, that you will be saved whether you obey or not, but Saul had to learn better. I have some friends near and dear to me that think with themselves that baptism administered to them when ignorant of the gospel will do, because they were so honest, and one of those persons has told me, my husband and I have talked it over, and he thinks my baptism is all right. Then I ask, did you believe then what you do now? And they will say no. Do you believe the gospel now? Yes. Did you believe it then? No. But I was so honest then, and I felt satisfied then and I do yet. Now hear the wise man Solomon, there is a way that seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death. Oh how many in the great day of accounts will find to their sorrow, that they have been mistaken, and there will be no way to rectify that mistake. To late, to late. Oh, terrible thought. Oh, how can we endure the thought now? Oh, dear Father in Heaven, may we all wake up, and let us warn them by tongue and pen, so that the blood of lost ones will not be found in our skirts. Let us hear the Prophet Isaiah, let the wicked forsake his ways, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon. For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than my thoughts. Isaiah lv. 7, 8, 9.

Now where will honesty come in in God's plan of salvation. There is not one promise in all of God's word that God will save anyone of Adam's race on honesty alone. We may read from Genesis to Malachi, and not a promise that God will save anyone without obedience, but we find many cases where God has destroyed nations, and individuals, who transgressed his laws, and many of them were honest, and sincere. So after going through the Old Testament, and searching for salvation through honesty, and not finding a single case, we open the New Testament and search from the first chapter of Matthew till we reach the final Amen of Revelations. There is not one word hinted at, that our honesty, our think soes, or believe soes, or our opinions will ever save one man or woman. Then why believe that terrible delusion? Eternity only will reveal the terrible delusion of honesty saving men and women. Oh, the mischief that the Sectarian world has done in lulling people to sleep with I am honest, therefore God will save me, when God says except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish, repent and believe the gospel. Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, and he that believeth the gospel and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not the gospel, shall be damned. No honesty taught here. One will say, I think, or I believe one drop of water is as good as an ocean. Does Christ say any thing about your think soes, or believe soes? Not a word. No, no. What did Peter say on the Day of Pentecost when they said men and brethren what shall we do? Did Peter say, are you honest? Are you sincere? If you are, God will save you on your honesty. Was that what he said? No. But he did say, Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of your sins, and they that gladly received the Word, not something else, but the word, were baptized, and there was added unto them (the 120) three thousand souls. And in Acts viii., others were baptized. And in Acts x. still others were baptized. Acts xix., others were baptized. Let us stand on safe ground. Let us be faithful. Time is short.

Pine Woods Bible Class. No. 41.

Leader. "How sweet are thy words unto my taste! Yes, sweeter than honey to my mouth." Psa. cxix. 103.

Please sing hymn No. 234.

"Sweet Word! It calms my troubled soul!
It bids my sorrows cease to roll;
Smiles like the rainbow on the deep,
And hushes all my woes to sleep."

At our last meeting we were considering Bro. Stewart's question with regard to the Antichrist. We will continue the investigation today. Bro. Elias please give the class the names of the leading manuscripts from which our translations are made.

Elias. They are the Sinaitic, the Vatican, and the Alexandrine.

Leader. In order that we may arrive at reliable conclusions, I propose that we examine the readings of these manuscripts as given by Dr. Tishendorf, instead of depending on translations. Arlos please give the readings of these manuscripts of 2 Thess. ii. 3, 4.

Arlos. The only difference I find in verse three is this: the Sinaitic and Vatican substitute "that man of iniquity," in place of "that man of sin," which is practically the same. In verse 4, the change is more marked; the Sinaitic, Vatican, Alexandrine, omit the words: "as God," in the phrase: "he as God sitteth in the temple of God." So he does not sit in "the temple of God as a god among gods, but on the contrary the Divine Word says: he "exalteth himself above all that is called God or that is worshipped." A higher exaltation cannot be reached or claimed than to claim to be superior to everything bearing the name of God, to whom Divine adoration is paid. The great Jehovah is not excepted, but he "sitteth in the temple of God showing himself that he is God." He does not sit there "as God," (which words are not in these three manuscripts) but he declares that "he is God," he admits no superior.

Leader. Albert, has popery ever claimed to be superior to "all that is called God?"

Albert. Truly popery has made many assumptions but no one can truly say that they have ever claimed to be superior to "all that is called God." That little word "all" admits of none other being superior. Those who are childlike enough to receive the Word just as it is, cannot find a fulfilment of this in popery.

Leader. Lucy please give the reading of 1 John ii. 18.

Lucy. The Alexandrine substitutes the word "the" in place of "that," in the phrase: "that antichrist shall come." The definite article "the" singles out some one person as being pre-eminently "the Antichrist," just like the phrase "the Christ," singles out Jesus as that person. Now if the phrase "the Christ," can only apply to one person, the like course of reasoning must limit the phrase, "the Antichrist" to one person.

Leader. Carrie can you fit the phrase "the Antichrist" to popery?

Carrie. A personal phrase cannot apply to an ecclesiastical system, neither can a definite personal pronoun apply to a collection of 263 popes who have reigned over that church. Now if 263 popes can be called "the Antichrist," then a like number of persons may be denominated "the Christ."

Leader. Lud please give us 1 John i. 22.

Lud. The Sinaitic adds the word "both," in the phrase: "He is antichrist that denieth the Father and the Son." Please notice the personal pronoun "He" in this sentence. In what sense the personal pronoun "he," can be applied to 263 popes, I cannot see.

Leader. Sister Charlottie, can you remember any instance in which any one of these 263 popes have ever "denied" both the Father and the Son?

Charlottie. I cannot. Popery has a form of worship they pay to the "Father and the Son." The worshipper never denies or claims to be superior to the object worshipped. But "the Antichrist will deny "both the Father and the Son," and claim a superiority to both.

Leader. Our lesson must necessarily be short to-day, but I trust enough has been advanced to occupy our minds until next week.

Dear class, let us be joyful as we journey through this dark vale. Light from his prophetic Word has opened our minds to visions of coming glory which thrills the heart of the faithful believer.

Please sing hymn No. 128.

"Up, Christian soldier! slumber not,
'Tis not the time to rest,
A priceless crown is to be sought,
A land to be possessed.
For the great conflict now prepare,
If thou wouldst in the conquest share."

"Let Us Not Sleep As Do Others."

Here, beloved, is our danger. As the watch has been long, the eyes grow heavy, the whole being cries for sleep, the weary ones want rest. But it is not here. The command is not to sleep as do others. They are asleep, they are unconscious of their danger, they are saying, "All things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." They see no evidence of a change, they care not for the return of our coming Lord and King. Their hope is not our hope; they expect to go to their reward at death, we expect that Jesus will bring our reward with him. Rev. xxii. 12. Sleep is used in the Scripture to represent the condition of the dead. Jesus said, "Lazarus sleepeth." The disciples understood that he was taking rest in sleep, but Jesus said to them, "Lazarus is dead." Thus we find the term applied to our loved ones whom we call dead. They sleep, they are at rest, they are not lost. Again we find sleep in the Scriptures applied to the sinner. Says the apostle, "Awake, thou that sleepest; arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." Eph. v. 14. Here is a moral condition where death and sleep are used as in the text we have be*fore us.*

The subject under consideration is the Lord Jesus' coming and the gathering of his people to himself by a resurrection of the dead and translation of those living. Paul writes to those mourning ones who were sorrowing for their loved ones that had fallen asleep, that he would not have them sorrow as others which had no hope of a future life, and gives them the assurance that as Jesus died and rose again so also their loved ones who sleep in Jesus, God will bring with him from the dead as he brought Jesus from the dead, to die no more. Then he calls their attention to the Word of the Lord, that teaches us that those which are alive and remain unto his coming shall not prevent them which are asleep in death. For the Lord himself, the one that went away, shall come in like manner as he ascended, with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. They will have the first touch of immortality. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord. With these words he gave the weeping saints comfort. If such words will not give consolation, I cannot imagine what can. Our loved ones are asleep, not among strangers, but waiting for the morning when the whole family will awake and sing together:

"Each night we seek a temporary death,
And are unhappy if it fails to come;
And morning dawns with life in every breath,
And the tongue speaks that for awhile was dumb,
And when the longer death, which none escape,
Conquers our seventy years, or lesser more,
Is it not sleep that takes another shape,
And shall we not awaken as before?"

Yes, saith the true and the faithful. But the apostle adds, "Of the times and seasons (of that event) ye have no need for me to write, for ye know perfectly that the day of the Lord (or the Lord's day) cometh as a thief in the night. For when they shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them." Who? Those that say peace and safety. Jesus says that they who say the Lord delays his coming will have their part with the hypocrites. Such are asleep, unconscious of their condition. The event will take place suddenly, in a moment, unexpectedly, and they shall not escape, because they were asleep, not watching. "But you, brethren, are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief. You are the children of the day (the Lord's day). You are not of the night nor of darkness." For this reason let us not sleep as others do, but let us watch lest he come suddenly and finds us sleeping, with lamps in our hands but no oil in our ves*sels, and the doors be shut against* us.

Here is our danger, beloved. Sleep is creeping over us as a church. I see it, I feel it. This is the grandest of all messages that was ever given to mortal man, entrusted to earthen vessels. O let us not sleep, as do others, but be on the watch-tower, with armor on, and be ready to give the cry, "Behold he cometh." Let us be sober, not drunken with the cares or pleasures of this world. There is a solemnity which this message brings upon us when we see it as revealed in the sacred Scriptures. Here we are in mortality, and our loved ones are out of Christ and must be destroyed when that event comes. Then will come the cry for rocks and mountains to fall on them, while the heavens are being rolled together as a scroll. O sad scene, but no help then can be given. This is our weeping time." We now go forth weeping. As Jesus was, so are we in this world, ambassadors. He lived as our example, and shall we not imitate him, shall we not be sober, and hope to the end for the favor to be brought unto us at his revelation? O may we be endued with sobriety and the enthusiasm that the subject demands, that God may be glorified in us by the salvation of lost sinners for whom Christ died. Let us not sleep, as do others, but watch and be sober, and be found of him at his coming without spot or wrinkle or any such thing, and have it be said, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, enter into the joys of thy Lord."—H. H. Serey in Crisis.

A sporting man said, after hearing Ingersoll's recent oration in New York: "It's a spicy thing to laugh at for an hour, but not a very cheering doctrine to have around when there is a funeral in the house."—Christian Herald.

Telling Jesus.

The disciples, on their return from their mission, "told Jesus all things, both what they had done and what they had taught." It would be well for us at the close of each day to tell Jesus all we have done during the day. If such a habit was formed it would have a restraining influence. One is provoked to utter an angry sentence or to perform an unrighteous act. Yielding to the temptation may produce a temporary unholy gratification. It would not be a pleasant communication to make to the Savior. So of all sinful acts. The remembrance that the sad story of guilt must be told to Jesus would enable one to resist temptation.

The disciples had a report to make of their efforts to do good. No fear of self-complacency should hinder the Christian from telling Jesus what good acts the Holy Spirit has prompted and enabled him to do. Of every right act performed the Christian will say, with Paul, "Not I, but the grace of God." In telling it to Christ he is simply stating an occasion of thanksgiving and praise. Let us implore the presence of the Divine Spirit that we may have pleasant reports to make to the Savior.

Sometimes, when we have sinned, we stay away from Christ. We are ashamed to tell the story of our guilt, and ashamed to ask favors while that guilt is on our souls. We may well be ashamed to come to Christ, but nothing is gained by staying away. Our guilt will not be thereby lessened. The Divine memory never fails. The sins of former years are as fully in his view as the sins of the last hour. If we have sinned, no time should be lost. He should go at once to him who hath power to forgive sin and to cleanse from all unrighteousness. Let us begin each day with earnest prayer to divine grace to enable us to have a pleasant interview with Jesus at the close of day.

Success.

All streams, whose banks were fashioned by the creative hand, run toward deeper and broader waters. And he who is willing to follow God's laws finds not narrower but wider opportunity and blessing. The world was fashioned for man, and every element and law unite for his benefit if so be he is wise to trust the Jehovah who made them.

In these days of "short cuts" to wealth and position, men think they have outgrown the golden rule and the Sermon on the Mount; they are too smart to tie themselves to anything so old-fashioned; the result is their ships go down in the storm, and drop no anchor in the glory-land harbor.

The same hand of love and wisdom has written his will in the pages of inspiration, and in the rocks and stars, in the human body, and in all this wondrous, moving panorama of earth and sky. If his laws of sleep, food, of day and night, of gravitation and the like, are worth our following; then also are his revealed laws of love and faith and service.

The sailor committing his vessel, with its precious freight, at night, to God's law of wind and compass, is unjust to his Creator in not as readily committing his soul to his salvation and his keeping.

The farmer, burying his last peck of wheat in the earth, and trusting God's laws of dew, rain and sun and growth, to return them with bountiful increase, does no credit to his common sense if he refuses to accept God's laws for soul-culture and heavenly harvests.

Burned In.

One of the beautiful arts much in favor at present, is that of painting on porcelain. In this sort of painting, there is opportunity of displaying exquisite taste; but, in order to render the painting enduring, the porcelain must go into the fire, and the work of the artist must be burned in. This makes the figures and the coloring permanent, which may be looked upon with delight, and used for years.

Thus it is in Christian experience. The image of Jesus may be drawn upon the soul accurately and perfectly; but the fire of the Holy Ghost must pass upon it to bring out the features perfectly, and the rich colors of the graces of the Spirit. The impurities of our nature, and the features of the carnal mind, are purged away with fire; then we are transformed into the image of the beloved Savior, "the chiefest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely." The outer world, seeing us thus transformed, takes knowledge of us that "we have been with Jesus," and confesses that "every shape and every face is heavenly and divine." This is a salvation that amounts to something. Let it be burned in thoroughly.—Christian Standard.

Signficant Signs.

A correspondent of the Christian Commonwealth, referring to the signs of the last days, calls attention to the following items which relate to the year just past:

1. Terrible Fires, such as St. John's, Grindelwald, Russia, etc.
2. Hurricanes, such as Mauritius.
3. Explosions in Mines, such as in Wales.
4. Accidents and Disaster, such as by land and sea.
5. Labor War, such as that in Australia, America, Paris, England, etc.
6. Intense heat.
7. Wholesale Murders of a most diabolical kind, such as Deeming's, etc.
8. Eruptions, such as Etna and Pacific Isles.
9. Earthquakes, such as those which are occurring all over the globe, with increasing frequency and force.
10. Famines, such as those in India and Russia.
11. Pestilence, such as hunger, typhus, and cholera, (not to speak of influenza.)
12. Uprisings against dynasties, such as those in China, Afghanistan, India, Congo, Dakhomey, Morocco, Uganda, South America.
13. Religious Persecution, such as of Jews and Protestants in Russia, Protestants in Uganda and Algeria, and of Christians in China.

And then he goes on to say: "All these are causing men's hearts to quail for fear of those things which are coming on the earth, producing distress amongst nations with perplexity (Luke 21: 25, 26;) Jerusalem being still trodden down by the Gentiles, and scoffers saying: "Where is the promise of His coming?" (2 Pet. 3: 4;) Popery rearing anew its baneful head and claiming the whole earth as its vassal (Rev. 11: 7; 17; 2 Thess. 2; 11, 12; Rev. 19: 19,) and "The Mother of Abominations of the Earth," i. e., the Church of Rome (Rev. 17: 5; 18: 3.) now once more regaining its iniquitous power over the minds of deluded mortals. Everyone of the above "signs" is in consonance with the predictions of Christ and his Apostles and Prophets, and should produce search*ings of heart and humility of spirit,* whilst we obey the call to watch."

An Island Disappears.

Expedition Island is no more. Your map shows it lying on the northwest coast of Australia, about twenty-two miles from the mainland. When it flourished in all its glory, as it has since time out of memory, it was a beautiful tract of land, thirteen miles long and one and a half to two miles broad. The Swedish trader Laemstrom visited it early in the spring of 1892, and the Dutch naturalists of the Thignig gathered rare botanical specimens and collected many hundred sets of eggs, to say nothing of the many other objects of natural history, during the months of May and June last year. A vessel was sailing in those parts quite recently when the officers remarked the absence of the island. The Captain ordered that soundings be made. All around thousands of feet of water was found. Finally, upon observing that there were no signs of breakers on the former site of the island, he ordered that they sail directly across where the island had formerly been. Soundings were again taken, which resulted in finding that the island had only sunk to a depth of forty-eight feet below the surface. It was one of the largest islands on the Australian coast and its sudden subsidence is a mystery.—St. Louis Republic.

Destructive Earthquakes.

Earthquake shocks were experienced in various and widely separated parts of the Old World during January and the early part of February about the time of the disastrous disturbances in Zante.

There was a destructive earthquake in the island of Samothrace, in the Grecian Archipelago, the latter part of January. The extent of the damage done was not estimated at last reports, but all the buildings were said to be destroyed. There was a severe shock in New Zealand on Feb. 12. It was felt in both the North and South Islands, being most severe in the City of Wellington and the Town of Nelson. But slight damage was occasioned. A very severe shock was experienced on the borders of Afghanistan, near Quetta, and it had some curious features. The railway near Chaman was utterly destroyed and "the rails were twisted like corkscrews." A deep rent in the earth's surface was made directly along the old British frontier line with Afghanistan, as it existed before the English extended their dominion over the Khojak ridge to Chaman. The crack follows the old line of demarkation for miles, and the Afghans say it is a sign from Allah that the old frontier was the proper limit, beyond which the English should not go.

Contingent Fund.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to The Restitution office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be em*ployed in answering* calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

In the Phrenological Journal and Science of Health for February, fresh and notable features claim attention. Among them an appreciative sketch of President Diaz. A concise yet very graphic account of the late General Butler, is contributed by a new and skillful hand in observing character. In the department of Practical Phrenology, the fresh installments in "Heads and Faces," and "Human Pursuits" are very interesting. So much may be said also of Mrs. C. F. Wells' Reminiscences in Early Phrenological Biography. In Science of Health the editor gives a second installment of the very valuable article on the use of rectal injections. A million copies of the number should be taken by the people for this article alone. The editorial and correspondent departments are more than usually rich in suggestions. This magazine is issued at the popular price of $1.50 a year, or 15 cents a number. Address Fowler & Wells Co., Publishers, New York.

Life.

Life is a page where all must write
  Their names, each one.
There for a space to fade, like light,
  When day is done.

Some scribbling o'er the lines in haste
  Blot while they write,
While some with care the letters trace.
  In beauty bright.

So would I fain inscribe my name
  With glowing grace,
So, firm against the floods of shame
  Maintain my place.

Ruler of time, and men, and age,
  My prayer I make:
Let me keep pure life's sacred page
  For thy name's sake.

The Curse of Womanhood.

Preaching at St. Margaret's church, London, Archdeacon Farrar said:

"If drink is a curse to men, it is a deadlier curse to women. We boast that Christianity has elevated the lot of women, and so it has: but not so high as the drink fiend has held them low. Is it no shame to us, is it a matter of indifference to you that, as a plain matter of fact, the lot of thousands of women in Christian England is more degraded, more wretched because of drink, than ever it was in heathen Greece or Rome? Have you ever seen—I have—drunken or drinking women, dehumanized into beasts, fighting and tearing each other in the streets, amid a circle of dirty and drinking, degraded spectators, amid language foul enough to poison the polluted air? Have you ever seen—I have—an aged, white-haired mother lying in bed, black and blue from the fists of a brutal youth, her drunken son; or a young woman, black and blue, who has attempted suicide after the brutal violence of the drunken wretch with whom she lived? These are perfectly common sights in Christian England. Yes—shame upon our cowardice, shame upon our faithlessness—they are common under the shadow of our great Abbey, yes, under the shadows of our house of Parliament. If you want to see some of the miseries of a woman's life, lay aside your fastidiousness, and brood a little now and then over the unspeakable tragedies which the court of every magistrate almost daily reveals—infamies which would disgrace Dahomey or Ashantee, of which the wives, daughters and mothers of drunken men are shuddering victims, when the hand and foot of the drunken brute, who swore to love them, was raised to kick or to maim. If you want to know the depth of debasement to which womanhood can sink, go if you dare, into some slum of your Chistian city at midnight and see what drink does there; see women squandering for gin the money got from stinting the food or pawning the clothes of their shivering and dying children.

"'You come,' says an experienced eye-witness, 'upon scene after scene, to the grim and grotesque horror of which even a Dante could not do justice. Women with hideous faces are reeling from side to side, shrieking out snatches of ribald song. From one dark court rings a cry of "murder!" and a woman with bleeding face rushes across, pursued by a yelling madman. Far into the dark hours of the night such cries will ring: or, as you pass, you may hear a heavy fall, and then a groan, and then silence. It is only a drunken man, staggering up to his attic, who has missed his footing and fallen heavily.'

"It is comparatively little that children of drunken men and women die off like flies, sacrificed yearly in Christian England in greater numbers to your demon of drink than ever there were to the fires of Moloc. It is comparatively little that in one single English town 150 little children were overlaid by drunken mothers in one single year; it is comparatively little that more infant children are thus overlaid and suffocated every Saturday night than on any other, because on that night more mothers are drunk. What is more horrible is that so many have survived to endure, for years to come, the fiend-like cruelty of drunken parents, neglected, starved, beaten, maimed, crippled, kicked, left by drunken mothers to burn themselves to death, to fly from drunken parents in horror to sleep all night in a damp cellar, or in a neighbor's chimney; or if not this, at least to grow up dirty, repellent, depraved, thievish, with the taint of gin in their blood, and the horrid craving for gin in their constitution, to become, in their turn, drunkards and paupers, if not harlots and felons, and as ruffians, to be the retributive scourge of the society of which they have been the helpless victims."—Temperance Record.

A Costly Bottle.

One of the most cruel things which wicked men can do is to sell strong drink to ignorant heathen savages. Thousands of barrels of strong drink are sent from Europe and America to Africa to poison the benighted Africans; and of late strong drink has been sold in Alaska to the Indians, and has produced most ruinous results. The Government has prohibited such sale, and now and then a man gets what he deserves. Stephen Merritt, of New York, who visited Alaska, says he saw a man sent to prison for nine months for selling a bottle of whisky.

He was fireman on the ship in which Mr. Merritt sailed, and when he went on shore in Alaska he took a bottle of whisky which cost him a dollar, thinking to make something by selling it for a larger amount. An Indian woman bought the whisky and paid him two dollars, so he made a dollar; but he violated United States law, and soon found that he was "out of a job," and was landed in jail for nine months. Mr. Merritt and others tried to persuade the officers to let him off with a fine, so that he could keep his place as fireman where he was needed, but they refused, and so he was sent to jail. If every man who sells whisky either to the savage or the civilized in Africa, America or Alaska could be landed in jail for nine months, the people could afford to board them there, pay them a salary and take care of their families at home, and make more money by the operation than this sailor did selling a bottle of whisky for two dollars.—Safeguard.

Questions for Loves' Sake.

You rich men, what are you going to do with your money, your stocks, bonds, cattle, farms, and houses to rent? You, I mean, whose plea is for righteousness, you who look for a kingdom of God at hand. What are you doing, and what are you going to do? You will keep your wealth for a time of need, do you say? Well, what time of need do you mean? Not the time of God's judgment, when the world is in the hour of an awful crisis and agony of change? Not that, probably. What do you need money for in a time of universal convulsion?

Suppose you are fifty years old and worth $50,000. The years just ahead will shake all terrestrial things as the wind shakes an aspen leaf. But suppose it were not so. Suppose you had reasonable expectation of twenty-five years more of mortal life, and could possibly need $1,000 a year for twenty-five years. Then your odd $25,000 would be rotting and rusting all that time, and be lost at last. Also how do you know it will not go to help the degenerate sons of Belial? This makes no account of interest. Or suppose you are seventy years of age, and have hope of another ten years of an aching, decrepit life. Then $40,000 out of your stored up aggregate will be utterly lost, or what is worse, may go to serve the servants of iniquity. But many poor creatures live on $100 a year apiece, more or less, and are compelled to, and can take no outings, or rarely, to rest and recuperate.

But hold! You say you have heirs, and your money is for your heirs. Heirs, indeed! And how much will they use and enjoy of what you leave for them when you go to the grave, if that is where you expect to go? And besides, suppose your heirs have already all that heart can wish or need require. Then you are laying up your riches for the rich, and the Bible utters a woe against him that giveth to the rich. See Prov. xxii. 16. In all honesty and sincerity, I think you stand in an unsatisfactory and perilous position. You may not think so. Did not the Lord say, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon the earth," and yet yuo have laid up, and what you have so laid up you hold on to with a vise-like grip.

But you say you will make gifts wherever the Lord wants you to make them, as fast as made known to you. But you know the Lord utters no audible words of counsel and command. He has spoken in his Word, saying, "Woe to the rich, for you have received your consolation." And do you not know that man's deceitful heart gets so incased in a hardened film of selfishness that it cannot feel, and the ear becomes so extremely dull of hearing that it cannot hear the whisper of the Spirit—cannot hear it? What then?

You say you got your money honestly and are entitled to keep it. But are you entitled to keep more than you need? What Scripture says that? And Christ emptied himself though he was rich, while you have positively superfluous abundance, a great and useless excess over any and all reasonable need. The growing and deadly conflict between labor and capital ought to ring a warning in your ears. There is a charge to the plousioi by an apostle, "Go to, now, weep and howl, for your coming miseries. Ye have laid up your treasures in the last days." And do you think that by some happy providence, or some sun-streak of fortune, you will escape?

Do not think I am for one moment willing to sit in judgment on you, or any man absolutely, but I wonder at the worldliness and blindness of those who hold with such desperate tenacity to their earthly store, and at the same time actually talk and pray and cry aloud in meeting as if they were not fettered by so much as a single fibre of silk, or patch of spiders' web, in worldly interest. Now I have uttered my word of warning, in love and good-will, but in terrible earnest. Mind that! You know what Jesus said, "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God." Is it likely that in spite of the inherent difficulty of the case, they are going to ride in with shouts on some miraculously lucky wave in a time of high tide?

Let me say that what you have to do you had better do quickly, and with no scrimping, sparing hand. Are there no poor saints who need help, none that are pinched, whom you could as easily relieve as to draw a breath? If to give and give liberally hurts like drawing a tooth, it must be due to covetousness in the jaw, for giving ought to be a pleasure, as it has the promise of a blessing. I will close by submitting this question: If a man having wealth, and professing to believe in the crisis of the world now at hand, holds desperately fast to his possessions, is not one of two things inevitable—either that he is not absolutely honest and earnest in his profession, or else that his love of wealth is greater than his love and expectation of the now imminent advent and kingdom of God?—Philander in World's Crisis.

"My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not." What so well fitted to raise the drooping head of one bowed down under the burden of sorrow, as the recurrence of the Savior's gracious words, "I will not leave you comfortless; I will come unto you!" or to serve the disheartened and fainting to new effort as the lively recollection of the reassuring pledge, "My grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness?"

He that hath light thoughts of sin never has great thoughts of God.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Trust.

Just to let thy Father do
What he will:
Just to know that he is true,
And be still,
Just to follow hour by hour
As he leadeth;
Just to draw the moment's power
As it needeth.
Just to trust him, this is all!
Then the day will surely be
Peaceful, whatsoe're befall,
Bright and blessed, calm and free.

No. 3.

Let us bear in mind that the prophecies concerning the last times have special relation to the Jews. "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins (of the same people) and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy and to anoint the Most Holy." When then did the prophetic clock cease its motion? Since when has the indicator upon the dial of prophetic time ceased to record prophetic events? In other words when did the intimate relation between God and the Jewish nation cease?

The time is so conspicuously marked that it can be readily referred to. Jesus said to the Jews: "Behold your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." And when the tragic hour arrived that was to close for a time at least the relation that had been sustained since God had chosen them as his peculiar people, who were to be the repositories of all the divine knowledge that man was to receive from God, it was eminently proper that the dissolution of this long and intimate relationship should be characterized by the rending of the vail of the temple, that Sacred place where the glory of God had been manifested. And as if to solemnize the event, nature lent her significant attestation, for the indicator upon time's dial ceased for a brief period to record time as indicated by the refusal of the sun to shine. Up to this time how high was the estimation of Jesus for Jewish obligations, but now all is changed. No one sacred spot where God meets his chosen, no holy mount upon which to offer sacrifice. Desolation is written in indelible characters upon what was once so glorious, the beautiful temple destroyed and not to exist again until the once happy relation shall be restored.

Now let us briefly sketch the work that the "Man of Sin" has had assigned to him prophetically. He was to "deny both the Father and the Son" this is certainly not the work of a pious devotee of a false religion, but the act of an infidel. Even Mahomet acknowledged "the One God" but falsely claimed to be His prophet.

Let us see what else the "Man of Sin" was to do. He was to "Sit in the Temple of God." Where was the temple of God? Was it geographically at Rome? The "temple of God" either means the literal structure at Jerusalem, or it refers to the "Spiritual temple" as expressed in the words "which temple ye are" addressing the Church of the Living God. Now in which of these temples did the popes of Rome sit? Certainly not in the literal temple at Jerusalem, as it ceased to exist, and the popes were not there to occupy it if it had existed. Then it logically follows that if papal Rome sat in the "temple of God" it must be admitted that papal Rome is the "Spiritual temple" or in other words that the Roman Catholic Church is the "Church of the Living God."

With due deference to the figure Rome has cut in ecclesiastical history, fully realizing her lofty pretensions, the line must be drawn somewhere, and where else shall the believer in the sure word of prophecy draw the line if not at the point when she makes her false claim "The Holy Roman Catholic Church?" "The Successor of Apostolic Faith."

Surely we must look for the "Man of Sin" in some other temple, or else place ourselves in a very embarassing position in relation to the papal church. But when the prophetic clock again measures prophetic time, when the magnificent temple shall be reared, and the temple service again in operation "as in former or ancient years" when the sons of Levi shall pass through the refining and purifying process (through obedience) when they (the Jews) shall be once more in a position to "offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness," then as the last test of loyalty the Jews will be confronted with the bold claims of the "Man of Sin" the one of whom Jesus said, "if another come in his own name him ye will receive."

The lofty pretensions of this bold infidel acting through satanic power and impiously seated in the temple of God will fully test the loyalty of the elect of the Jews, but will be the fatal snare that will lure thousands to destruction.

Truly a purifying and refining process they will pass through, they will "not be left altogether unpunished," for God will have a tried people, whether selected from the Gentile world, or from his own chosen people. O! "how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out."

Gentile prejudices now bear the same relation to God's plan of salvation that was held by the Jews at the appearance of the Messiah. From having so long held the position of Gods peculiar, chosen, and favored people, they could not bear the idea that others outside of the Jewish nation should have any part or lot in the coming glory, and a miracle was wrought to convince Peter that it was his duty to go and tell the glad tidings to a "Gentile." And now it will require little short of a miracle to convince some Gentile believers that Jews can have part or lot in the blessings that are to be brought through Jesus Christ. Yet the proof is abundantly given that God will seal by his own divine approval a hundred and forty-four thousand of whose nationality and tribal relation there can be no doubt. It was said to the judgment angel who held the fierce winds of the mighty storm of wrath that was to sweep the wide earth over, that they should hold the winds in check until the sealing process (the refining and purifying of the sons of Levi) should be completed. Then follows the list giving twelve thousand from each literal tribe (not so many brought out by each "branch of the church") of the children of Israel. After this magnificent display of God's unmerited favor to the Jews all heaven and earth seem filled with ascriptions of praise, and the loud peon of rejoicing rings out from angelic throats saying, "Amen!! Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honor, and power, and might be unto our God forever and ever. Amen." Then among the elders arose the question as to this white-robed host. That same question was propounded through THE RESTITUTION several years ago: it was "where do the persecuted and blood-washed saints come from?" "And one of the elders answered saying unto me, what are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they?"

Yes, the same question "where do these white-robed saints come from?" Let us never question God's power to accomplish all his purpose. If he wants millions for a special purpose he can produce them by the operation of ordinary means, yet if necessary he can produce from inanimate matter all he needs. God will not accept unworthy material, as Christ told the wicked Pharisees and Sadducees that he "was able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham."

The great central truth that runs like a golden chain through the entire length of the plan of salvation is that every being who will be permitted to share in the coming fadeless glory must be thoroughly tested. No favored relation to God can set aside this obligation, and whether Jew or Gentile, loyalty to God must be tested by acts of obedience, and acts of obedience will necessarily be connected with persecution and suffering, hence, "if we suffer with him we shall also reign with him," and "all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." The Jews after the terrible punishments they have borne in the long ages of their dispensation, only suffered this as punishment not as discipline.

Discipline is brought about through obedience to law, while punishment is simply suffering the penalty of violated law.

It was in view of God's wonderful dealings with the Jewish people that caused Paul to cry out in rapture "O, the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God, how unsearchable are his judgments and his ways past finding out. For who hath known the mind of the Lord or who hath been his counsellor?"

While we may fail to see the details of the wondrous plan of salvation, and may not comprehend it in all its grandeur, it should not discourage us, for the angels desired to look into this redemption, even bearing a part in the operation of the stupendous plan, and if angels fail to comprehend in all its fulness the wonderful love of God as displayed in the redemptive scheme, what wonder if short-sighted mortals should only dimly perceive in the shadowy distance an imperfect view, as objects appeared to the recently opened eyes of the blind, where "men seemed as trees walking."

O, Father of light and love, help us that the eyes of our understanding may be anointed with the eye-salve of divine wisdom that we "may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height, and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge."

J. F. WAGONER.

(Concluded.)

Peter's First Epistle. Chapter 3.

1. Likewise, ye wives, subject yourselves to your own husbands, in order that if any even distrust the word, they may have been gained through the conduct of their wives without a word,

2. When they have observed your conduct pure in fear;

3. Whose Cosmos, let it not be the outward plaiting of your hair or a putting on of golden things or an enduement of outer-garments;

4. But the hidden man of the heart in the incorruptibility of the meek and quiet spirit, which in the sight of God is a very costly thing.

5. For in this wise did the saintly wives at one time who hoped in God adorn themselves, subjecting themselves to their own husbands.

6. As for instance Sarra obeyed Habraam, calling him a lord, whose offspring have ye become, ye who are doing good and fearing no terrorizing.

7. Ye husbands, likewise apportion honor unto the feminine implement as unto a weaker one, though also joint-heirs of a grace of life, to the end that your votive prayers be not hindered.

8. And as for the rest, be ye all agreed, sympathetic, with the friendship of brethren, truly compassionate, lowly minded,

9. Not returning evil for evil, nor reviling for reviling; but on the contrary commending (blessing) because unto this end have ye been called, that ye may inherit a blessing (or a commendation)

10. For the one who purposeth to love life and to see days, let him have caused his tongue to cease from evil and his lips from speaking guile.

11. May he have inclined away from evil and authorized good. May he have sought peace and pursued after it.

12. Because the Lord's eyes are upon justified ones and his ears are unto their supplication; but the Lord's face is against those who are authorizing (doing) evil.

13. And who is there who will do you evil if ye become zealots of the Good One?

14. If however ye do even suffer for righteousness' sake, blessed happy are ye. And fear not their fear;

15. But may ye have sanctified the Lord Christ in your hearts. Be always ready with a defense for any one who asketh you for a reason for the hope that in is you, but with meekness and fear;

16. Having a good consciousness, that wherein they are talking against you as evil-doers speaking wantonly of your good conduct in Christ, they may have been put to shame.

17. For it is a more efficient thing if it be the expressed will of God that ye suffer when doing good than when doing evil,

18. Because Christ also once for all died judicially for sins in our behalf, a just one (or justified one) for unjust ones, that he might lead (us) to God, having been put to death in flesh, and made alive in spirit,

19. In which also he went his way and heralded to the spirits in prison,

20. Who at one time were not persuaded, when the forbearance of God awaited expectantly in Noe's days, while an ark was being prepared, in which a few, namely eight souls, were preserved through water; (as an instrumentality meant)

21. Which antitypical baptismal rite now is saving us also, not being a putting away of flesh-filth, but an enquiry of a good consciousness toward God through Jesous Christ's resurrection,

22. His who is at God's right hand, having gone his way into the heavens, angels, and official-powers and hosts having been made subject to him.

COMMENT.

In these days of the self-assertion of woman it would seem to be a salutary thing for those at least who confess to the first principles of the Gospel to ponder what Peter has to say here in the name of the Lord on the relation of the wife to the husband, and of both to the Church and the State. There can be no doubt as to the first premise, I think, namely, the subjection of both, and if the husband is the head of the wife as the Christ is the head of the corporate church, there can be no more doubt that the wife is made subject to the husband, and the woman to the man in the secular order of things. As it is made just as clear that the rule of this headship must be one of love, there can be no doubt that the assertion of this headship or rule is bounded only by the limitations inhering in enlightened love. According to revelation the marriage contract in the sight of God is binding during the life of the parties to it, and can be abrogated for one cause only. If the parties to the contract for any other cause cannot agree they must agree to disagree. They cannot and do not in the sight of God by separation or pulling apart annul the contract. If for any reason the headship cannot be asserted in love and the willing subordination does not take place, or continue for any reason except the one given, there must be at least an acquiescence to the inevitable and some sort of an arrangement made to peaceably disagree.

"And as to the rest be ye all agreed" instead of "of one mind" C. V. or "like-minded" R. V. which is not the thought of the author nor the same philosophy by any means. For this is in line with the precious teaching in regard to the marriage relation, involving the same general principle to be asserted. Agree or agree to disagree. Don't quarrel or draw apart.

"Truly compassionate" instead of "tender-hearted" R. V. reminds us of "the tender-mercies of the wicked are cruel," and there is nothing truer in life. There is such a thing in revelation and God's estimate as "true-compassion" distinguished from the spurious and counterfeit and it only comes to us with grace. We don't have it by nature.

The quotation here given by Peter is not poetry and never was. See R. V. for the poetry. "If ye become zealots of the Good One," instead of "zealous of that which is good" R. V. for obvious reasons. Follow your leader in other words is the teaching, not abstract good. "Defense" instead of "answer" merely R. V.

"Having a good consciousness" instead of "a good conscience" R. V. which is equivalent merely to a conscious knowledge of good which you yourself have and not your monitor conscience for you.

"Having been put to death in flesh and made alive in spirit in which" etc., makes it clear that if Christ went anywhere he went after he had been "made alive in spirit" and this would be according to the record, certainly after the "third day" event of his resurrection or his being made alive, which is the same thing, and as there is no record of his descension since his ascension, and there is a record of his descension "to the lowest parts of the earth" before his ascension, the period during which this event must have occurred is limited to the forty days between his resurrection and ascension.

Then as he preached to sentient spiritual beings, and according to the uniform record, on this subject, human beings have no sentient or conscious being during the intermediate state between death and the resurrection, for there is no thought nor device nor any such thing in Hades (the grave)—he must have "heralded" or "preached" to "angels," disobedient angels as Peter elsewhere calls them and not to disembodied unperfected spirits of human beings as the general belief of the Church nowadays is. If the whole angelic host is made subject to the Christ and the saints, why should not the Gospel with its message of redemption and offer of mercy go to them? Christ's mission is to redeem "the Cosmos" and this takes in all that the Cosmos contains, everything that has the spark of the divine intelligence in it. Now we know that the place of confinement and thick gloom to which the disobedient spirits (or angels) were relegated by the fiat of the Omnipotent is somewhere in this Cosmos, and therefore we might expect that the offer of mercy through the Gospel would be heralded to them. As we have it stated here it was by the personal Christ, and the period at least when it occurred also made reasonably clear.

"Which antitypical baptismal rite" instead of "which also after a true likeness even baptism" R. V. for the reason that the latter is not a translation at all, but a theological interpretation very wide of the thought of the author.

"Is now saving" instead of "doth now save" R. V. for the same general reason.

CHARLES GARDNER.

Adam vs. Christ. Which is it?

Is immortality bestowed on man by the first Adam through natural generation, or is it the gift of God to be bestowed by Christ through spiritual re-generation? That it is the latter the Scriptures do plainly teach, and instead of the first Adam being the life-giver of the world, by disobedience he became its death-giver. Hence it is said, in Adam all die. The Scriptures teach that man is inherently mortal regardless of the teachings of those who are wise in their own conceits. I shall use God's word only. For proof of what I say upon this important subject, which word we are told is the sword of the Spirit. We will quote some passages of Scripture to show the nature of man as he now is.

MAN'S PRESENT CONSTITUTION.

Thou God art the potter, we are the clay. Isa. lxiv. 8. The first man Adam is of the earth, earthy. Cor. xv. 57, whose man's foundation is in the dust, Job iv. 10. Dust thou Adam, art, and unto dust shalt thou return, Gen. iii. 19. For he knoweth our frame, he remembereth that we are dust, Psa. ciii. 14. All flesh is as grass, as the flower of the fields he shall pass away, 1 Pet. i. 24.

That which is born of flesh is flesh, John iii. 6, 31. Abraham answered, which am but dust and ashes, Gen. xviii. 27. I also am formed out of clay, Job xxxiii. 6, These are only a few of the many Scriptures bearing upon this subject. But enough to show the frailty and constitution of our first parents, and being of the earth, earthy, they could not transmit to their offspring any better than they themselves possessed.

MAN INHERENTLY MORTAL.

Man is like unto vanity, his days are a shadow, Psa. xliv: 4. In the day thou eatest thereof, dying thou shalt surely die. (See Mar. Ref.) Gen. ii. 17.

Lest he (Adam) put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life and eat and live forever, Gen. iii. 22. By one man sin enters into the world and death by sin, in this way death passed upon all men. Rom. v. 12. As in Adam all die, 1 Cor. xv. 22.

What man is he that liveth and shall not see death, Psa. lxxxix. 48. Cease ye from man whose breath is in his nostrils, Isa. ii. 22. For what is your life (this present one) it is even a vapor, Jas. iv. 14. Shall mortal man be more just than God, Job iv. 17. My friend I find nothing in these Scriptures to support the heathen dogma of the immortality of the soul.

Now let us examine

MAN IN DEATH.

For this is a vital subject, as it is divine truth, only believed in and obeyed that will secure unto man immortality or endless life. Our Savior came not into the world to save immortal souls from eternal torment, but to redeem man from the state of death, of which redemption he was the firstborn to spirit or immortal life, as taught in the Scriptures of truth. We will now hear what the wise man says about the dead. See Eccl. ix. 5, 6. The dead know not anything, there is no work nor devise nor knowledge or wisdom in the grave whither thou goest. See also verses 9, 10. All go unto one place, both saint and sinner. All are of the dust. For I know that thou wilt bring me to death to the house appointed to all living. Job xxx. 23, also if a man die shall he live again! The grave cannot praise thee, death cannot celebrate thee. Isa. xxxviii. 18. In death there is no remembrance of thee, in the grave who shall give thee thanks. Psa. vi. 5, his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish. Psa. cxlvi. 34.

O spare me that I may recover strength before I go hence and be no more. Psa. xxxix. 13. These are only a few of the many passages of Scripture which show the utter unconsciousness of man in the death state. But let us inquire what is death? And here again we must take issue with the teachings of theology which says it is a separation of soul and body. But the Bible doctrine is that death is a cessation of all animate existence, a suspension of all the mental powers. And this would have been the condition of mankind to all eternity had not God in his love for the world saw fit to provide a Savior, who has become the author of eternal life to all who will accept him as the way, the truth and the life. In the study of God's word we must be willing to divest our minds of all pre-concieved ideas, and believe its teachings wherever it may lead us. This is being led by the spirit (word) of God. Christ said the words I speak unto you they are Spirit and they are life. Having now shown that Adam was created simply a living soul or being, and that he never possessed immortality, being prohibited from partaking of the tree of life, which was the only means by which he could have gained it, I will try to show in my next the source from whence it may be obtained.

S. V. REGAL.

Seed-Sowing and Fruit Gathering.

It requires much more faith and patience to be simply a seed-sower than a fruit gatherer. It is all right to sing "Bringing in the sheaves;" but, before we bring in the sheaves, fallow ground must be broken, and seed must be sown. It seems to be the lot of some to sow seed and of others to gather in the harvest. Some are all the time sowing good seed who do not gather in much fruit. Seed-sowers are tempted to think they are of no use in the world—that they are doing no good: but when the light of eternity shall break in [illegible] we will see things in a different light.

We do not know the full meaning of "Other men labored and ye have entered into their labors." We must not forget that we are not responsible for results; we are only responsible for faithful honest work. When we have done our work with an eye single to God's glory, we are quietly and patiently to leave results with him. We so fully enter into each other's labors that it is very difficult to trace our conversion to any one particular instrumentality. The faithful prayers and saintly life of a mother; the faithful Sunday School teacher; the quiet unassuming consistent life of some saint of God; have all had a share in bringing us to God. It may be that the minister gathered in the fruit, and all the rest were seed-sowers. If we are not conspicuous as fruit-gatherers, let us at least be faithful seed-sowers, and in eternity we shall have our reward.—Standard.

A certain gentleman when offered a package of infidel publications, answered as follows: "If you have anything better than the Sermon on the Mount,' the parable of the 'Prodigal Son,' and that of the 'Good Samaritan,' or if you have any better code of morals than the 'Ten Commandments,' or anything more consoling and beautiful than the twenty-third Psalm, or, on the whole, anything that will make this world more bright than the Bible, anything that will throw more light on the future, and reveal to me a Father more merciful and kind than the New Testament, please send it along."

The righteous considereth the cause of the poor; but the wicked regardeth not to know it. Prov. 29: 7.

The first point of wisdom is to discern that which is false; the second, to know that which is true.

The address of any correspondent of this paper will be sent to any one wishing it, on application.

Orangemen in the North of Ireland, to the number of 100,000, threaten to oppose the establishment of Home Rule in that country, and talk loudly of promised support from the Colonies and the United States.

Leading politicians are suggesting that $60,000,000 can be added to the revenue by raising the tax on whisky from 90 cents to $1.35 without injury to any business interests. What a business for the "foremost" human government in 1893.

It is said in a Scientific Journal of high repute that Prof. Musso, the Roman physiologist has invented a machine that will weigh a thought. It says the Professor showed by experiment that the effort of thinking causes a rush of blood to the brain; this blood-rush varying in intensity according to the thought.

There is evidence of renewed activity all along the line, and our hearts rejoice. It is when we properly realize the privilege of having been called according to God's purpose ourselves that we look about to find somebody willing or anxious to share Gods' great salvation. Yes; we rejoice greatly at the evidences of life in the Abrahamic camp. Be not weary in well doing,—you will reap at harvest time. "Occupy till I come;" is the standing order of the Captain of our Salvation.

Jesus plainly teaches in Matt. vii. 24, that it takes both hearing and doing to make a wise man. When a man merely hears and believes the Words of Jesus to be true, that will not help him. It is with the heart man believes unto righteousness. The meaning of this in plain English is that he loves what he believes to be true;—loves it well enough to obey it; loves it enough to suffer for it; loves it enough to crush out unholy ambitions; loves it enough to make a new creature of him.

"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." Bend all your energies to it. If it be worth doing at all, it is worth doing well. Your time will expire presently,—"there is no work nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave whither thou goest." You will not pass this way again; you cannot patch bad work to any purpose. Do thorough work if you have to do less. On being asked by the Surgeon General of France how often he had performed a certain operation, Sir Ashley Cooper answered 13 times. The Frenchman replied, Ah, Monsieur, I have done him 160 times." Sir Ashley said, I saved 11 out of 13, how many did you save? The other answered, Ah, Monsieur, I lose them all; but the operation was very brilliant.

Brethren and Sisters; you of the Abrahamic faith we mean, those who have taken the place of the natural branches, those who have become legal heirs of Abraham's blessing, are you praying for the peace of Jerusalem? If not where is the assurance of your prosperity? (see Ps. cxxii. 6.) surely, if like David you by faith saw yourselves standing within her gates, the city compactly built, the tribes going up to give thanks to the Lord, and the thrones of the house of David occupied by the apostles as promised, and peace within her walls and prosperity within her palaces;—Yes, surely you would pray for the peace of Jerusalem. Say, do you pray for the peace of Jerusalem? Do it, do it for the brethren of Jesus sake! They are loved for their Father's sake. [illegible] them! David prayed [illegible] the peace of Jerusalem, too, because of the House of Jehovah our God. You ought to have as much interest in that House as David did; and indeed you have, if you are one of the living stones. "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem; they shall prosper that love thee." Jesus brethren are sorely afflicted,—pray for them.

The Great Brooklyn Tabernacle is in financial straits again. Dr. Talmage says $1,040,000 have been raised for religious purposes during his pastorate; but, he says, "We must have help or stop." What does the great preacher do with all his popular lecture money? If he considers himself a co-worker with God, why does he not pay off the Tabernacle debt and quit begging if it be a good investment?

Rabbi Hahn who is lecturing every Sunday in Army and Navy Hall, believes that the future religion will have reason for its supreme guide. He bases this belief upon the unrest, and struggles, and agitations, and commotions among all denominations; and the breaking away from old creeds and confessions. Science will occupy the next place to reason, and moral culture the third place, and the work laid out for this new religion is to secure the happiness of the human race in this life. This is reformed Judaism. (?) Judaism without Judah's God and Judah's prophets, and Judah's Messiah, and the Lion of the tribe of Judah. Having practically laid aside Moses and the prophets they have no light that shines ahead, and hence have no alternative but to make the best of the present. Speaking to a Jew of this stamp once about the coming of the Messiah, he replied, that "if he come, I tell him go ahead. I stay here mit my house and lot." And yet in the face of ever multiplying proof of infidelity, the siren song of the world's conversion is sung. Evidently nothing but the sight of the Glorified Son of David will transform the Son's of Judah. The age of faith will then have passed; they can only be subjects by sight. They nestle down in America and say this is their promised land. But the God of Jacob said he would gather them,—and we expect to see him do it by natural means, or what appears to be such.

The newspapers bring us word of a "great revival" at Springfield. It says that between six and seven hundred rose one afternoon, at the First Presbyterian Church and professed conversion during the Chapman revival the past fifteen days. Revival it is called. Does it mean that these six or seven hundred were so many backsliders reclaimed? That cannot be because they professed conversion, unless, indeed, they were thus converted back again, and this would then make the third time, and there is no knowing when they will need converting again, if that be so. Did they once see how mortal and corruptible they were, and with gladness of heart accept of God's gracious offer of life in his Paradisaic kingdom,—and then give it up for something better? Did they once turn away from sin, and in obedience to faith in the gospel of the kingdom, put on Christ by baptism into the name for remission of sins, and then change their minds about it—rather be sinners than saints? Oh! no; they know nothing of the gospel of life from the dead to inherit the kingdom of God on earth; they know nothing of the conditions of the law of pardon, and therefore are not pardoned. They know nothing of the covenanted blessings, belief of which is necessary to salvation, and therefore have not believed them, will not believe them, therefore are in the class which Jesus says shall be condemned. Painful thought, but the love of Christ constrains us to say, it takes belief in and obedience to the gospel of the kingdom Jesus preached, in order to save men. This is a Chapman revival. He is capable, it seems, of arousing the dormant religious element in man, which of itself is a good thing; it will doubtless cause them to be better fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters and citizens. The grand delusion is, that they can be saved by living better than heretofore without any gospel. They cannot earn salvation in any such way. It is of God's favor they must be saved, through faith, and it must be faith in those exceeding great and precious promises by which Peter says we may be partakers of Divine nature. Would to God Mr. Chapman could illumine their minds with the light of the glorious gospel of Christ after he stirred their better parts. In any event God brings good out of this evil practice, because it makes society tolerable; but for salvation purposes it is utterly worthless.

The Woman's Seed. No. 5.

Our readers must be patient; we made up our minds how we would treat this subject before a line was written, and do not propose to change it by answering any hard questions till we are ready to do so. But we promise they shall be answered. They have many times been answered already,—answered so that objectors hardly know how to object any more; but after a time the arguments and proofs are forgotten, and the old objections are made again as if there were no difficulties at all with the objectors' views. Well, we have our own way of accounting for this state of things. When a person writes that there is "so much to be said on both sides that it is best not to discuss it, or not best to say what we believe," we think they must be wide,—very wide of the mark to think that both sides have support in the word of God; and it argues either a want of inclination to discover on which side the truth lies, or else inability to do so.

As we do not for a moment believe that so grand a subject, and important, would be taught only by a few isolated passages, so, also, we believe that it cannot be refuted by a few isolated passages. For this reason we set ourselves the task of doing what many have failed to do for themselves—mass the plain testimony, and then, if we cannot exactly see through some plain statements, we, if we have faith in God, will be careful not to make the Scripture stultify itself.

Attention is now invited to the statement of Peter in Acts ii. 22, that Jesus was "a man, approved of God by miracles and wonders and signs which God did by him, (after his thirty years' probation) in the midst of Israel." This is the description Peter gives of Him. And Paul in 1 Tim. ii. 5, speaks of him as the man Christ Jesus. And how often did Jesus call himself the Son of Man? And the statement of Peter that the miracles and wonders and signs were performed by God, is in strict agreement with the utterances of Jesus: "I can of mine own self do nothing," John v. 30; and "The Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works," John xiv. 10.

In the second chapter of Acts, Peter says God was the author of the wonders wrought by Jesus; and in the 10th chapter and 38th verse he shows how God did them by Jesus. He says, "God anointed Jesus of Nazareth," (that is where he hailed from) with Holy Spirit and power, who went about doing good, and healing all who were oppressed by the enemy, because God was with him." Clearly he performed no miracles before his anointing. There was no Jesus of Nazareth until he was born of Mary at Bethlehem and subsequently removed thither. It was at his baptism when about thirty years of age that the Holy Spirit anointing took place. See Matt. iii. 13-17. Previous to this he was the "Body prepared" Heb. x. 5, through which the Spirit manifested its power. And the 10th verse shows that it was the prepared Body that constituted the one offering. The preparation of this Body commenced with the Spirit's action on the woman of whom he was made, and by Spirit aid for thirty years he had led a sinless life, and then the Spirit was given without measure. From that time forward "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them."

When raised from the dead the human was swallowed up of the Divine, so that now, the fulness of the Godhead bodily, dwells in him. But the believer may turn to Heb. iv. 15, and see that this glorious change has not caused him to forget his past infirmities. It says, "we have not an high priest who cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." His own experience qualifies him for this exalted place, "therefore" we are told to "come boldly unto the throne of favor that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need."

Just for a moment let us think how matters would stand without this glorified Son of Man as Mediator: God is a Spirit,—what do we know of Spirit. Even the gifts of the Spirit are only familiar to us as manifestations of Spirit power. "The essence of the Spirit is as inscrutable as the person of the Father."—Prophets were acted upon by divine impulse; but what do we know about that impulse. It is a fact—we accept it and its mystery. So too, we see only the effects of the Anointed Jesus. A limited supply of the Spirit made the prophets' minds en rapport with the mind of God for the time being, and were moved to speak. A measureless effusion established such a connection between the Father and the Son that the power and intelligence of the one streams into the other. "The Father dwelleth in me." This is said of the Spirit; what the Spirit does, God does.

Supposing for the present that what we have said is accepted, let us think of God without the Son. Can we grasp him? How far can we follow out the idea of the Creator? Only a step, and then we halt. Immensity bewilders us, and infinity staggers us, and we fall back stunned, almost, at our audacity. But when we look at Jesus God's love shines forth, and we take courage. He knew all about us and anticipated all our wants, and all our frailties. Oh God, no man hath seen thee, but having not seen we love thee, because of thy infinite love in meeting us in Jesus; yes, the blessed Jesus; of whose body and flesh and bones we are members, Eph. v. 30. We will praise thee, oh God.

Editor Restitution:

It is my pleasant duty to renew my subscription to our paper, The Restitution. It affords me great encouragement while so far from any of "like precious faith," to read in its columns of the bright hopes and faith entertained by God's children, many of whom I am personally acquainted with. I with them am looking forward on bright anticipation to the day when Jesus shall return to this ungodly world, and when all things shall be made new, when he shall wipe away all sin, and establish upon the earth his kingdom, and reign king of the Most High God. Hail, Jesus of Nazareth. He is coming again, and he will save us.

I enclose $3.00 by express money order. You may place to my credit one year's subscription, and if you know of a worthy one whom you could send the paper, please do so. Yours in Christ.

C. L. Austin.

Editor Restitution:

Please notice in The Restitution the 3d Quarterly Conference of the Church of God in Southern Kan. to be held at Otto, Cowley Co. Kansas, commencing Friday Eve, March 24th, 1893. All are invited to attend. Respectfully.

Mrs. L. F. Kendall, Sec.

Editor Restitution:

The Restitution makes its weekly visits and absolutely it is a welcome visitor. Its contents are greedily devoured. Some of its articles are worth their weight in gold, especially Bro. Joblin's exposition of Thief on the Cross, it is the best exposition that I have ever seen in print.

I will take $1.00 worth of them. If 20,000 are printed they ought to be sold and distributed within 30 days. Every nail is driven in a sure place, and the next nail clinches the last one driven. Surely it is a strong hold that orthodoxy cannot demolish. May the blessing of our Heavenly Father ever rest upon the heads of all writers and readers of our highly prized paper. May they each feel the sacred influence of the everlasting arms bearing them up.

May our words, deeds and actions be of such a nature that we shall be enabled to listen to the welcome plaudit of well done. Yours in hope.

W. M. Buzzell.

Dear Restitution:

I have thought for some time I would write a few lines for the letter drawer. Hope they may cheer some one as we ourselves have been cheered by reading other letters. I feel my unworthiness and inability to write on the great subject of salvation, but when I read the following passage of Scriptures it seems to impress my mind. Awake, O sleeper, and arise from the dead and the Anointed One will shine upon thee. We see by this passage of God's holy word that it remains for us to act, to arouse ourselves and put on the whole armor of God; that the glorious light of the Anointed One may shine upon us. What greater enjoyment could we wish than to have the approving smile of the Blessed Son of God upon all our transactions in life.

I can truly say when I have been obedient to the great commands of our dear Redeemer I have felt the enkindlings of the love of God in my heart, and felt then, indeed I even esteem all things to be loss on account of the excellency of the knowledge of the Anointed Jesus my Lord. Oh, I want to be prepared to join those who will be raised up to meet the Lord in the air. Your Sister in hope.

Mrs. John Armitage.

Dear Restitution:

I have often thought I should like to write a letter for your columns, but could never get at it until now. My heart is cheered so often by reading the letters from the dear ones, whom having not seen, we love because they love and serve the same Lord and enjoy the same blessed hope. How it cheers our hearts from day to day to know this state of things is soon to be over, that Jesus is coming and coming to stay, coming to reign and remove the curse and give eternal life to those who have loved him. And now dear ones, let us give of the means the Lord has entrusted in our care, so that others may hear of this hope. It seems to me that every one who is capable of preaching the Gospel should be kept in the field instead of being obliged to stay at home for lack of means, for if they are, the Lord will hold us accountable if he has entrusted us with this world's goods. Do not wait until you have made yourselves comfortable and can spare a little as well as not, but let us make sacrifice if need be, that others may hear the Gospel. If we cannot preach we can help support those who can, and in this way it may be we can bring some precious sheaves to the Master.

I think the contingent fund a good move and will send a little to help in that way. My heart was made glad to-day while looking over Special Evangelist fund to see there was added this week $24.80. Dear sisters we have a "fund", but where is the young man to say "I will go." I do not know but some of the sisters will have to respond, for I believe there are those who are capable. May the Lord direct so that his name may be glorified by many who are yet in the broad way, is the prayer of your sister.

Adaline West.

Dear Household of Faith:

We say we believe that Jesus is soon coming. That we are living in the last days, and claim to have the faith, and hope of the gospel.

We hire ministers to proclaim his coming. We send papers and books and tracts to our friends, and every one we think might become interested in the second coming of the dear Savior and become his followers. This is all right and what a child of God is expected to do and must do. But there is one very important matter I fear many neglect. The Scriptures teach that he that hath this hope, the hope of seeing Jesus and being made immortal, at his appearing, Purifieth himself even as he is pure. When we look at the life of Jesus, and the example we are to follow in order to be an heir with him, there is a great work in us to be accomplished before we become fit subjects to inherit the blessings of God, and be his children. We may have all faith, we may believe all that God's word teaches, and yet our hearts be corrupt in his sight, and as Paul says, if we are not very careful, we ourselves may become a castaway. There are many things we must do, and many things we must not do. But we must have the Spirit of Christ or we are none of his, that is certain, and if we have the Spirit of Christ dwelling in us richly, we can overcome. If we ever expect a home in the kingdom, we must purify ourselves, for all things that are impure are to be cast out. Jesus says, that at his coming, many shall say, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name done wonderful works. But he will confess unto them "I never knew you." Depart from me. Brethren and sisters, Jesus does not want merely lip service. But he wants heart service. Our hearts must be pure in his sight, else our petitions will be in vain. A true Christian's influence, is easily seen, every one that comes in contact with them feels their influence for good, and why? Because they shed a hallowed light around their pathway, that penetrates the hearts of others, and causes them to see that the religion of Jesus, is indeed beautiful. Oh that we may be pure in his sight.

Awaiting news from Egypt

It cannot be that many more days will pass without some definite, perhaps sensational, information about Egypt. Thursday there was a distinct excitement in London's financial and political circles over the news that the Seventh Dragoons instead of coming home from India, as expected, had stopped and debarked at Alexandria, and that a battery of field artillery is under orders to start Monday from Aldershot to the same place. This means that the English garrison in Egypt has doubled its infantry, quadrupled its cavalry, and put in artillery where there was none before, which is a widely different thing from the slight increase of strength Rosebery spoke of a month ago.

On top of this came the intelligence that a medical examination was ordered in the foot guards here to test the number of men fit for service in Egypt. The papers announced that questions would be put to the Secretary of War last Thursday night, and in the lobbies of the House at the dinner hour an important Egyptian announcement, and probably a debate as well, were looked forward to. But, as it turned out, no question was asked and no paper has whispered a word about Egypt since. This is obviously the result of an arrangement on a representation from the government that the discussion would be prejudicial to national interests, and makes it all clear that something is in the wind.

Of course the French Foreign Office must ask an explanation of this remarkable increase of the army of occupation on the Nile. It will do so with all the more confidence since the Panama business is visibly petering out in the public interest, and the feeling is gaining ground that men like Freycinet and Floquet have been kicked and pommeled out of political life without adequate proof of their guilt. They, with Clemenceau, certainly made out a tolerable hypothesis yesterday that they were innocent. This popular weariness of the whole thing, with a not unlikely reaction in favor of the more prominent of its victims, will make it all the easier for the quai dorsay to step in and claim public attention for an international grievance against perfide Albion.

These signs of impending strain will be in themselves enough to warrant the triple alliance an anxiety, but each member of that more or less shakey combination has special and sore worries of its own. All Italy is in sulks over the apparent conspiracy of its politicians to bury the banking scandal, and vents its petulance through the papers in sneers at Germany and open denunciations of the ultramontane Austrian court. It cannot be said that there is any French rapprochement party. Indeed it is hard now to label any Italian party with a definite policy, but the public feeling of the country for the moment is disposed to snarl at everything its politicians of all parties have done, and at the triple alliance most of all.—Chicago Tribune.

Where the Gold is.

At the close of 1891 the seven principal banks of Europe held $635,000,000 of gold, while at the close of 1892 they held $750,000,000. They gained $115,000,000 of gold, while the United States lost about $60,000,000. In this same period the seven European banks added $10,000,000 of silver to their holdings, while we gained $40,000,000.

Europe, the United States, and Australia had at the end of 1892 in silver $957,850,000, in gold $1,788,338,000. The world's gain in gold in the year was $178,332,000, in silver $58,805,000. Of Europe's gain of gold we supplied some $60,000,000, and the rest according to Mr. Ottomar Haupt, was mostly from the mines. India sent some gold and China some. "We evidently have to deal," said Mr. Haupt, "with a constant increase of the visible gold stocks in the leading countries, except in the United States, where a false monetary policy drives the more precious metal out of the country."—New York Stockholder.

Austria's Emperor to Abdicate.

Paris, March 10.—The Figaro states that it has received grave news from Buda Pesth. It is to the effect that Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria is about to abdicate in favor of his brother, the Archduke Charles Louis. Should this prove to be true great changes are impending in the world of European politics as the new Emperor is strongly in favor of an alliance with Russia.

For the Young Christian.

Do not consider the Christian life completed now, but only begun.

Do not depend upon your emotions for evidence of your piety.

Do not expect your experience to be just like that of some one else.

Do not expect the fulfillment of all the promises at once, "Patient continuance in well-doing" is a necessary virtue, and will find its reward.

Do not expect to be a successful Christian without observing the injunction, "Watch and pray."

Do not expect to be really happy unless you are diligent in the Master's vineyard.

Do not accept any standard as worthy of imitation, save that of Jesus Christ.

Do not be a periodical Christian; your privilege, as well as your duty, is to be "always abounding in the work of the Lord."

Do not fail to also incite others to diligence in the Master's work; the King's business requires haste. "Do with thy might what thy hands find to do," etc.

Be not discouraged, although you are deficient in all these things; the province of the Christian is to overcome.—S. H. Potter.

THE SPECIAL EVANGELIST FUND.

This fund is raised and controlled by the Sisters, for the purpose of placing some young man in the field as a proclaimer of truth. Hereafter in making donations to this fund please say whether or not you intend to give a stated amount regularly each quarter. This work is continuous, and quarterly contributions are asked for, though single time gifts are very welcome. Send all monies for this fund to Mrs. Eva L. Underwood, Plymouth, Ind.

Contingent Fund.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to The Restitution office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

Our Coming Lord.

Messiah comes, and comes to reign
On earth as King and Sovereign Lord.
The world will not this truth sustain
But claim he'll come with flaming sword.
He comes they say, and with him brings
The end of all terrestrial things,
But we still sound the Gospel call,
And say to one, and say to all,
Behold! He comes, and comes to reign
As King on earth, His righteous claim.

He comes, he comes—Yet some will say,
Messiah reigns with us to-day.
Mid false alarm we still proclaim,
Messiah comes, and comes to reign.
The Holy Ghost to man was given,
But Christ the Son is still in heaven.

He comes, he comes, but not as when
He came to save rebellious men,
To tread the wine-press all alone,
To conquer death, for sin atone,
He comes to spread his trophies wide,
To call his Church, and own his bride,
To share the gifts for victories won,
And claim his right to David's throne.

He comes, he comes. Ye heavens give way,
Ye golden gates his Word obey,
Ye Heavenly Host in triumph sing,
And own his holy right to reign.
Let all the heavens, let all the earth,
Let all that own Messiah's birth
Join in one song and ever sing
That Christ will come and reign as King.

He comes, he comes, prepare the way
Ye saints of God—Make no delay,
Be ready, on the watch-tower stand
And sound alarm throughout the land,
And tell to all Emmanuel's fame,
And say, behold, he comes to reign.

He comes, he comes, who dare deny
God's Holy Book of Prophecy.
Ah, yes, he comes, and in his train
His twelve apostles come to reign.
The tribes of Israel one and all
With weeping Judah through his fall
Will see the Lord, and own him King,
And shout, Amen! The Christ shall reign.

He comes, the King Triumphant comes
With marshalled host and jeweled crown.
No wreath of thorns around his head,
Or mocking robes with him is found,
No garments dyed from Edom red,
Or Bozrah's rugged road to tread.
No sighs, no groans, no bloody sweat,
Or calumny from foes beset.
But see, he comes in glory bright,
Angels rejoicing with the sight,
And earth's Redeemed exulting sing,
Hail! Blessed Savior, Conquering King.

Yes, Jesus come! To saints how dear.
Effulgent light that dims the sun,
Ten thousand suns cannot compare
With God's great light to every one,
And yet the sinner flees away
With screams of madness and dismay.

Too late! too late, is their sad wail,
Our doom is more than we can bear,
No heaven, no home, no Savior's smile,
No Father's voice, or Christian's prayer,
No Mother's kiss, no friendly word.
Too late, I'm lost, my groans unheard.

The Lordly Monarchs steeped in pride
With pompous words must step aside,
Must bring their swords and plowshares make
Their spears to pruning-hooks translate,
And learn that all of earth is vain
Since Christ is come, and come to reign.

An American Theocracy Contemplated and Considered.

"Theocracy" is derived from Theos-God, and Kratos-power. It signifies God's government. To say that a government is a Theocracy is to say that God administers the government. Such a government would be a good government, a government administered in righteousness.

The people under such a government would, if obedient to the king, be a happy people, all enjoying their "inalienable rights," would be a free people.

A theocracy once existed upon this earth; but it did not exist in America: it existed in Palestine, in Asia. The subjects of that theocracy were the descendants of "Israel," the grandson of Abraham. The history of this theocracy is in the Bible. The history of the people begins in Genesis and continues through all the succeeding books to Esther. God delivered the Israelites out of Egypt and having brought them to Mount Sinai proposed to enter into a covenant with them in order that he might be their king, and that they might be his royal people. He said to them through Moses, his minister and their leader, "If you will obey my voice indeed and keep my covenant, you shall be to me a peculiar treasure above all people of the earth, for all the earth is mine, ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, a holy nation." Ex. xix. 5, 6. If they accepted this proposal they accepted Jehovah as their ruler, and consequently entered under a theocratic form of government. They were not compelled to accept it. They did accept it however, and of course accept it voluntarily, promising to "obey his voice" and keep his covenant. He gave them his law of ten words, or commandments, his statutes and judgments; he selected the priestly tribe; caused the tabernacle, "sanctuary," to be built; gave the law concerning all the services of the Priests and Levites in and about the tabernacle, arranging all according to his own will and pleasure. He brought them into the land of promise, disposed the nations dwelling there, and established them in the land. Had they kept their covenant with Jehovah they would have been the happiest people on earth. They would have been afflicted with none of the diseases that afflicted other nations: there would have been no withdrawing of the early and latter rains: no failure of their crops; no diseases among their flocks: no extreme poverty among the people; no strife between labor and capital; no oppressing the hireling in his wages: and there would have been employment for all. Their king would have protected them against all their enemies. But they were disobedient, disloyal to their king. Instead of worshipping Jehovah they worshipped the false gods of the surrounding nations. They committed the "abominations of the heathen." Reproved from time to time by God's prophets they continued in their sins.

To be like the nations around them they asked their prophet for a king. A king was granted them, but finally under the administration of their kings they became so corrupt that Jehovah drove them out of the land, destroying the kingdom. Before fully accomplishing this he said by the prophet to the reigning king, "Thou profane wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come when iniquity shall have an end. . . Remove the diadem, and take off the crown. I will overturn it, overturn it, and it shall be no more until he comes whose right it is, and I will give it him." Ezek. xxi. 25-27.

He overturned the kingdom by the Babylonians: he overturned it by Antiochus Epiphanes; He finally overturned it by the Romans, and it will "be no more" till the rightful heir, God's Son, and David's seed, Jesus the Christ, comes to take David's throne, and then it will be given to him.

This is the only theocracy that has ever existed in this world. It is the only one that ever will exist till Christ returns from heaven. Yet there is in this country a large and influential class of teachers claiming to be Christ's ministers, who are teaching the necessity of a theocratic government for this country.

In the absence of the king from the earth there can be nothing but a false theocracy in this country or in any other country. A false theocracy existed for over a thousand years in Europe. Religious liberty under its rule did not bless the world. The blood of the "heretics" was copiously poured out. The bishop of Rome claimed to be the vicegerent of Christ, and as such, to have the right and authority to rule all nations,—to crown kings and uncrown them, at his will and pleasure.

The "reformation" came, revolution followed, and in the political commotions, the pope lost his political power. The ten-horned beast threw its rider. Rev. xvii. 16.

America was settled, and in process of time a government was established on the great fundamental principle that "All men are created free and equal, and endowed with certain inalienable rights; among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." The constitution defines and limits the powers of Congress, and in the first amendment expressly says, "Congress shall make no laws respecting the establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." This government then is not a theocracy. It was the intention of the framers of the constitution that church and state should be kept entirely separate. No church power was to lord it over the consciences of men, and through the civil power, enforce their religious opinions and dogmas. Every citizen was to have the right to think, believe, and act for himself, religiously. This is right, and the people have enjoyed their liberty.

"The Star-spangled banner, O long let it wave, O'er the land of the free, and the home of the brave."

But a theocracy for this country is contemplated, contemplated by those who ought to know better, by the clergy who ought to understand the kingdom of God.

I have before me two leaves of a paper entitled "The Christian State." Now a Christian State is a state that belongs to Christ; and a state that belongs to Christ is a theocracy. On one side of one of the leaves is a "Call for a National Conference on the Christian Principles of Civil Government." The Call is signed by "Felix R. Brunot President of the National Reform Association," and "T. P. Stevenson, Corresponding Secretary." The "Call" occupies one page of the paper. The following is a copy of a portion of it. "If Christianity is to be dominant in our national life, the Christian citizens of the nation must stand and act together on a platform of sound principles, for definite ends. These are found we believe in the principles and objects of the National Reform Association. It bases its work on the fundamental truth that the Lord Jesus Christ is the actual and rightful Ruler of nations and governments as well as individual men. It stands for the maintenance of our Sabbath laws, for the Christian elements in our public education, for an avowedly Christian policy in our dealings with the liquor traffic, with the Indian and Chinaman on our own soil, and with other nations, for the Christian law of peace and arbitration, and for the reformation of our marriage and divorce laws in accordance with the law of Christ. It seeks such religious acknowledgements in our National Constitution as shall bring this great instrument into harmony with the most of our State Constitutions, and place all the Christian laws on an undeniable legal basis in the fundamental law of the land. These principles and measures have been approved by more than a quarter of a century of discussion, and it is believed that they are a thoroughly unsectarian, non-partisan platform on which the Christian citizens can stand together for the Christian reformation of the government. Without committing any one who accepts this invitation to any specific measures, the National Reform Association invites all who believe in the authority of Jesus Christ over the nation, and the supremacy of his more moral laws, to meet in Conference, in connection with its annual meeting for 1892, in the city of Philadelphia, on the 6th, 7th, and 8th days of December next.

Pastors who receive this call are requested to bring it before their churches and secure the appointment of delegates. All Women's Christian Temperance Unions; Sabbath Associations, and Committees; Young Men's Christian Associations; Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavor, and all organizations for Christian and reformatory work are also invited to send delegates. The organized Christian forces of the country are the natural legitimate constituency of this movement. The questions to be discussed are such as interest all good citizens, and the principles advocated are such as underlie every movement of reform."

From the foregoing it is plain to be seen that there is quite a combination of "forces" the object of which is to reform the government, and change it into theocracy. At the head of this combination is the "National Reform Association." "It bases its work on the fundamental truth that the Lord Jesus Christ is the actual and rightful ruler of nations and governments, as well as of individual men." Not only, according to this, is Christ the "rightful ruler" of nations and governments, but is the "actual" ruler; that is, he is the real ruler, is the ruler at the present time.

When did Christ become the actual ruler of the nations composing the Roman Empire? Certainly not when the pagan emperors were in power. Nor could it have been when Constantine and Licinius issued the edict of religious toleration, 313 A. D. It could not have been until Constantine became sole master of the Roman world, and established Christianity as the religion of the Empire. If that act made Christ the actual ruler of the Roman nations, he became so through the ambition of Constantine who was a semi-pagan and the worldly policy of the bishops who were but little, if any, better than he. But suppose Christ became ruler through Constantine united with the bishops, how long did he continue to rule the Roman government? Until the papacy was established, and then, unless the pope became his vicegerent, he ceased to rule the nations of the Roman Empire. But if the pope was not Christ's vicegerent, and if Christ was reigning before the pope, then the pope must have dethroned Christ. If the pope was Christ's vicegerent, then Christ ceased to reign when the pope lost his political power. But how is this with regard to the United States? Is Christ the actual ruler of this nation? If so, why do these men seek to reform the government? If Christ is ruling the government it is an insult to him to seek to reform it: for if he is ruling it, it is executing his will. But they do not think that he is ruling this government; for they want to have all "Christian laws," Christ's laws, acknowledged by the constitution, and placed on an "undeniable legal basis." This would not be necessary if Christ were ruling this nation; for if necessary it would have been done at the formation of the government. Strange that Christ did not see to this important matter at that time and have himself acknowledged in the constitution as the "actual and rightful ruler;" and have his laws made the basis of all laws in the land: and then he might have been ruling the nation all the time, and there would have been no need of the formation of a "National Reform Association," having for its object the placing of Christ at the head of the government, with his laws on an "undeniable legal basis in the fundamental law of the land:" no need of a great Conference of the Christian citizens to meet at Philadelphia to adopt measures to crown Jesus king of the United States, in 1892 and 1893.

It seems that the state constitutions, with a few exceptions do not need to be amended; for the "Association" seeks such religious acknowledgement in the National Constitution as shall bring this great instrument into harmony with most of our state constitutions, and place all the Christian laws, institutions, and usages, of our government on an undeniable legal basis in the fundamental law of our land."

A change in the National constitution such as will bring it into harmony with most of the state constitutions will accomplish the grand object, and make Christ the actual ruler of the nation. Wherein the state constitutions are out of harmony with the national constitution we are not informed. But the state constitutions appear, with a few exceptions, to meet the approval of these great reformers. The reformers do not tell us in their "call," what the "Christian laws" are. But whatever they may be in the estimation of these gentlemen, the placing of them in the national constitution would be putting into the hands of Congress the power to enforce those laws by legislation; and the first amendment of the constitution "would be set aside; and religious liberty would have no safeguard in the "fundamental laws of the land." Can these "National Reformers" be trusted with our liberties? When they shall have influenced Congress and the states to place the "Christian laws" in the constitution of the United States, will they not influence congress to enforce those "Christian laws" by penal statutes? Unless they do that, what will be gained? How can Christ, on National Reform "principles," rule the government, unless the government enforces his laws?

Though we do not know all of the Christian laws, which these gentlemen want the civil power to enforce, we do know one of them which they consider very important; and it is the Sabbath law. Most of the state governments have "Sabbath laws." They want a National Sabbath law. They teach the people that Christ changed the Sabbath from the seventh day of the week to the first day of the week. Though they have no evidence in the Bible to prove their doctrine, yet they affirm that it is true. The Bible says plainly, "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." They declare that the first day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God. They claim that they want God's Sabbath law enforced. The truth is they want their interpretation of God's law enforced. They want the Sabbath controversy settled by the authority of congress compelling submission to the will of those who dogmatically assert that Sunday is the Sabbath of the Lord God of Israel. The very fact that they seek to enforce their interpretation of Scripture by such means, proves that they are at heart a set of tyrants. They know that the carrying out of their measures would oppress their fellow citizens who keep the seventh day. No matter. Year after year they go on industriously and ingeniously working to carry out their purpose, to place their "principles" in the fundamental law of the land, so that they through the legislative power of the nation, may rule the American people as they please; and all under the guise of making Jesus the "actual ruler" of the nation. We might just as well be subject to one tyrant as to a multitude.

A Question for Bro. Wagoner.

Before propounding the question let me remark that I am well pleased that Bro. Wagoner is going to give us a series of articles on prophecy. I believe him to be not only an able but a conscientious Bible expositor. A great number of students besides our Bro. Wagoner, fail to see that Rome in the past has filled the prophecies relating to the fourth beast excepting in a very limited manner. That portion which relates to its Satanic character, the ten horns, and the little horn, expositors have to use the "saw and hammer" pretty liberally to make a fit.

With regard to the ten horns the Bible never speaks of them except as a confederacy. Whenever we speak of the United States, it is always understood that we speak of a confederacy of forty-four States.

If we speak of Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, etc., it is understood that we are speaking of separate members of this confederacy. So likewise when the Bible speaks of the ten horns it means a confederacy of ten kings, and not separate members of the confederacy. Every act they perform is done as a confederacy, and never as separate members of the confederacy, as our States sometimes do. History furnishes no account of such a confederacy existing either in the past, or at the present time, on the old Roman territory. Remember that when this confederacy does exist, the God of heaven will set up his kingdom in the days of these ten kings.

A lecturer recently told his audience that the ten kings took away the temporal power of the Pope in 1870. Now we know very well that no ten kingdomed confederacy did that work, but it was solely the work of one king, viz.: the King of Italy. It will take more than a "saw and hammer" to make ten kings out of one.

A careful study of prophecy will show that most of the work of the fourth beast, the ten horns, and the little horn will be accomplished within the seventieth week—seven literal years. During the last half of this week the prepared Bride will be hid in the "chambers."

Now for the question. Bro. Wagoner seems to think that the fourth beast has not yet appeared. If we read Dan. vii. 23, 24, we see that the ten-horned beast is the fourth beast. In Rev. xiii. 1, we again read of this ten-horned beast with seven heads. Verse 2, shows that this has in its make up "a leopard," "a bear," and "a lion," the three beasts which preceded it. In the third verse we find one of the "seven heads" "wounded to death." In chapter xvii. 10, we read with regard to the seven heads, that at the time John wrote this "Five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not come." In verse nine it also speaks of the seven mountains representing the seven heads, but it must relate primarily to the "Seven Kings," as it would be inappropriate to speak of a mountain being "wounded to death." Now, Bro. Wagoner, how could six of the seven heads of the beast have already appeared on the beast in John's time, if the beast has not yet made its appearance?

Again, in chap. viii. 8, the beast is described as having three distinct stages in its existence, viz.: "the beast that was, and is not, and yet is." The Sinaitic and Alexandrine manuscripts read in place of the words: "Yet is," "and shall again be present." Hence it would read thus: "the beast that was, and is not, and shall again be present."

Please show how these three periods in the history of the beast harmonizes with the thought that the beast has not yet appeared.

Myself and others will look with interest for your answer.

Yours in the blessed hope.

Who is My Mother, and My Brethren?

Then one said unto him, Behold thy mother and thy brethren stand without desiring to speak with thee. But he answered and said unto him that told him, Who is my mother? and who are my brethren? And he stretched forth his hand toward his disciples, and said, behold my mother and my brethren! For whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother, Matt. xii. 47-50. Again Mark iii. 31-35. There came then his brethren and his mother, and standing without, sent unto him, calling him, and the multitude sat about him, and they said unto him, Behold, thy mother and thy brethren without seek for thee. And he answered them saying, who is my mother, or my brethren? And he looked around about on them which sat about him, and said, behold my mother and my brethren! For whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother, my sister, and mother. Is that enough proof to convince us who are brethren? Is proof from the Son of God all-sufficient for us all? Is a false teacher my brother? Let us hear Jesus again, Matt. xv. 9. But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men, Is a man that teaches doctrines and commandments of men, my brother in Christ? Has he been immersed into Christ? Is he in the family of God's dear children? Has he been adopted into the family of God's dear children? Or rather is he not without Christ, being an alien, a stranger from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world. Is a man without Christ, without hope, without God, my brother? I can say no. I do not want any such brethren. I will work hard to teach them the gospel, and when they are immersed into Christ, I can then take them by the hand and say, Brother, Sister, now arise and walk in a new life. But as long as a man persists in teaching going to heaven at death, he is an alien, and if I invite him to my house and call him brother, I am bidding him God's speed. Then I am a partaker of his evil deeds. 2 Epistle of John, if there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not unto your house, neither bid him God speed, verses 10-11. Will this help to settle who our brethren are? If I want a man to stay in an error then I will call him brother while in that error, and he can say in truth, I will stay where I am, for those people called the Church of God call me brother, and if I am a brother in Christ with them then I will stay with the Methodist people, for they are more numerous, and I can be a brother in any church or all churches, is their safe ground.

But he answered and said, Every plant, which my Heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up. Let them alone; they be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch. Is the case named here brethren, and the teachers and taught all going to the ditch? Let us teach them first the word of God more perfectly, and if they accept the gospel of Christ, then induct them into Christ. Then they are no longer foreigners of, but fellow citizens of the household of God, and are built upon the foundation of the Apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone. I quoted from Matt. also Matt. xv. 13-14. See also Luke vi. 39. Paul says if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature, old things have passed away. Behold all things are made new. In Christ you say, Paul, how do men get into Christ? As many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. Now brethren if I am not on safe ground I want some of you to set me right, for it is truth I want. I can't with what Bible light I have got, brother men that are teaching false doctrine. I am acquainted with many in my travels that believe the truth as we teach it, and love the truth, and do intend to obey, do we call them brethren and sisters before they are obedient? You say no, and why I ask? You say they have not obeyed. Well has that false teacher obeyed? No. I would much rather brother one who believes the gospel, than one that is a perverter of the gospel. Oh let us be consistent. What preaching I do will be all straight Bible, no compromising of God's Word. Jesus said the words I spake shall judge you in the last days. Preach the word says Paul. Speak as the oracles of God, says Peter. Brother none out of Christ. We want to accept Christ as our leader, and walk worthy of our high calling in Christ Jesus, and when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, then may we appear with him in glory.

Editor Restitution:

Dear brothers and sisters, after a long time I will through the columns of The Restitution, let the brethren and sisters know that I am not laying idle. I am busy all the time, I have just returned from Jasper Co., Mo. A little town called Medoc where our beloved Bro. Hiram Marrow lives, one that has stood the storm quite awhile. Well we had a good meeting, one long to be remembered. I preached 13 discourses, held them three Bible Classes something like Pine Woods Bible Class. Baptized three very intelligent ladies, that makes 7 ladies this fall and winter, three married ladies and four single, and the beauty of it is they did not come in through excitement, but through their intelligent study of the Word. We had the best order, and the best attendance I have seen for many a year. All seemed anxious to learn the truth. One lady when she made it known that she was now ready to obey, she got up on the rostrum and told the people that she had read herself into the truth, and that she was perfectly calm, and that they should not do as she did, wait until they were 42 years old, better start as soon as they hear the gospel, to start when young. Well brethren, I am out as an Evangelist, I work for Jesus and his cause and [illegible] if his children open up a way and want me to come, I will go. The time is short, let us be up and doing while it is called day. At last the night of death will overtake us. The Macedonian cry is gone out, come over and help us. But who will go. I will if the brethren will untie my hands so that I can go. I am like Rebecca was, I will go. Many are called but few are chosen. Well who will be chosen? The one who will make his calling and election sure. We have more to do than to go to church; and hear preaching and then go home again. We are to carry this good message out to others who never heard the gospel, by our means that God has placed in his hands. We must not be selfish, settle down in one location and be satisfied with that just so our friends have the gospel preached to them; it is our duty to sound out the word of life. Well to come back to our meeting. All were loathe to see our meetings close. Strangers came to me and said, Well, when will you come back again. Old men and that members of the M. E. C., said that they never saw the like for order at Medoc. Well, may the good Lord be with them till we meet again is my prayer.

John Foore.

The very certainty of prophecy should induce to its faithful study. "Hath he said, and shall he not do it?" "These are the true sayings of God," declared the angel who opened the prophetic vision to John upon Patmos. The more fully we can become permeated with the conviction of the certainty of prophecy, the higher will be our elevation and enrichment. Nothing is so stimulating to the devout mind as to mark the footprints of God along the highways of the centuries and the distant uplands of coming ages.

Late Explorations in Palestine.

United States Consul Merrill at Jerusalem has written interestingly to the State Department about archæology in Palestine and around Jerusalem. He says:

"The only systematic exploration that has been carried on the past year or, in fact, that has been allowed by the Turkish Government has been done by an American acting for the English society known as the Palestine Exploration Fund, at Tell el Hesy, generally supposed to be the Hachish of the Old Testament, which was besieged by Sennacherib, and was of sufficient importance to be sculptured on slabs in the national galleries of Nineveh. This "Tell" is, as the word means, a mound of earth and ruins, and an effort has been made to remove it entirely bit by bit in order to ascertain its structure and archæological contents. As is usual in such cases, successive layers of civilization or of building have been unearthed, and a variety of bronze implements, stone weights, and other relics have been found; but the most interesting "find" was that of an Assyrian inscription, thought to be of as early a date as 1400 B. C. It seems to have been addressed to the Governor of the place, who was afterward murdered by his own subjects.

Many of the discoveries that have been made about Jerusalem within twenty years past have been made by accident. The ground sinks down, a hole appears, and that leads to an examination, which results in a valuable addition to our archæological knowledge of the city. This was the way the magnificent ground plan and beautiful mosaics, covering 400 or 500 square feet of St. Stephen's Church, near the Damascus gate, were first brought to light. This was built by the Empress Eudocia, wife of Theodosius the younger, A. D. 460; and the spacious tomb chambers which she cut out of the solid rock near the church, and in which she was buried likewise, became known by accident.

During the last year a hole was discovered in a piece of land southwest of the city. A man went down in it to see what he could find, and large tombs and beautiful sarcophaguses were soon made known to the world. In connection with other archæologists, I have for many years tried to locate what Josephus describes when he is marking out the line of the wall of circumvallation which Titus, during the siege of Jerusalem, A. D. 66-70, threw around the city as "the monuments" meaning the "tomb" of Herod (Wars V., 12, 2.) He gives but few general indications, points or objects well known at the time, and that of these "monuments" should be just about where this wonderful find has been made. I suppose Josephus had in mind Herod Agrippa II., and not Herod the Great, who was not buried in Jerusalem. The "rolling stone at the door" of the sepulcher, six feet in diameter and twelve inches thick, the ornamentation on the sarcophagus, the character of the masonry, and some other bits of evidence, lead me to believe that this is the very monument to which Josephus referred.

Many modern scholars in the department of Palestinean archæology, having abandoned as untenable the traditional site of the Holy Sepulcher as the place of the crucifixion and burial of our Lord, have fixed upon the hill above Jeremiah's grotto, 300 yards north of the Damascus gate, as the site of the crucifixion. Adjoining this hill, which is covered with Mohammedan graves, is a large garden controlling the face of the hill, which is rock for 150 yards.

Excavations at different times in this garden have shown that six or more feet below the surface of the ground there exist interesting ruins, and in the rock itself there is a remarkable tomb, which has recently attracted much attention. An effort has been made the last year to purchase the garden, with its appurtenances, place it in the hands of a general committee, so that it should not be in the control of any particular religious sect, have excavations made, and everything that might be found preserved and exposed for the benefit of all who take an interest in such matters. The negotiations were, it was thought, successful and the money ready to be paid, but very recently there has come a hitch of some kind, so that after all the project may fail.

In one American cemetery on Mount Zion I was overseeing the digging of a certain grave, and at the depth of four feet we came upon large blocks of stone. I tried to dig in two places near the first, but with similar results. At last we dug the grave elsewhere and subsequently I employed men to remove the earth from the stones referred to, and at that point and at two others where I made examinations I found the remains of a large building, which, I judge, was a church. These foundations of pillars were on a pavement of six or seven feet below the surface of the ground, and it is a curious fact that wherever we attempt to dig a grave in that yard we come at the depth mentioned upon human bones and skulls. It seems shocking, but as the ground is full of such remains there is nothing to be done. This filling in must have been done long ago, for this ground has been American property since about 1850. I hoped to have walled in in these finds, so that they might always be exposed, but this was too expensive for my private means, and I have partially covered them and marked the places, so that they can be avoided whenever it is necessary hereafter to dig graves.

What is Best for Us?

A great many of us fancy that we know what is best for us, and that if matters with us were a little or a great deal different from what they are then they would be right.

A physician was thus discoursing a few days ago to one of his patients: "I dare not prescribe for myself or my family. When a man comes in, as you do, a stranger to me, I can look him over and judge quite accurately as to what he needs to have done for him. But I can't look myself over in that impartial way, or my wife or my children. I have been in practice in this city fifteen years, and I have a list of forty-two physicians within my personal knowledge who in that time have died from doses prescribed and administered to themselves by themselves. Suppose one-half of them to have been intentional suicides, and that is a large supposition, there remain twenty-one deaths resulting from taking the wrong dose. I dare not prescribe for myself."

Most who read this column believe in an over-ruling Providence, that is mindful not only of the large affairs of life, but of the small as well: in a God that rules the atoms no less than the starry worlds around us, and subjects everything to his will. We plan, he counterplans. "Man proposes, God disposes." Our plans come to nought, our hopes are blasted, our fortunes are wrecked, our loved ones are snatched away, and we seem the prey and sport of adversity; fires burn us out, floods wash away our possessions, drought consumes us, storms desolate us, failures in a commercial world "ruin us," and disaster follows us fast and faster; or, what is even harder to bear, petty misfortunes pursue us, little leaks empty our cisterns, and our lives are wasted in trifling cares. How then?

If our calamities are the result of sin, of omission of duty, of want of reasonable forethought, of anything for which we can be held accountable, why, then, we are only reaping what we have sown. But if they drop upon us "from the clouds; if they come as Job's troubles came on him; why, then we must believe that our heavenly Father knows what we need and gives it to us, that we may be tried in the crucible and refined in the fire; that we may learn to say with Habakuk: "Although the fig-tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vine; the labor of olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls: yet will I rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation."

The Great Physician looks us over, and he sees just what we need. Our own prescriptions for ourselves we can not trust, but his are reliable.—Christian Advocate.

Good but not Gracious.

There is a class of knotty and crabbed Christians whom everybody respects, and almost nobody loves. In my early ministry I had a most conscientious and godly-minded officer in my church who rigidly practiced whatsoever things were true and whatsoever things were just, and whatsoever things were honorable. He was honest to a farthing, and devout to the very core. I never knew him to do a wrong deed, and I scarcely ever knew him to do a pleasant one. There was a deal of good, solid, and most excellent meat in him, but no one liked to prick his fingers in coming at it.

The ruggest old chestnut-bur Christian might have been a great power in the church, but even the children in the street were afraid to speak to him; and so he went sturdily on his way, praying and working and growling as he went, reminding me constantly of his famous countryman, Thomas Carlyle. If there had been a few drops of the epistle of St. John distilled into him, he would have made a grand specimen of a Christian. That man did more than make a mistake, he committed a sin by destroying a large part of his influence for winning others to Christ. As a soldier has no right to wet his powder or blunt his sword when he goes into battle, so no Christian has a right to make his religion offensive when he might make it attractive. His personal influence is a trust and a talent which he is bound to use for the Master.—Cuyler.

John Wesley one day remarked to Dr. Adam Clarke, "As I was walking through St. Paul's churchyard I observed two women standing opposite to one another. One was speaking and gesticulating violently, while the other stood perfectly still in silence. Just as I came up and was about to pass them, the virago, clenching her fist and stamping her foot at her imperturable neighbor, exclaimed, 'Speak, wretch, that I may have something to say.' "Adam," said Wesley, "That was a lesson to me—silence is often the best answer to abuse." "A wise man's tongue is in his head."

STATE EVANGELIST FUND.

We whose names are here unto subscribed, prompted by a love of truth, and prayerfully desiring the salvation of men, agree to pay the several amounts set against our names into the hands of the Indiana State Conference Treasurer L. The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.

VOL. XLII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MARCH 22, 1893. NO. 12.

[illegible] of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Only a Little Cloud.

Only a little cloud, in the western sky it lay;
Only a little cloud, [illegible] away;
The [illegible] to rest
Made it gleam like an opal and left it in the west.

Meanwhile [illegible] stars softly [illegible]
Blacker and blacker grew the cloud, blacker and blacker [illegible]
Up in the [illegible] wind rose fierce and loud;
Storm, and rain, and death, followed that little cloud.

Only a little cloud, a cloud as it [illegible]
In the bright blue sky of love, over a happy home;
Just a shadow of a doubt, just a passionate [illegible]
[illegible] of the [illegible] the little cloud of doom.

Spreading [illegible] to the zenith [illegible]
[illegible] the heaven of love;
And [illegible] was swept away,
Leaving a track of sorrow and [illegible] a wretched day.

Oh! [illegible] hope and love, if a little cloud appear;
[illegible] a cloud, it is a thing to fear;
Only a fretful word or look, may shadow the brightest day.
So, while it is but little mist, [illegible] with smiles away.

Only a little cloud,—no bigger than a hand,
And it may grow until it desolates a land;
Only a fretful word or look, only some thoughtless frown,
Alas! alas, and it may grow to sorrow, ruin, shame!
Then if a little cloud should come within your home, I pray
Remember the sun of love can drive it far away.

"And He Died."

As we opened the sacred Volume that reveals to us man's origin and destiny, our eyes rest upon these words, "And he died." Gen. v. 5. We ask ourself, what does it mean? We find the answer to our question in the opening record of man's creation and transgression.

There we learn after the Divine benediction had been pronounced upon nature, that the Creator placed man under certain restrictions. He was allowed free access to all the trees in the garden, except one, which he was not to touch, under penalty of death. But man did not comply with the requirements of God. He ate the forbidden fruit. His wife had listened to the voice of the wily tempter, and after partaking of the fruit, offered it to him. He yielded to her request, and was banished from Paradise. Two statements were presented for his acceptance. One was made by God: the other by the serpent. One said, "Dying, thou shalt surely die;" the other, "Thou shalt not surely die."

Which would prove true? Onward swept the years, 'till the millennial cycle was nearly complete, and then we read, "And all the days that Adam lived was nine hundred and thirty years and he died." God was vindicated. His word was proved true. His veracity was unimpeached. "And he died" told of a boundary line to life. "And he died," rang the knell of doom to the hopes inspired by the Satanic lie. "And he died," was the echo of the truth spoken by God. "And he died," is the inspired epitaph that proclaims man's mortality. "And he died" is the condensed history of man from the dawn of creation 'till the present hour. "And he died," tells of blighted hopes, of ruined expectations, of sickness, sorrow, pain and the grave. "And he died," rings through the halls of mirth; echoes through the caverns of despair; casts its shadows o'er the pathway of life, and whispers in our ears the common fate of all. "And he died" is a synonym for man's weakness, frailty, corruptibility and mortality.

Men may accept the satanic theory of natural immortality, and sing "there is no death," but after they have glorified death and made it a passport to glory, there still remains the fact recorded in the Inspired Volume: "And he died." Current history agrees with revelation, and daily we find recorded in newspapers the item, "And he died." He set sail for a foreign shore where he expected to win fame and fortune, but the fierce wind caught the ship in their embrace and drove it on a rock; and through the breaches made in the ship, the water came pouring in, 'til the ship sank beneath the wave—"and he died." The winds that swept o'er the spot seemed to say, in the howling of the storm, "He bade us defiance, and he died;" and the angry waves that tossed his form upon the beach seemed to echo, in the thunder of their spray, "he died; he died;" wind and wave shouted in the chorus, "He entered our domains and he died." A lurid glare shot up into the sky as the fire fiend devoured his prey. Amid the noise of crackling flames and falling timber is heard a cry for help. An inmate has awakened to find all avenues of escape cut off by the roaring flames. A brave fireman enters the building, and seeks to rescue its imprisoned inmate. But blinded and stifled by the smoke, he falls a prey to death. The flames, as they hiss and crackle above his dead form seem to say, "He sought to conquer us and he died."

He responded to his country's call, and followed the flag of his native land to the field of battle. Where the fight raged the fiercest, there he was to be seen, foremost in the van. One day there was a battery to be taken: he led the charge, "and he died." Like a brave sentinel, he stood at his post when others fled, but the unseen bullet entered his breast, "and he died."

Success was about to crown his labors, and the plaudits of the multitude were ringing in his ears, when the assassin's dagger pierced his heart "and he died."

He left home in the morning full of life and hope. The train which he boarded ran off the embankment, crushing the inmates amid its debris: "and he died."

As they stood at the marriage altar, the orange blossoms in her hair whispered of coming joy, but ere the marriage vow was spoken, the heart that had throbbed with life ceased to beat, "and he died."

Age had bowed his form and care had wrinkled his brow, while the silver frost of many winters crowned his head; but the words of wisdom that came from his lips gave proof that his intellect was not darkened, and so he still looked forward to many years of happiness. Suddenly the "the silver cord" was loosed, the "golden bowl" was broken, "and he died."

He was young and [illegible] and the rainbow of hope [illegible] the pathway of the future, [illegible] life seemed like a summer's [illegible]; yet disease claimed him for a victim, "and he died."

He was hopeful, happy and generous; his path was hemmed with flowers, with not a serpent lurking underneath, but "the pestilence that walketh at noonday" came past his dwelling, "and he died."

He was loved by all that knew him, and hope beckoned him on towards the goal of fame. But though science tried to baffle death and keep him from its grasp; though love sought to retain him; though hopes were crushed, and tears coursed down the cheeks of those who were left to mourn, he could not escape the grim enemy "and he died."

He raised to his lips the glass in whose bottom lurked the seeds of death, and with a laugh at the fears of those who tried to restrain him, he drained its contents. As the days went by the serpent's coil began to tighten: the drunkard's stagger was seen in his walk; the drunkard's blear was in his eye; the drunkard's thickness in his speech, and the drunkard's fate became his final portion. He went on a spree, drank more than his emaciated form could stand, had the delirium tremens, "and he died."

Satan, thou art a liar! Thou didst say that if man partook of the forbidden fruit, he should not "surely die." But thy words are untrue. Adam did die, and all his posterity have to suffer the same fate. The Bible says "he died," and all nature testifies to the fact. "And he died" sums up the record of human life. Every death recorded in the annals of the human race is but the echo of the fact that Adam died. Each funeral procession that winds, like a weird shadow along the street, says, "he died." Each marble shaft that marks the last resting place of the sons of men says, "he died." Each grave that dots this earth of ours says, "he died." "The groan, the knell, the pall, the bier," all unite in testifying to the fact that "he died." Although it is recorded of the first Adam that "he died," it is also recorded of the "second Adam" that "he rose again." And the sun of hope that set in clouds of gloom above the first Adam's grave rose in undimmed splendor o'er the open tomb of the "second Adam." For although it is written of Jesus that "he died," it is also written that he is "alive forevermore."

Cheer up, ye despondent ones. The grave cannot hold its victims forever. Men may write above the tomb of the saint an epitaph, concluding with "and he died," but the hand of the Resurrection Angel shall blot it out, and in its place shall be written, on the marble shaft of eternity, "he lives forevermore."—H. W. Bowman, selected by J. S. Hatch.

A Short Trial.

There are persons who can remember wicked men, dishonest men, wilful men, men who were great in ability, in iniquity, in cruelty, in craft, and in crime; men who defied law and denied responsibility, and said, "What are you going to do about it?" But these men are gone; they flourished like a green bay tree, but they have passed away as in a moment; their wealth and honors have departed; their strength and influence are gone, and they are so low that none will do them reverence; so weak that no one fears them or trusts in them.

The lesson taught by God's providences and judgments, and by the events which meet us on every hand is, that "the triumphing of the wicked is short;" and that it takes but a little while to bring the proudest low, and to lay the mightiest in the dust. But the "righteous shall flourish like a palm tree: he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon." And if we will trust ourselves in the hands of God, walk in his ways, and cast our burdens upon him, he will make us strong and hold us fast, and will cause us to abide the changes and chances of this world, and will establish us forever, when the wicked shall wither like the grass, and be burned up with unquenchable fire, like the chaff of the summer's threshing floor.—The Christian.

Not long ago I met a clergyman in whom I was interested, a worthy man, who somehow did not seem to get on. Nobody had anything against him, but nobody wanted to hear him preach. He was sound, solid, pious and all this. Venturing on the privilege which belongs to a friend, I said to him: "My dear brother, I hear only one fault found with you. People say that you preach very long; that you make nothing of preaching for an hour, or an hour and a quarter." He answered: "Well, when I take up a subject I like to discuss it fully. I like to do justice to a subject, even if I have to go beyond the ordinary limit." "Justice to the subject!" I exclaimed; "and is there no justice to be shown to the audience? Is the sermon the means or the end? Did God Almighty send you into the world to discuss subjects or to convert souls?"—Zion's Watchman.

Be of One Mind.

Unity of faith stands as one of the cardinal requirements in the system taught by Christ and the holy apostles.

It may well be said that Jesus the Christ was the most uncompromising teacher that ever appeared among men. No wonder they said of him that "he spake as never man spake" for he "spake as one having authority" (to speak) and not in the compromising manner, in doubt and uncertainty as did the Scribes and Pharisees. There is a moral sublimity in the calm dispassionate yet determined style of the Great Model Teacher in announcing the destiny of the human family. "Obey the divine law or perish" was the inexorable rule. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved and he that believeth not shall be damned." "Ye have heard it said...." "but I say unto you." was the authoritative manner of our blessed Lord.

Thus was literally fulfilled the prophecy concerning the Christ, "I will put my words into his mouth, and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him." The words uttered by the Master were words his Father authorized him to speak. Christ bears testimony to this in the memorable prayer offered to his Father. "I have given unto them the words which thou gavest me." In this prayer Christ exonerates himself from all blame in teaching those who were to speak for the Father, for he had given them the words his Father had given to him. Did these chosen ones prove faithful to the responsible trust given to them? What is the record concerning their teaching?

Peter faithfully followed his Master's command when three thousand earnestly asked what they should do by telling them "to repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." Paul tells us that "he had not shunned to declare all the counsel of God, that he had kept back nothing that was profitable unto them." Paul speaks in no uncertain voice in urging the claims of the gospel of Christ, no compromise here with "another gospel" no intimation that "it makes no difference what we believe if we are honest and sincere." No, not a word of this "milk and water" system that teaches "Sincerity and honesty" as the gospel that will save men and women, but a bold outspoken declaration that "though an angel from heaven should preach any other gospel than that Paul and Christ had taught, and these brethren had received, let him be accursed." When these mouth-pieces for God had ceased the word was committed "to faithful men who should be able to teach others also." Is this responsible duty being faithfully carried out now? Is the gospel still tenaciously held to be the power of God unto salvation? Does salvation depend upon belief in and obedience to the gospel of the kingdom of God? In short is there a distinct belief advocated among those who rejoice in the "one faith?" What are the things most surely believed among us? What is meant when it is said of a teacher of human tradition that "he is a whole-souled Christian worker?" Can one be a "Christian worker" who is ignorant of the gospel of the kingdom of God?

Can one who is a stranger to the covenants of promise, an alien from the commonwealth of Israel, without hope, without God be a "whole-souled Christian worker?" Such a person may have great zeal, may be an earnest worker in the religious world, but to call such a person a "Christian worker" is a misnomer, nay it is an open insult to the pure unadulterated truth taught by Christ and his faithful apostles, and all holy devoted lovers of the truth in all ages of the world. Let us have the truth in its purity, let it not be dragged in slime of false doctrine until it is shorn of its beauty and robbed of its power. Away with these unholy alliances. What concord hath light with darkness, what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? Why seek to harmonize pagan religion with the pure gospel of Jesus Christ? Call things by their right names. A teacher of heathenism no matter how cultured or eloquent is unworthy the dignified title of brother, or Christian. These Sacred titles belong to the household of faith. Let them remain as the pure unsullied prerogatives of those who have obeyed from the heart the requirements of the gospel of Jesus Christ. The law of adoption only can bestow these titles upon the children of men. O then, do not hold the truth in unrighteousness, have no fellowship with the unfruitful powers of darkness, but obey the divine command by reproving them. Are we light bearers? then let us see to it that the light in us be not obscured by darkness. No greater foe to the truth has ever appeared in the world than the weak compromising man or woman who lowers the standard of divine truth by meeting error half way. It is disloyalty to Christ, it neutralizes the effect the truth would otherwise have upon those who sit in the moral darkness of this age. O child of God, do not displease the Captain of our salvation by bearing a banner with a strange device, do not I beg of you throw disorder into the ranks of the faithful by giving the trumpet an uncertain sound. Let us move upon the enemy's works bearing aloft the banner of the gospel of Christ, our watchword the "one faith" our battle-cry loyalty to Jesus the Christ.

Another in defining the gospel says, "Webster defines gospel to be glad tidings concerning Christ and salvation through him." This writer says of Webster that "he is good authority, and of the definition that it seems about correct." That Webster is good authority in faithfully giving the definitions as used by the general consent of those using the words is unquestioned, but that he or any other uninspired man is good authority in defining the meaning of words that God has employed and also defined, is claiming too much. That Webster has given the Ecclesiastical meaning of the word gospel, is certainly true, as he has given the Ecclesiastical meaning of "soul", "Spirit" "Hell" and other words of like import, but while these definitions agree with the "orthodox" idea they fall immeasurably below the meaning the Bible gives to them. Of this definition the writer says "it seems about correct." Why not have it just correct, Sister? "About correct" is too indefinite, it may possibly mislead some, but to define the word as God has defined it leaves no doubt as to the meaning of the word "gospel." The Master, who is far better authority than Webster, says as recorded in Luke ix. 2, that he sent his disciples to "preach the kingdom of God" and at the sixth verse it is said that they went as directed and "preached the gospel." Then it logically follows that to "preach the gospel" is to "preach the kingdom of God." Here then we have the definition that our Lord has given and it ought to forever settle the meaning that our Lord has given to the word gospel. There can be no question in the mind of a Bible Student as to what kingdom is meant, for Jesus has told us as recorded in Luke xxiv. that it is the kingdom the prophets have spoken of, and they testify that it is the overturned kingdom of David that is to be restored and given to Christ. How sad to think that thousands are vainly hoping for salvation who have never heard the gospel. But I shall be told that these people believe on Christ, and therefore will be saved. To believe in Christ as an individual is one thing, but to accept Christ as the king of the Jews is quite another thing. To admit that Jesus suffered and died is one thing (even infidels believe this) but to believe that Jesus is to return to this earth and literally reign as king over all the earth is quite another thing.

To admit that Jesus came to save sinners (a very vague and indefinite faith) is one thing, but to accept him as the "Life Giver" is quite another thing. The first can be held by the heathen believers in the immortality of the soul and its fabled Elysian home somewhere in space, but the latter can only be accepted by those who have learned that unless they become united to the Prince of Life they must perish. Then to believe on Jesus the Christ is to admit the truth concerning him as taught by the prophets. The belief of their testimony is pure and simple faith in Christ, to reject that is to refuse to believe on Christ and consequently to fail to secure the salvation that comes through faith in Jesus the Christ. Again we are confronted with a statement, and that too from one dearly beloved, that completely staggers us. It is this "They seem to think that it is necessary for the same body that died to be made alive in order to be called a resurrection." As I believe in the unity of man, and that this unit man is a mortal being, and that in death the unit man ceases to exist as a being I cannot conceive of such a thing as a resurrection unless this same being that dies is made alive again. Now if the same body that dies is not made alive, pray tell me what is it that is raised up at the last day? In every case of resurrection that is recorded in the Bible there has been a literal raising up of the same identical body that had died. The identity of Christ's body was established beyond a doubt by the identical marks or impressions that were made upon Christ's living body. Was not the same Lazarus that died raised again? Was it really the daughter of Jairus that was raised up? Did Christ actually restore the young man to his mother? Did the prophet restore the identical son of the Shunamite woman? Did it take just this to constitute a resurrection of all these persons, and will not the same process of bringing back the identity of the dead who will live again when Jesus comes again be employed? The writer quotes Paul's familiar language "That which thou sowest is not quickened except it die," referring to the grain that is planted. Now if Paul used this figure to illustrate the resurrection of individual saints it will prove too much, for then every saint that dies will not only never come up again (as the grain that is planted never comes up) but for each saint buried there will be a crop of saints produced! Did Paul intend to teach this? Paul's language is a quotation of the words of Jesus as recorded in John xii. 24, and certainly has reference to the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ as the great cause, or through which a similar kind or crop would result. As the grain that is planted is not raised, but produces similar results or grains, so Christ the Great Causative Germ will cause to spring forth by his death and resurrection a vast number who will live again because Christ lived. Now let the two questions that Paul asked, to which his words are answers, be separately considered. The first question is, "How are the dead raised up?" This question involves the means to be used to accomplish an end. Christ being the means, or cause employed, and the resurrection of the dead saints the end that is accomplished.

This gives force to the figure that Paul used to illustrate the cause that would result in the resurrection of beings that would bear the same relation to the cause of their resurrection that the crop of grain bears to the grain that produced it. This makes the figure forcible and well illustrates the truth that Paul was teaching, but to apply the figure to illustrate the resurrection of each saint, not only destroys the true idea of a resurrection, but makes nonsense of the apostle's masterly argument.

That this was the idea in the mind of Christ when he used the figure is evident, for he says, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone, but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit." It is equivalent to the words of Christ when he says, "Because I (the grain or cause) live ye (the much fruit) shall live also."

In concluding this friendly criticism, the writer desires to be understood not as one who would dogmatize or formulate articles of faith to be subscribed to, or suffer excommunication, but as one who firmly believes in certain fundamental truths that are essential to our salvation, and may be comprehended briefly as a firm faith in the Gospel of the Kingdom, to be followed by acts of obedience, repentance and baptism, this as the induction into the Christ body, to be followed by a new life devoted to the cultivation of the Christian Graces, and thus be qualified for the Master's use in the coming ages. But upon matters that do not affect our salvation, I desire the same freedom of thought and expression that I so cordially extend to others.

"Let us be found striving together for the faith of the Gospel," this strife will unite us the closer in bonds of love.

Yours in the "Blessed Hope."

J. P. WAGONER.

The Temple of God.

Much is now being said through THE RESTITUTION by Bro. Wagoner, and "The Pine Wood's Bible Class," concerning the "Man of Sin," and the "Antichrist," that was to sit in the temple of God.

Now will the class and Bro. Wagoner, tell us something about the temple that they have in mind.

The temple built by Solomon was built by Divine approval, and therein was manifested the Divine presence. The God of Heaven charged king Cyrus to build him a house at Jerusalem. This temple like the one built by Solomon was destroyed. Now do Bro. Wagoner and the Pine Wood's Class, understand that God will commission some one to build a temple for the "Man of Sin" to exhibit himself in? Where will such a temple be built? Why will it be the temple of God? The same Paul that said that the Man of Sin would sit in the temple of God, said to the Church: "Ye are the temple of the Living God." 2 Cor. iii. 16: 1 Cor. iii. 10: Eph. ii. 20 to the end.

God then had a temple, but now if the Man of Sin must yet be born what temple will he sit in?

The falling away was to come and the Man of Sin was to be revealed sitting in the temple of God before the day of Christ. Will God have any other temple on earth than the one defined by this same Paul, before the day of Christ?

One more question. Who was to apostatize, or fall away, and is this future?

J. O. KIMSEY.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAR. 22, 1893.

The address of any correspondent of this paper will be sent to any one wishing it, on application.

THERE being five Wednesdays in this month, our next issue will be dated April 5.

THAT man has made some progress in the Divine life who can see as much love in God's warnings, as in his promises. When his brother tenderly shows him his faults he takes that as evidence of love too. •

THE Messenger says, the saloon is armed with a doubled barreled gun. One is the Republican barrel, and the other is the Democratic barrel; but the woman whose husband is killed by whisky does'nt know which barrel the shot came from. •

THE Spirit in Paul says. love "seeketh not its own." 1 Cor. xiii, 5. This must be the love of God and of Christ that does not seek its own. The love of self seeks its own, and more too, sometimes; and makes a great fuss if it does not get it. One is the fruit of the Spirit, the other of the flesh. Mark the difference. •

THERE were no less than two billion, eight hundred and ninety-two million, nine hundred and eighty-two thousand, eight hundred and forty cigarettes manufactured in this country in 1892; an increase of 214,444,000 over the previous year. This allows 44 of these paper cigars to every man, woman and child in the United States. •

WE may as well own up; we have little trust in God when we worry. What is the reason? Are worrying about something we have no business to? If not why do we not ask his assistance? Why do we not believe him when he says all things shall work together for good if we love Him? Do we love Him? Is not worry good evidence that our faith is not implicit, and our affection is divided?

MATTERS in connection with the Home Rule agitation in Ireland are looking serious. An Ulster county firm ordered 100,000 Martin rifles from an English manufacturer, and the order was referred to the government for advice, as to whether it should be complied with. The reply was that if an attempt were made to fill the order it would be stopped. This would indicate that the Ulster Unionists are in earnest in their threats of civil war, rather than submit to a Dublin Parliament. We are not surprised at this action of the Protestants of the north of the Emerald isle. The Catholics would thus become their masters; and they know well what that would mean. Gladstone will hardly be able to redress the wrong of Ireland. The trouble is too deep seated. The settlement is we apprehend, reserved for the Universal King; then the oppressed will go free. • READER, did you know that the God of love, is also a hater? He is; he hates evil and bids you do the same. Amos v. 15. And this is what we read in Prov. vi. 16–19, "These six things doth the Lord hate, yea, seven are an abomination unto him.

1. A proud look.
2. A lying tongue.
3. Hands that shed innocent blood.
4. An heart that deviseth wicked imaginations.
5. Feet that be swift in running to mischief.
6. A false witness that speaketh lies, and
7. He that soweth discord among brethren.

Hands off; it needs no doctoring, no grading, no classifying,—nothing. It is just right as it stands. You meddle with it at your peril. Pride, and lying, and murder, and wicked imagination, and mischief making, and false witnesses, and sowing of discord among brethren, are all in one category. All seven are an abomination unto him. His thoughts are not as our thoughts. He judges without respect of persons, too. Sin is just as hateful in one as another. •

THE virtue of Paganism was, what? Power. The virtue of Christianity is what? Obedience. •

OUR Brother Gardner's translation of Col. ii. 9, published in THE RESTITUTION years ago is as follows:—"Because in him dwelleth in bodily form, all the completeness of the Divine Nature." Oh, how helpful this is! Is this not what is in reserve for us? If blameless members of his body to the end, will not all the completeness of the Divine Nature dwell in us? Glorious prospect. •

"PUTTING away, then, all evil, and all deceit, and acts of hypocrisy and jealousy, and slander, may ye, as recently-begotten, unborn babes, have longed for the seasonable, unadulterated milk, that thereby ye may have grown unto salvation, if ye have tasted that the Lord is a useful-good One." Prof. Gardner's Translation. How thankful should we be that, insignificant and unknown as are the brethren of Jesus, faithwise, it is our privilege to have those who can translate the Word from the original; and who by having the Key of the Truth, in addition to a good knowledge of the classics, are exceedingly helpful to the household. We hope all our readers appreciate the advantage of collating a number of different renderings, especially of those who know the outline of God's purpose. •

WE see by the Toronto Globe that the Ministerial Association of that city has been discussing the subject of an organic unity of the Protestant Churches. Principal Cavan the first speaker appeared to see very little in the way, inasmuch as they all agree that the Scriptures are the Word of God; all agree as to the Trinity; all agree concerning the Nature of Man, and but little difference in regard to his fallen condition, and hence it follows, said the speaker, "that the main conception as to redemption cannot be widely different." That Jesus is the only Savior, all agreed, also as to the state of the soul after death, the coming of the Lord in glory, the resurrection of the BODY, and the award of eternity. We are pained to see these men calling themselves Christians while utterly ignorant of the Gospel of life from the dead to inherit the Kingdom of God on earth, which Jesus the Christ preached. The Message he delivered they scorn. We pity them all but one. He willfully sits in the seat of the scornful; he has no cloak for his sin.

No two of the many speeches following the learned Principal of Knox College advocated the same basis of union, and there is little fear of an union, seeing they are differing about infant sprinkling, mode of baptism, apostolic succession, ordaining ministers and distributing them. They are blind leaders. We know by Matt. xv. 14. and Luke vi. 39, where they land. •

Two doctors have gotten into trouble in Cleveland. One is charged with poisoning a lady patient, and another of a different school is charged with gross neglect of duty when he suspected she had been poisoned. It was shown that he diagnoses cases by means of a box on the table with a telegraph key, and from it a wire extends through and underneath the top of the table, forming what is called a closed circuit. He claims to have successfully diagnosed a case in Egypt, and in different states. He said he believed there was no death—only physical death. He places his hand on the key and says it ticks intelligently to him, but does not know what makes the machine tick. It appears, however, that either the machine was out of order, or else he neglected to use it, for the woman is dead. These wonderful ticks and raps which are said to prove the immortality of the soul have never rapped out any history in advance, so far as we have heard. If there be no death will it not be demonstrated to all by and by, raps or no raps? What advantage is there in knowing it, if there be no necessary preparation for living right on?

It is as true as ever it was, "The legs of the lame are not equal." Well may we thank God if by his Word we know we are but wonderfully organized dust, capable of attaining to an incorruptible life through the Son of God's love. •

"JESUS said unto her (Martha) I am the Resurrection and the Life; he believing into me, even though he die, shall live. Diaglott translation of John xi. 25. Here is consolation for that dear old Sister who feels the enemy fumbling after her heart-strings. He may find them after a time, but never mind. The clock will not tick for you then; you will rest from your labor then, till awakened by the voice that will infuse immortal vigor into you. Hope on, hope ever, dear one; Jesus is coming as he said he would. And feeble old brother, you can also take some of the same medicine, with good effect; and you need not be afraid of taking an overdose, either. Take a good sip, brother. Here it is: "I am the resurrection and the life; he believing into me, even though he die, shall live." There, dont you feel better already? •

STRANGE is it that devout people can read Prov. xi. 31. "Behold the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth, much more the wicked and the sinner!"—and reject both statements. If we could only persuade them to believe that this is God speaking to them in their own language, and informing them of the place where each class is recompensed, we could then show from the fact that both are to be recompensed in one place, that the fire and sulphur doctrine for immortal souls is exceedingly improbable, to say the least. Certainly, it could not last long; the whole territory has been willed to the saints; and the whole earth is to be filled with God's glory. Would glory redown to God through the endless torment of his creatures, without any reformatory purpose? Would there be fullness of joy for the redeemed if they knew a part of their inheritance was cumbered with myriads of their race who were suffering indescribable torments, and ever would be? Are people honest who reject the plain statements of the Spirit, and accept theories without any statement of the Spirit for its foundation? •

READER, do you expect to live and reign with Christ during the thousand-year age of conquest? If you do, you had better look well to the qualifications necessary, before it be too late. If you have named the name of Christ you are only a candidate for that exalted position. Your election is by no means certain. 1 Peter i. 9, 10 tells you that an entrance into that kingdom will not be gained unless you give diligence to make your calling and election sure. And if you wish to see the qualifications of a ruler for that age you can have it by reference to 2 Samuel xxiii. 3. "He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God;" or as the revised version has it, "One that ruleth over men righteously—that ruleth in the fear of God [shall come, understand; see covenant to that effect in vs. 5, 6.] He shall be as the light of the morning when the sun riseth; a morning without clouds." As a mere news item this is of little importance; but as information as to the requisite qualifications for you to develop it is of vast imporance. You must be just here and now, or you cannot be just then; and not just then you will not rule then. Do you say you have no opportunity of developing ability to rule justly? That's a great mistake? Can you not practice on yourself? Its he who overcomes that obtains power over the nations, as you may see from Rev. ii. 26. Overcome what? Yourself, to be sure. Is not that what you have undertaken to do? Have you not set yourself the task of keeping the body under subjection to the spirit? Have you not pledged to deny yourself and be led by the spirit? If not you are no candidate as yet, for a rulership. You must be just to yourself first. You may think that the easiest thing in the world to do, but it is the hardest—the very hardest of all. If you have not started on this course of discipline yet, you had better start in now, by reading from the 15th Psalm exactly who shall dwell in the holy hill. Start in right here and be just to yourself, and if necessary swear to your own hurt, and about that time you will discover that you have ample opportunity to develop ability to rule. If you cannot rule one justly you are incompetent to rule many. To twist and turn and tone down, and apologize and equivocate because it is you that you are trying, is gross injustice to yourself —You are not overcoming—you are being overcome. •

Letter Drawer.

Dear Restitution:

Brother Almus Adams wishes me to report our Quarterly Conference held at Ainsworth, Neb. Mar. 3 and 4. The Conference was held in the Barne's Opera House rented for the purpose from March 3 to March 14. Brethren and sisters were present from east and west on this line of R. R. The special business will be reported by the Sec'y, Bro. Denson. Bro. Adams preached the Word with much power, Friday and Saturday evenings to good audiences. The interest was manifest. After meeting Friday night, Eld. T. D. De Long of the Congregational Church through me extended an invitation to Bro. Adams to preach for him on Sunday morning in his pulpit, and also added that he would be welcome to do the same in the evening.

Bro. Adams accepted the invitation, and the conference adjourned Saturday night to attend Bro. Adams' preaching on Sunday. In consequence of this, many were privileged to hear the Gospel who would not otherwise have been reached.

Meetings were then continued from Monday evening March 6, until Tuesday 14, at the Opera House.

On Monday evening the 13th, eight came forward giving their hand, and Tuesday evening four more pledged their faith in the Gospel of the Kingdom. Wednesday Bro. Adams baptized four, and a congregation of the Church of God was duly organized, electing, Bro. C. Shultz, Elder, Bros. Frank Stephens and ——Deacons, Sister Lillian Fancher, Secy. Bro. S. Hitchens, Treas.

People here are somewhat stirred up on the views presented by Bro. Adams. Whatever is of the Truth will make free, although it may require some time for the Truth to be fully apprehended by seekers after it. Truth may be discarded even by its friends for awhile, but we are praying that honest seekers for it may not reject it too long.

We are very poor here in this world's goods but are getting rich fast through Jesus Christ, our Blessed Lord, who for our sakes became poor that we through his poverty might become rich. The Church of God so far as I can see are lacking in practical faith in Christ. Truly Yours,

S. G. CHANEY.

Dear Restitution:

As I presume your readers would like to hear occasionely how friends are getting along in other places I thought I would write a few lines to let you know how we are prospering here.

Brother Black of Suspension Bridge, N. Y. has been holding a few meetings here with success. The audiences generally were large and good attention to the Word spoken.

Two came out on the Lord's side and put on Christ by being baptised into him. It is hoped that they may retain their union with him by walking in the path of obedience to the end, knowing that those only that endure to the end shall be saved. May this be their happy lot is my prayer.

In respect to Elder Black, I would just say, that a few years ago he was voted out of the Disciple Church for preaching what they call heresy, and quite a number of said church came out with him, and they with the assistance of some others have built a plain, comfortable little house, in which to meet together to worship in, and I understand they have a regular congregation of 40 or 50, and sometimes more.

Bro. Black is an intelligent young man, and I think will be instrumental in accomplishing much good. In conclusion, I would say, dear brethren, let us not trust altogether on a theoretical religion for salvation. We need a practical as well. It is those who do his Word, who shall be blessed.

"Blessed are those who do his commandments." It is quite necessary that we observe the command of the Savior when he said, "Watch and pray always, that ye may be counted worthy to escape those things that shall come to pass, and stand before the Son of Man." Again said Jesus. "Strive to enter in at the straight gate, for many shall seek to enter therein and shall not be able." Again brother, be careful of your words. For every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give an account thereof in the day of judgment. Let us watch and pray, lest at any time we enter into temptation, and that day come upon you unawares.

Yours looking for that "Blessed Hope."

P. B. BOCK.

Dear Restitution:

It is with pleasure that I drop you these few lines. I have been reading the letters from the brethren scattered abroad, and it cheers my fainting soul when I hear the words of cheer from those of like precious faith. It makes me feel as if we were gathered in a social meeting, and it was my time to speak. Brothers and sisters I feel more determined to serve the Lord than ever, when I look around and see those who serve the devil falling here and there. We had a temperence lecture in our little town last night, and it was something that we needed. for the monster demon has quite a hold here. While the lady was speaking on temperence, she mentioned the home, and the characters that were moulded there, and when we only stop to think that we are moulding characters to stand while the ages roll by, I think of home and the training that I received there, it fills my heart with joy to think that I was started on the right road, the road that leads to eternal happiness.

When we realize the responsibility that is resting on us as parents, it is time that we set good examples before them, that they may follow and cleave to that which is good. Be patient, long-suffering, gentle, give good advice.

Pray for me brethren, that I may ever hold out faithful to the end, and gain a crown of life that fadeth not away. Let us run with patience the race set before us.

There are no brethren here of the faith except myself, but I have a chance to speak every Sunday afternoon in the Y. M. C. A. hall and express my views. Brethren, I need your help in this work. I wish we could get some one to come and speak for us. I will close by asking you to pray for me. Your Brother in Christ.

D. K. LEHMAN.

"Significant"—Perhaps.

Our Hope, March 8, on its first page reprints THE RESTITUTION paragraph on Dr. Briggs, as "selected by J. F. Adair." There, among other things, Dr. Briggs is said to teach that, "Many of the predictions of the Old Testament have been reversed by history;" and, "The great body of Messianic prediction has not only not been fulfilled, but cannot now be fulfilled, for the reason that its own time has passed forever."

On this point of the non-fulfilment of the Messianic and Israelitic kingdom prophecies, the brethren of Our Hope are at one with Dr. Briggs, with a few exceptions. For instance, as a body they hold and teach that the Ezekiel temple and its service, so minutely described in the 40th to 40th chapters, never had a fulfilment, and never shall have a fulfilment. They teach that the Ezekiel division of the land of Palestine to the twelve tribes of Israel as foretold so particularly in Ezek. 47: 13 to 48: 35, is to have no accomplishment; these, and a host of like predictions have "lapsed," they say. On the subject of the Old Testament prophecies relating to Israel and the Messianic kingdom, they hold with Dr. Briggs; and, alas! so does the greater part of the religious world. To Age-to-come believers, or Millenarians, Dr. Briggs' position on this point is an error; but according to Anti-Millenarians, whether Adventists or of other denominations, he is right.

But perhaps Elder Adair and Our Hope have come to believe with THE RESTITUTION that the predictions concerning Israel and the kingdom of Messiah have not become a dead letter. How is it?

Questions.

I would like to have you or some of your writers to explain what became of Lazarus, and the bodies of the saints spoken of in Matt. xxvii. 52–53. Please answer through your paper, and oblige,

A. J. BRADLEY.

Will some of the writers of THE RESTITUTION be so kind as to tell us how many times the inheritance is referred to in the Bible in its various forms. The Kingdom, The Abrahamic Promises, and direct statements like Ps. xxxvii. Matt. v. 5, and Rev. v. 9, etc.

A. G. LOMBARD.

I would like for some brother that is well posted in history and Bible also, to tell who changed the day of rest from the original 7th day, to the first day of the week, and by what authority was the change made, and oblige a lover of Truth.

Confession of Wrong.

I wish to point out something in the nature and effects of confession: I mean its power to bring peace and happiness back to the heart, when the conscience has been wounded by sin......Confession of sin has an almost magic power in restoring peace of mind. Providence seems to have implanted this principle in the human heart for the express purpose of having us act upon it. He has so formed us that when we have done wrong, we cannot feel at peace again until we have acknowledged our wrong to the person against whom it has been done. And this acknowledgement of it removes the uneasiness as effectually as fire removes cold, or as water extinguishes fire. It operates in all cases, small as well as great, and is infallible in its power. And yet how slowly do young persons, and even old persons, learn to use it. The remedies for almost every external evil are soon discovered, and are at once applied; but the remedy for that uneasiness of mind which results from having neglected some duty or committed some sin, and consists in simple confession of it to the person injured—how slowly it is learned and how reluctantly practiced.—Jacob Abbott.

Arctic Explorations.

Frederick Jackson, who is planning to make an expedition this summer to the North Pole by way of Franz Joseph Land, has completed his preparations. He is going to take only ten men with him, and dogs, sledges, and food for about three years. Jackson's belief is that Franz Joseph Land extends to the eighty-fifth degree, or within about 300 nautical miles of the pole. This is based on the vast icebergs that are found in the adjacent seas and the continental size of the glaciers which have been observed upon it. This will make three expeditions which will start this spring for the North. Lieut. Peary will push on his work begun in Greenland. Dr. Nansen will try to float across the pole from the west to the east, and this of Jackson overland by Franz Joseph. It is a question with geographers whether much of general value will be obtained by any one of them.

On your part there must be genuine repentance. The only genuine repentance is that which cuts up favorite sins by the roots. As it is not enough to get weeds out of a garden unless you plant the seeds of flowers and fruits in their place, so the quitting of old sins will avail you little unless you begin to do Christ's will. Do not waste time in waiting for some harrowing sorrow, or distress, or some thunderclap of excitement. Fears do not save a soul; Felix was frightened, but he did not flee to that Savior whom Paul preached. Emotion does not save. Faith saves; and the real essence of faith is the entire letting go of self and the cleaving to Jesus only. To put self under foot, even to the abandoning of any self-righteous idea of saving ourselves by church-going, Bible-reading, praying, or any other good deed, is essential to a right trust in Jesus Christ. You can not hang your hopes on two hooks at once. Nothing on self, everything on Christ, be our motto.—Cuyler.

Present Conflict.

"Europe, mother Europe! why do you stand to-day
With bristling steel and iron front in war's accursed array?
Why roar your thundering forges, but not to shape the plow?
Must war's infernal horrors hang forever round your brow?
Where rolls the icy Neva, where flows the classic Rhine,
Where Norway lifts her granite brows and shakes her mountain pine,
Where toils the Finnish peasant on Bothnia's rugged shore,
And where the brave and light-haired Dane pulls manfully the oar,
There's a sound of coming conflict, as when November gales
Burst from the icy mountains where Winter trims his sails,
And sends his fleet forerunners, and bids his trumpets blow,
Before he hurls his shot of ice and musketry of snow.
The Russian bear is growling on his wild Tartar plains,
And screams the Austrian eagle from bleak Carpathian chains,
And France, like couchant tiger, lies ready for the spring,
With glaring eyes that never leave the German eagle's wing.
From where the lowly Belgian toils ever at his loom;
From where the sturdy Hollander keeps eye on dike and dome;
From Spain's ancestral castles; from everlasting Rome;
From where the Turk grasps lance and sword to guard his father's home;
From where the Greeks are stirring, with old ambition's power;
Where bold Bulgaria trembles at each succeeding hour;
From where the brave Swiss peasant keeps well his mountain wall,
From our own mother Britain, the bravest of them all;
Come news of coming conflict and marshalling of men,
As if our mother Europe mad with maternal pain,
Had in her womb a demon, who, when he shall have birth,
Will let infernal furies forth upon our hapless earth.
O thou, before whose presence the trembling nations stand,
What hidden purpose hast thou, what awful work on hand!
Must earth's foundation tremble, and hell her furies bring,
For man's great final trial ere the coming of the King!"

Original.

Adam vs. Christ. Which is it? No. 2.

Having shown that Adam by transgression of divine law forfeited his right to eternal life and was remanded back to dust, it was therefore impossible for him to bestow upon any of his race that which he did not himself possess; but the failure and death of Adam did not frustrate God's original plan of redemption, for he has provided for man a second Adam, even Jesus our Lord, and who through obedience to divine law will carry out Jehovah's plans of redeeming the race and removing the curse of death from this once beautiful earth. Having himself become obedient unto death, even the death of the cross, he has now by a resurrection from the dead become a life-giving Spirit who now is able to impart eternal life to all for whom it has been prepared, (the elect ones according to the foreknowledge of God,) who is the author of eternal life, but has chosen his Son as the true source from whence it may be derived. The word of God being my authority I may safely say that there is not one son of Adam who is living on the earth today possesses in himself an atom of immortality, and it is a dishonor to God to propagate such a doctrine; besides it robs our Savior of the honor of bringing life and immortality to light through the gospel. I shall now show that Christ and not Adam is the true source of it and how it may be obtained. Christ said of the Father, with thee is the fountain of life, Psa. xxvi. 9. Also, For as the Father has life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself, John v. 26. The disciples were witnesses that this is true. See first John i. 2. The life was manifested in Jesus, and we have seen it. Eternal life which was with the Father and was manifested unto us.

IMMORTALITY OFFERED.

To them who by patient continuance in well-doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, it will be given at the resurrection. See first Cor. xv. please read the whole chapter.

ETERNAL LIFE A GIFT.

The gift of God is eternal life. Rom. vi. 23, and v. 15. If thou knewest the gift of God. John iv. 10; Eph. ii. 8. God hath given to us (believers) eternal life by promise, for it has not yet been bestowed but is a matter of hope. Heirs, (not yet inheritors) together of the grace of life, first Peter iii. 7. Looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life. Jude 21.

IT IS STILL A MATTER OF PROMISE.

And this is the promise, Eternal life, 1 John ii. 25. The promise of life which was in Christ Jesus, 2 Tim. i. 1. Search the Scriptures for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they testify of me, John v. 39, 40. For we are saved by hope, Rom. viii. 24, in hope of eternal life. Titus i. 2.

TO BE GAINED THROUGH CHRIST.

In whom was life, the light of men, John i. 4; and xii. 50. This (eternal life) is in his Son. 1 John v. 11. God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might have life through him. 1 John iv. 9, who (Christ) hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light, "through the gospel." 2 Tim. i. 10, and it is by a belief of the gospel and obedience thereto, that man can ever gain it. Our Savior abolished death in his own person through a resurrection of the dead. Hear him, I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold, I am alive forevermore, Rev. i. 18. I am come that they might have life, and have it more abundantly, John x. 10. Your life is hid with Christ in God, and when Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye appear with him in glory. Col. iii. 3-4. How plain this is. No life eternal until Jesus comes. In John xi. 25, Christ says he that believeth in me though he were dead, yet shall he live, and he that liveth and believeth on me shall never die. Some claim that this passage teaches the immortality of the soul, but if one will turn to 1 Thess. xiv. 10–17 they will there see what our Lord meant. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air. There is nothing in this Scripture to support the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, it only shows that there will be a class of believers who will be alive at Christ's second advent, who will never see death but like Enoch of old will be translated. The Bible is the truth, the whole truth, and is its own interpreter. The trouble is our finite minds are incapable of grasping its meaning. But we will resume. Christ says in Matt. xxx. 17 if thou wilt enter into life keep the commandments, he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting. Gal. vi. 8, he he that doeth the will of God abideth forever, John ii. 17. For when he is tried he shall receive the crown of life. James i. 12. When will he receive it? In the world to come eternal life, Mark xxx. 10. These are but a few of the many Scriptures bearing upon this subject but enough to show that eternal life is a matter of hope and not of actual possession. We must lay hold on it. How? by faith and obedience to the promises offered in the gospel. There are many types and antetypes in the Scriptures and we must learn to rightly divide the word of truth so not to get them blended, as it will mar the simplicity of the Scriptures. We have presented therein two Fathers, two creations, two begettals, two births and two deaths, and they must be kept perfectly distinct from Genesis to regenesis. Adam our earthly parent was a type of God, who is the Spiritual father of them who believe. Adam begat a race of mortal beings or children. God will have begotten a race of immortal children or beings. Man is not a dual being, but a unite being composed of many parts, as yet, he dies, wholly dies, but if begotten in this life by the word of truth, the gospel, he will at the resurrection become immortal. This is the only way offered us through the Scriptures, of gaining it. If this be true, what then becomes of the doctrine of the soul's immortality? Why it was founded on the sand, by the father of lies, God's opposer. Turn with me to Gen. iii. 4. God who spoke the truth, said unto our parents, ye shall not eat of the fruit of the tree in the midst of the garden; ye shall not touch it, lest ye die, and the serpent said unto the woman, ye shall not die. I wish to ask a question here, how many in Christendom are there today who do not believe that lie of the serpent, for our Savior called him a liar from the beginning, and right here is where he makes himself most prominent by contradicting God's words which were true, for you will see in the 5th chap. and 5th verse that Adam lived nine hundred and thirty years and he died. In the very day that Adam partook of the forbidden fruit he became a subject of death, dying thou shalt die, (see margin of same chapter). Now in this garden which the Lord had prepared for Adam and his bride was found the tree of life, by the means of which Adam would have gained eternal life had he been obedient to God's law. But disobedience prohibited him from partaking of its fruits and he was therefore driven from the garden, and the tree of life was guarded. In our next we will try to show that Christ will restore what was lost in Adam.

S. V. REGAL.

A Word to the Undecided.

In "A word to the undecided," the author says, "you have heard the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, and you intellectually believe them," etc., but have not decided to become Christians.

Then the writer in a very earnest and plain way exhorts all such to faith and obedience.—to be undecided no longer.

It is quite customary to regard an intellectual faith as of little account. Is not all faith or belief, intellectual? And the more intellectual the better? Belief and faith are used in the same sense all through the Bible, and is purely mental.

The Bible speaks of a strong faith, and a dead faith (which is equal to no faith at all in the Bible sense.) It says, "Abraham was strong in faith, giving glory to God." He glorified God by such faith, on account of it, yielded obedience by lifting up his hand to slay Isaac. Others were "full of faith." Such a degree of faith in the Gospel will surely lead to a self-denying obedience of the conditions of salvation, and cause the believer to rejoice in hope of the glory of God. But we are told, "the devils believe and tremble." This fact only proves the power of faith in predicted suffering and death. They have no Gospel to believe. "The Gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth it." Rom. i. 16.

Read the power of faith as exhibited by the exploits and sufferings of God's people in ancient days as recorded by Paul in Heb. xi.

Modern history will show the terrible sufferings of a great army of martyrs whose faith in the "exceeding great and precious promises," have given them power to endure torture and death.

Please allow me to correct a few more mistakes that are often made:

"With the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." The word heart is used to mean the affections of love or hatred,—fear or pleasure. But the original word (Kardia) has for one of its definitions the mind, and is often used in that sense in the Bible. The passage, therefore, should read, with the mind man believeth unto righteousness, for that is the fruit of a living faith, while salvation will be the glorious result of belief, righteousness and confession of Christ and his Gospel to the world.

Obedient works are the sure evidence of a living faith. James says, "let a man show me his faith without his works, and I will show him my faith by my works."

The exposition of another Scripture is often deficient,—I mean the answer of Peter to the cry of the multitude, "What shall we do?" "Repent and be baptized every one of you for the remission of your sins." Here repentance and baptism are required in order to the remission of sins. Repentance does not mean sorrow but "godly sorrow worketh repentance," and that works conversion or reformation.

Repentance is a translation of the Greek word, Meta-noia, which means a change of mind or purpose. When the new mind, or purpose is formed, an outward turning to God or reformation of life is secured.

Peter, in his next sermon, exhorts his hearers to turn to God that your sins may be blotted out when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord, and he shall send Jesus Christ whom the heavens must hold until the times of the restoration of all things spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets.

Repentance is first, and conversion or reformation is next, and baptism for the remission of sins and their complete blotting out at the revelation of Jesus Christ from heaven. But all this righteous feeling as well as action is the legitimate result of an "intellectual" belief of the Gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation when believed.

If you analyze faith, you will come to the same conclusion.

What is the belief of the Gospel? The original Greek word is Evangelon, the meaning of which is a good-message, (from God.)

What constitutes the belief of it? First, it must be understood by reading or hearing. That is a mental work. I need not say to one that understands history or his Bible, that a clear fulfillment of a long chain of prophetic events, together with the most stupendous miracles by Christ and His Apostles constitutes the strongest evidence to prove the good message true. This understanding of evidence and comparison with the glorious truth to be believed is surely a work of the mind. Then follows an intellectual judgment or decision of mind, that the good message is true. This is an intellectual faith that will be followed by a purpose to obey the Gospel and be baptized into the name of Jesus the Christ. Will not such a conversion be better and more enduring than that brought about by mere excitement? "The faith that saves the soul and that which in the common truth believes, in the essence is the same. Hear then what faith, true Christian faith brought salvation was. Belief in all that God revealed to men—all He promised and commanded, said, without a doubt, He who thus believed, as certainly the fruits of faith produced as human eye, in darkness, seeks the light." (Pollock.)

"Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in Heaven." Matt. x. 32. "For whosoever shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, of him shall the Son of Man be ashamed when he shall come in His own glory, and in His Father's, and of the holy angels." Luke ix. 26. Jesus said to the chief-priests of his day, "how can ye believe, which receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only?".

This is the great reason why so few, comparatively, believe and confess the near coming and kingdom of Messiah in our day,—because they prefer the honor of mortal man to the future honor "that cometh from God only." "If any man serve me, him will my Father honor." John xii. 26. For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear, but ye have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry Abba, Father. The self-same spirit beareth witness with our spirit, that we are (the begotten) children of God. "We groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to-wit, the redemption of our body. For we are saved by hope." Rom. viii. 15, 16.

How plain that Paul waited to be adopted into God's immortal family, at the redemption of his body, for he considered himself "saved only by hope" "Being begotten again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the Word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." Peter i. 23. R. V.

E. HOYT.

Peter's First Epistle. Chapter 4.

1. Christ then having suffered in flesh, arm yourselves with the same concept, namely that the one who hath suffered in flesh hath ceased from sin,

2. To the end that ye no longer pass the remnant of your lifetime in the flesh in the inordinate desires of men, but in the will of God.

3. For the past time of your life should suffice to have wrought the intent of the nations, when you went your ways in acts of excess, of inordinate desire, of drunkeness, of revelling, of drinking-feasts and lawless idolatries.

4. In which way they are accustomed to show hospitality, blaspheming when ye do not run along with them in the same display of debauchery:

5. Who will give an account to Him who hath in readiness to judge the living and the dead.

6. For to this end hath the Gospel been announced to the dead, that they might be judged as human beings in flesh; but might live as God in spirit.

7. Moreover the fulfillment-(not end in the sense of a stop) of all things hath drawn nigh. Be discreet then and live soberly in votive-prayers.

8. Above all maintaining the love toward one another stedfastly, because love (the sanctified love) covereth a multitude of sins.

9. Be toward one another friendly to strangers without murmuring.

10. Even as each one hath received a gracious-gift, with it doing menial-service to one another, as good stewards of God's variegated grace.

11. If any one talketh as though (speaking) God's oracular words; If any one doeth (deacon) service, (let it be) as though with strength that God supplieth; that in all things God may be glorified through Jesous Christ, whose (that is God's) is the glory and the controling-power for the ages of the ages. Amen.

12. Beloved be not surprised at the fiery trial that hath occurred in your midst to prove you, as though a strange thing had happened to you.

13. But even as ye become partners in the sufferings of the Christ rejoice, that in the manifestation of his glory also ye may rejoice when made glad.

14. If ye are suffering reproach in Christ's name, blessed happy are ye; because the Spirit of the glory and of the ability and of God is resting (for an interval) upon you.

15. Let no one of you though suffer as a murderer or a thief or an evil-doer or as a busybody in other people's affairs;

16. But if as a Christian, let him not be ashamed and let him glorify God in this name.

17. Because there is an appointed time for judgment rendered to begin in the house of God; and if from you first, what will be the end of those who distrust the Gospel of God?

18. And if the justified one is with difficulty being saved, where will the irreverent and the obdurate sinner appear?

19. So then may those indeed who are suffering according to the will of God have committed their souls (lives) in well-doing unto a faithful Creator (generic-creator this word here.)

COMMENT.

"In which way they are accustomed to show hospitality" instead of "wherein they think it a strange thing," etc. R. V.

"But might live as God in Spirit" instead of "according to God in the spirit." R. V. which is neither the same thought nor a literal rendering.

The heralding of the Gospel to the dead here spoken of, I do not understand to refer to the same thing as the heralding "to the spirits in prison" already referred to in this Epistle; but to the heralding of the Gospel through Noe and the prophets from the earliest ages on down to the coming of Christ, to men who were alive, just such a reference as the one in the first of the fourth chapter of Hebrews,—or in other words the offer of the terms of the Gospel—pardon and justification in the sacrificial blood of Christ then as now.

"Friendly to strangers" instead of "hospitable" R. V. for reasons previously given.

"Doing menial-service" instead of "ministering" R. V. which has somehow come to savour too strongly of the white neck-tie and cant to express the thought of the author.

"Gracious-gift" instead of "gift" merely, R. V. We don't emphasize grace as we ought, and as the apostolic writers did.

"God's variegated grace" instead of "manifold grace" R. V. literal, and much more suggestive and significant when we think of the diversity of color and its blending in white light.

"Speaking God's oracular words" instead of "speaking as it were oracles of God" R. V. There is too much of this sort of speaking now—this "as it were" speaking.

"Whose is the glory," etc., refers to God here, not to Christ.

"Even as ye become partners in the sufferings of Christ" instead of "insomuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings" etc., R. V. There is a vast difference between being "partners in" and "partakers of" something. The translators as a body seemed to have ignored for some reason the too evident and solemn fact that Christianity is "a partnership" and not a mere "participation" or "communion" or "fellowship" or "communication"—a partnership in the humiliation and sufferings of the sacrifice, and in the glory of Christ that is to follow. Think of this and pray over it if you have any doubt of "the solemn fact."

"Let him glorify God in this name." What name? Is the Christain Church of the present day doing this, obeying this oracular instruction? Can you or I glorify God as a Methodist or a Baptist or a Presbyterian and conform to these simple requirements? Think it over.

"Judgment-rendered" or verdict instead of "judgment" merely R. V. which is too indefinite as we use the term.

"The Justified One" instead of "righteous" R. V. There are no righteous saints. For Christ himself says, "I came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance" and if they hear the call and come they are then only "justified ones." It takes quite a time and divine work to make them righteous.

"Creator" as here used is the generic creator not the casual creator.

Immortality.

This word is used by the inspired Apostle Paul, first to the Romans, see chapter 2, verse 2, in connection with these words, "To them who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality."

In the 8th verse we learn, "That God will render to every man according to his deeds, to those who seek in his appointed way, for glory, honor, immortality, he will render eternal life, but unto them that are contentions and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, He will render indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish upon every soul of a man that doeth evil, of the Jew first and also of the Gentile. Elsewhere this same apostle says to the Romans that, "the end of an evil course is death," for writes he, "the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life." Here we learn by its first occurrence that this boon, immortality, must, if we would ever hope to attain to that deathless, incorruptible state, for this is what the Word implies, we must seek for it.

Again Paul uses the word in his letter to Timothy 2nd letter, i. 10. He shows Timothy that Christ Jesus hath abolished death or rendered death powerless, and brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel. Here we learn that immortality was brought to light by Jesus Christ, having rendered death powerless by his own resurrection to an incorruptible life.

Again we learn that in order to inherit the Kingdom of God we must put on immortality, 1 Cor. 15, "So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption, it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory, it is sown in weakness, it it is raised in power, it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body. And so it is written, the first man Adam was made a living soul, the last Adam was made a quickening spirit. Howbeit that was not first which was spiritual, but that which is natural, and afterward that which is spiritual.

The first man is of the earth earthy, the second man is the Lord from heaven, and as is the earthy such are they also that are earthy, and as is the heavenly such are they also that are heavenly. And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. Now this I say brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God, neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. Behold I show you a mystery, we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed in a moment in the twinkling of an eye at the last trump, for the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed, for this corruptible must put on incorruption and this mortal must put on immortality, so when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written."

It is written in Isaiah the Prophet xxv. 8. In the 7th verse Jehovah declares by the mouth of the Prophet, "and he will destroy in this mountain the face of the covering cast over all people, and the vail that is spread over all nations. He will swallow up death in victory, and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces, and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth, for the Lord hath spoken it.

In speaking of the office work of Jesus, Paul says in Heb. ii. 14-15, "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, He also himself likewise took part of all the same, that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil, and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage."

In Rev. xx. 14, we learn the final end of death. The writer says, "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire." He tells us what this lake of fire is. This is the second death.

The Scriptures teach that God alone posesses immortality, deathlessness. He has promised an incorruptible life to mortal, to corruptible man, on conditions, and those conditions are easy to comply with. Who will do the things that are required by the God of Heaven, and thus secure an endless life in the everlasting Kingdom of the Lord?

Man by nature is not a probationer for that Divine Kingdom. That the God of Heaven will set up that kingdom that shall break in pieces all other kingdoms and itself stand forever. No, he must do something. He must keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus Christ. Natural man cannot inherit the Kingdom of God. He must be born again of water and of the Spirit in order to inherit that kingdom. God so loved the world that He gave His Only Begotten Son to die, whom he raised from the dead, that whosoever believeth in him might not perish but have everlasting life. If this life is sweet to us, immortal life is promised and will [illegible] given to all who are faithful.

Be faithful brethren to the coming of the Lord.

Contingent Fund.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to THE RESTITUTION office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

Causes for Thankfulness.

For all that God in mercy sends,
For health and children, home and friends,
For comfort in the time of need,
For every kindly word and deed,
For happy thoughts and holy talk,
For guidance in our daily walk,
For everything give thanks.

For beauty in this world of ours,
For verdant grass and lovely flowers,
For song of birds, for hum of bees,
For the refreshing summer breeze,
For hill and plain, for streams and wood,
For the great ocean's mighty flood,
For everything give thanks.

For the sweet sleep that comes at night,
For the returning morning's light,
For the bright sun that shines on high,
For the stars glittering in the sky,
For these and everything we see,
O Lord! our hearts we lift to Thee,
For everything give thanks.

Is Adventism Right or Wrong?

Where in the Bible can we read about the creation of a spirit man, who committed a spiritual crime, thus incurring the penalty of a spiritual death, but is offered a spiritual salvation, and a spiritual home, in a spirit land? If the Bible contains no such nonsense, why should theologians teach it? If God only made one man in the first place, does death make two? If death makes two men where God only made one, is not death a creator? And if so, which one is the living and true God that we should worship?

Now as God made a man out of dust, and this same man returns to dust again, if death makes another man, is not Death greater in this respect than God? For death makes a man out of nothing, while God took something to make his man of. If there can be found only the record of the creation of one man in the Bible, and he a man of dust, by what authority can men claim the existence of a spirit man, inside of a dust one? If God's offer of salvation is extended to the man he made, where does the man that death makes get his salvation? But if God made two men instead of one, why did he not say so? And if he made two men, both capable of sinning, why did he not mention the existence of different laws, one for each sinner? As he only mentioned one, was not both capable of suffering that one penalty? If so, was not both men material? And if the soul could not suffer the death penalty that was pronounced on the material man, would it have to suffer any penalty at all? How could it if [illegible] pronounced against it? If the body man was not responsible what did it have to die for? If the soul man was responsible why was it not punished as well as the body man? And if both were guilty, why not punish both? But if only one was created, only one man sinned; then there was only one man to die, and if he died, how could he still be alive? And if he was alive, how could he be dead? If when God made man out of dust it was necessary to add another inside man to make the first one conscious, of what use was the first? And if the inside man was conscious independent of the other, why not create him in the first place, and save the bother of creating the other? If the inside man was conscious, was he not responsible? If the outside man was unconscious was he not irresponsible? Did God punish the irresponsible body for the sins of the responsible soul man? If so, are his ways equal? If he punished the right party, was it not the body that was punished, and if so, was it not responsible? And how could it be responsible unless it was intelligent? And if it was intelligent and responsible, was it not a personality of itself?

And if so, what becomes of the two men theory? What was God's purpose in cutting off man's access to the tree of life? If it was that he might not "live forever," could he live forever if he did not eat of it? As he did not partake of it, did he not cease to live? And if he ceased to live, is he still alive? And if he is not alive now, must he not be dead? And if he died, then he must have been mortal, for if he had been immortal he could not have died. But if he was mortal, how could he transmit immortality to his posterity if he did not possess it? And if he could not transmit it, then where did they [illegible] it if it is already there? If God objected to the first sinner becoming immortal, is not the same objection still valid while he remains a sinner? If Adam was part mortal and part immortal, then there must have been two parts to Adam. Then must it not necessarily have taken the union of the two parts to have made Adam?

And if death separates the two parts, then how could Adam be in existence after the separation took place? For if it took the two parts to make Adam, then neither part of itself was Adam: then as death caused the dissolution of the parts, must it not have put an end to Adams existence? Does not the Bible tell us that Adam lived a certain period of time and then died? We would like to ask how much of Adam died? If you answer that it was only the body that died, was not the body Adam? For it is certain that Adam died; and whatever died was Adam. So how can you prove that Adam is not dead?

If the soul of Adam was a conscious personality, how could he transmit one to his posterity without robbing himself? And if he did not transmit one, where did theirs come from? At what period of time are soul and body united? Is it at conception, or at birth, or is it midway between? Is the soul a personality before it enters the body, or after, which? If it was not a conscious personality before entering the body, how can any one prove that it is after leaving it? Is it as large at birth as it is in middle or old age? Does it grow with the body? How large is it? Has it the same form as the body? If it has a form, must it not be substantial? And if it is substantial, how can it be immaterial? But if it is immaterial, we ask, how material fire could burn it? How could spirit friends embrace it? How could it come in contact with matter? How could it suffer, if the agents that would produce suffering could not come in contact with it? How could it be confined in a burning hell, if it could not be caught so as to put it there? How could they catch it if they could not touch it?

What is a corpse? Is it a dead man, or is it only a part of a dead man? If it is only a part, is the other part dead or alive? If the corpse is part of a dead man, then who is the man? If the soul is the man, then is it not the soul that is dead? For how could a corpse be part of a dead man, unless the man himself was dead? If you say that the man was alive, would it not be proper to call the corpse part of a live man? If so, then why do Bible writers speak of it as a dead man?

Has the saint a double personality! Can one personality be in heaven praising God, while the other is in the grave? Do they each have a character of their own?

If the word "death" means separation of soul and body, what does the phrase "second death" mean? Does it mean the second separation of soul and body? If so, would it not involve the Lord in the ridiculous position of raising up a dead body, putting a soul into it, judging it, and then taking out the soul again, and sending it off to hell once more? Then what would become of the body? Would it undergo corruption again? If the analogy between the first and second death was carried out, would it not be necessary for it to do so? Then what need of a resurrection of the body? If mind is a real man, does it survive death? If man has a mind can it exist independent of the man? If evil is eternal, how can God be Omnipotent? For will there not always remain in his universe something that he cannot destroy?

If a dead man knows more than one who is alive, why did not God make a dead man in the first place?

If we are heterodox in our faith, please define orthodoxy for us.—H. W. Bowman, Selected by J. S. Hatch.

The Real Sources of the Nile.

The report of Dr. Baumann's latest geographical investigation of the Kagera River, and the country lying between that stream and Lake Tanganyika, affords an interesting and important contribution to the history of the sources of the Nile and a singular confirmation of the ancient myths concerning the Mountains of the Moon. Sept. 5 last Dr. Baumann's expedition reached the Kagera River, and was received by the natives of Urundi with extraordinary demonstrations of joy and respect. He learned that Urundi, from Ujiji to Ruanda, for ages had been ruled by Kings who were supposed to be lineal descendants of the moon, and that the natives believed him to be the last King, who had died a generation before and who had now come back to them. On Sept. 11 the expedition crossed the Akenyaru, which is not, as supposed, a lake, but a river. Dr. Baumann also discovered that the so-called Lake Mworengo is in reality a river which flows into the Akenyaru, and came to the conclusion that there was no extensive sheet of water in Ruanda or North Urundi. On Sept. 10 he arrived at the sources of the Kagera, at the foot of the precipitous and wooded hills which form the watershed between the basins of the Rufizi and Kagera. This mountain chain is known to the natives by the name of the "Mountains of the Moon," and is held in peculiar reverence by them. Here Mr. Baumann maintains the real sources of the Nile to be, for if "it be acknowledged that the Kagera is the chief feeder of the Victoria Nyanza, it follows that the headwaters of the Nile can be none other than the Kagera itself in the Mountains of the Moon in Urundi, within the boundaries of the German East Africa."—New York Post.

The Search.

If we would by searching find out God, we must ask him first to search and find us. He knows us infinitely better than we know ourselves, and he knows whether we truly desire to find him. He who begins this Psalm (139) with the words, "O God, thou has searched me and known me," ends it with a prayer that God would still more search him and know him, verse 23. He wished to lay his heart open to God, well knowing that it was already before him, and that the darkness of willful concealment, as well as the light of candid confession, were "both alike" to that all-seeing eye, verse 12. Thus the Psalmist know something of God; he recognized that before him with whom we have to do all things are naked and open, for God had taught him this great truth in his deepest heart, and was ever teaching it more and more in answer to his prayer.

When God has thus searched the heart the man is no longer left in utter ignorance, standing aloof before an unknown God; he has had dealings which he can never forget with his Maker, and, having known God as the searcher, he cannot rest till the Holy Spirit of God reveals him also as the cleanser of the heart. To know God thus we must know him in Jesus Christ, who came to reveal him to man. Enlightened by this glorious relation, we know things which prophets and righteous men sought in vain to know, and are no longer forced to ask without hope of an answer, Can we find God? because now we can say, God has found us.

The Scriptures must be read by us in the same spirit that dictated them; thus also must they be understood.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.

VOL. XLII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APRIL 5, 1893. NO. 13.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

The Mother's Prayer.

Starting forth on life's rough way,
Father, guide them;
O we know not what of harm
May betide them;
'Neath the shadow of thy wing,
Father, hide them,
Walking, sleeping, Lord, we pray,
Go beside them.

When in prayer they cry to thee,
Do thou hear them;
From the stains of sin and shame,
Do thou clear them;
Mid the quicksands and the rocks,
Do thou steer them;
In temptation, trial, grief,
Be thou near them.

Unto thee we give them up,
Lord, receive them;
In the world we know must be
Much to grieve them—
Many striving oft and strong
To deceive them;
Trustful, in thy hands of love,
We must leave them.
—William Cullen Bryant.

Original.

Additional Arguments for "Thief on the Cross."

19. Jesus in Luke xxiv. 47 clearly teaches the necessity of both death and resurrection in order that Repentance and Remission of sins should be preached in his name.

20. It was the blood life of Jesus that ratified or confirmed the New Covenant, which alone could give life after death. "This is the New Covenant in my blood," said Jesus.

21. The resurrection of Christ was proof of the acceptance of his blood for ratification purposes, proved it to be ratified. And was he not entitled to be the first to have life from the dead by that covenant? Paul says he was the firstfruits. Would not the popular idea make him second to the thief?

22. Heb. xiii. 20 furnishes proof that God raised Jesus from the dead through that blood-ratified covenant. Read and ponder over it, all you who will not come to Christ for life. You will not wonder, then, that he told Mary that he had not yet ascended. He was only just born from the dead—born again under the agreement to redeem them from death and ransom them from the power of the grave, Hosea xiii. 14.

23. As Rom. iv. 25 teaches that Christ was raised again for the justification of believers, does not that include the Thief? If so, and he went to Paradise that day, did he not go in an unjustified state, seeing that Jesus was not yet raised?

24. The great truth that Christ was raised from the dead for our justification is infallible proof that the body of Christ was Christ himself, and did not go to Paradise that day. That being the case, the body of the Thief was the Thief himself, for Christ was made like unto his brethren, Heb. ii. 17, and therefore he did not go to Paradise.

25. The proof that Jesus did not go to Paradise is proof that he did not promise to go! I think the learned will say that in the Greek language, the adverb is rarely put before the verb and its adjuncts—nearly always after, as in the Lord's prayer, "Our needful bread, give us this day," the reverse of the English idiom. Jesus, therefore, did not contradict himself when he said to Mary, "I have not yet ascended to my Father."

26. Jesus could not have been mistaken as to his own identity when he said from heaven to John, "I am he who liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore." There is only one Christ. He was dead but is now alive for evermore, and has the keys to liberate us if worthy. As he died did not the Thief die? As Christ had to be raised in order to live again, must not the Thief?

27. The assumption that it was the immaterial souls of Jesus and the Thief which went to Paradise, begs the whole question, and should be proven or abandoned. The idea of proving immaterial souls by going to Paradise, and then proving Paradise by immaterial souls!

28. When our opponents tell us that Jesus went and preached to the Spirits in Prision during the three days and nights, what do they mean? Do they forget that he went to Paradise? or do they mean that the body went and preached to them?

29. Our opponents are morally bound to tell us who died for the ungodly, if Jesus lived uninterruptedly on, and journeyed to Paradise.

30. If Christ himself did not die, then must our opponents depend upon the resurrection of the tenement he lived in, for justification.

31. When Jesus said, "As Jonah was three days and three nights in the sea monster, so the Son of Man shall be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth, did he mean only a part of himself, and did he not mean the grave in earth when he said earth, instead of a beautiful garden under ground, as some will have it?

32. The finest work of our opponents has been done on the pronouns "Me" and "I." "Thou shalt be with Me," said of himself on the cross, means the soul, that was to wing its way to heaven. Three days later, the same Jesus said, "Touch Me not for I have not yet ascended to my Father." But he is some one else now: the "Me" is the body now; it was the soul before.

What! Is the body Me walking and talking without any soul in it, seeing the soul "Me" is gone to Paradise?

33. The words "today" in Psa. xcv. 7 had not expired when the epistle to the Hebrews was written, and the author defines it to mean "after so long a time," that today still continues; it is styled "the day of salvation," 2 Cor. vi. 2. And the "today" of 1 Sam. xii. 7, if literal, would limit the harvest time to one day and night.

34. Some claim that Paradise is away beyond the bounds of space. Why locate it so far off? Surely the Alpha Polaris (the polar star) would be far enough away. Had the Thief and Jesus travelled with the speed at which the earth rushes through space—2400 times faster than the New York and Chicago fast train, they would not have reached that star yet by a long way; but we have positive evidence that Jesus safely reached heaven in a week. From crucifixion to Pentecost was fifty days. Part of the time he was dead, and forty days he was with the disciples. The Rev. D. D. Read D. D. of New Jersey locates it in the star Alcyone, around which, he says, it takes the earth 20,000,000 of years to move. It takes light 700 years to travel thence to earth. Next?

35. It is objected that "neither time nor space applies to immaterial souls." I expect this is so, because there are none. But both time and space apply to the real material Jesus who died, was buried, and rose and ascended. He passed away slow enough to be watched out of sight by mortal eyes; and this same Jesus is so coming again, if the men in white told the truth.

36. If the Thief was with Christ in Paradise the day of the promise, then what?

It is not true that man's thoughts perish when his breath goes forth. Psa. cxlvi. 4;

Not true that the dead know not any thing. Eccl. ix. 5.

Not true the dead praise not the Lord. Psa. cxv. 17.

Not true the Jews and Disciples could not go where Jesus went; John xiii. 33.

Not true that the future life of the saints is hid with Christ in God, and they only appear with him in glory when he again appears; Col. iii. 4;—but

37. It is true that the Bible contradicts itself, and is not the book of God at all, if Jesus and the Thief went to heaven that day, and

38. Infidelity is given a weapon no one can withstand!

39. If our opponents still say the Thief and Jesus went to Paradise that day, let them prove it, and harmonize it with the Scriptures, and then they will be entitled to a respectable hearing.

Union with Christ.

The perfect union, between Christ and his followers is very aptly described by Jesus' metaphor, "I am the vine, ye are the branches." In all the world Jesus could have found no stronger illustration of his intimacy with those whom he has dignified with his friendship.

The intimacy here described is not that of daily life, between friend and friend, so capricious and transitory: 'tis something vastly different. Friends of inharmonious lives and uncongenial sentiments may still maintain a kind of intimacy of branch and vine. Jesus' metaphor bespeaks a perfect union in every part and faculty; so perfect, that questions of "essentials" and "non-essentials" cannot arise; so close, that a branch would consider it absurd to interrogate the vine as to the necessity for baptism. All such unseemly questions indicate a lack of that harmony without which there can be no branch and vine relation; and to destroy the harmony is to destroy at once the pertinency of the metaphor.

When we return to the great modern churches (all claiming to be branches) for an exemplification of this harmony and intimacy, we see something sadly spectacular. One branch is engaged in indicting another; several branches have combined to lop off one: and others are determining whether they are sufficiently large in numbers to sever themselves from the balance. Surely this scene affords a strong argument against their claim to that relation.

From this pardonable digression we turn to the edifying lesson taught by our Lord's words.

The relation between branch and vine suggests immediately the idea of likeness; and in this the metaphor is perfect; for the Gospels and Epistles are replete with passages showing the necessary likeness between Christ and the Christian. "Ye are complete in him" says the Apostle. That is, ye, like Christ, are now serving the noble end to which you have been happily called. "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ" says Paul; that is, let his exalted aims and thoughts be your aims and thoughts; emulate his virtues and exemplify his life; be faithful to his Truth; contend for the Faith; be vigilant in his service: in short, be like Him.

Now, as all valuable human attainments are a growth, the owners being the watchful cultivators, so the likeness to Christ, implied in our text, is a growth springing from careful, vigilant cultivation. Let no one suppose that God, in some mysterious way, takes us in hand, and, destroying the ennobling power of choice, moulds us into His Son's likeness without our active co-operation. Christianity implies activity—derives its strength, yea, its very life, therefrom—and in this it differs nothing from life in all departments of the creation. The Christian life, in this scene of preparation, has no attractions for those who seek repose—who delight in blissfull inaction. Its transcendent rewards presuppose a royal contest, and that, with an enemy from whose assaults there is no respite (ourselves). Its glories are attained by an active, spontaneous purification of ourselves from the defilment incident to our fallen natures; and the Christianity which does not produce this is a fraud and sham. "He that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure."

To be a "branch" then, is to be like the "vine," that is, we must be promulgators of His Truth (so often overlooked by the creeds); emulators of his life: possessors of his Spirit and "Mind;" keeping in perpetual view the dignity of our high calling.

Prophecy Being Fulfilled.

In the daily papers of last October there were pictures reproduced from some photographs taken at the time the Jaffa and Jerusalem railway was opened, which event took place September 26th, 1892. Jaffa has rather a sombre look with the Mediterranean seen in the distance: the ticket station, and a train of cars on the track ready to start for its destination (Jerusalem) are plainly seen. We next see the train emerging out from between the mountains of Judea rounding its base, crossing a ravine over which there is a curved iron bridge; on, on, and soon it approaches its destination amid the display of Turkish flags and Arab's curiosity. This railway will be prominent for its location and destiny.

The Prophet Isaiah, not only saw this railway in its inception, but also in its consummation. He describes the work thus: Go through, go through the gates; prepare ye the way of the people; cast up, cast up the highway; gather out the stones: lift up a standard for the people, Isa. lxii. 10.

Again in Isa. xl. 3-5, we have these words: The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, prepare the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God. Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low: and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain: And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. This making straight in the desert a highway for our God; mark well these words, make straight in the desert a highway, for who? for our God. This work is preparatory to the Lord's coming; it is a railway in the Lord's land to bring his people back to their own inheritance. It is also a fore-runner of Christ's second coming as John's was of his first advent. This seems conclusive from what follows, that the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together. A branch of this railway is now being constructed from Ramleh to Damascus reaching out in a northeast direction toward Assyria: also another branch starting from the same place (Ramleh) running southwest to Gaza, the objective point being Egypt. When these branches are completed then there will be a railway from Egypt to Assyria. Then this Scripture in Isa. xix. 23 seems to come in right here which reads: In that day shall there be a highway out of Egypt to Assyria, and the Assyrian shall come into Egypt: and the Egyptian into Assyria, and the Egyptians shall serve with the Assyrian. Then princes shall come out of Egypt: Ethiopia shall soon stretch out her hands unto God, Psa. lxviii. 31.

It seems that the prophet Nahum got a glimpse of these railway chariots when he used these words: The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall jostle one against another in the broadway; they seem like torches, they shall run like the lightning, then will I remember my covenant with Jacob, (that is after their dispersion among the Gentiles) and also my covenant with Isaac, and also my covenant with Abraham will I remember: and I will remember the land. Lev. xxvi. 42.

But ye, O mountains of Israel, ye shall shoot forth your branches and yield your fruit to my people Israel: for they are at hand to come Ezek. xxxvi. 8.

The Scriptures quoted above are being fulfilled at this present time, in the Lord's land, for he has said, the land shall not be sold forever, for the land is mine. Lev. xxv. 23. Then will the Lord be jealous for his land, and pity his people. Joel ii. 18. In those days, and in that time saith the Lord, the children of Israel shall come, they and the children of Judah together, going and weeping: they shall go and seek the Lord their God. They shall ask the way to Zion with their faces thitherward, saying come, and let us join ourselves to the Lord in a perpetual covenant that shall not be forgotten. Jer. l. 4 5.

Fear not, for I am with thee: I will bring thy seed from the east, and gather thee from the west: I will say to the north give up; and to the south keep not back: bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the end of the earth: even every one that is called by my name: for I have created him for my glory, I have formed him; yea I have made him. This people have I formed for myself; they shall show forth my praise. Isa. xliii. 5-7. And he shall cause them that come of Jacob to take root: Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit. Isa. xxii. 6. So shall he know that I am the Lord your God dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain, then shall Jerusalem be holy; and there shall no stranger pass through her any more. Joel iii. 17. Further on we see the same highway in its completeness, in full possession of the Lord's people, living under the benign reign of their Lord and King, the curse lifted, the earth yielding its strength, with unending life and bliss before them. And a highway shall be there, and a way; and it shall be called the way of holiness, the unclean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for those: the wayfaring men, though fools shall not err therein. No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon, it shall not be found there; but the redeemed shall walk there. And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy, and gladness, and sorrow, and sighing shall flee away. Isa. xxxv. 8-10.

D. C. SATTERLEE.

Who is to Blame?

A large number of those who profess Christianity in these last days, seem to read only the surface portion of the Scriptures. The Bible is considered by them a book of mysteries which none but the D. D's. can explain.

What the minister says is taken as law and gospel, and like the Doctor's patient, swallows the dose dealt out to him and asks no questions. The fact seems to be overlooked that it is a question of life or death as to how the Scriptures are understood. Every person knows full well, that in order to obtain a correct idea of arithmatic, it is necessary to commence at the foundation; and get a complete understanding of Mathematics.

So it is with the word. A failure to fully understand God's great plan of salvation, will result in failures all through the Christian career.

But who is to blame for the ignorance and superstition on the part of a large majority of the people? I contend that the popular preachers of the day are largely to blame

So long as ministers will teach that death don't mean death, but when men die they go straight to heaven, and are in a state of happiness, just so long will people believe it, because they say, we pay our preachers for reading the Scriptures for us, and of course having made it a life study, he ought to understand it aright. The Bible will tell its own story if they would only let it. Jesus says "Search the Scripture for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they that testify of me."

The writer attended the funeral of an aged lady, not long since who had been a member of the M. E. Church some forty years. A Methodist minister from one of our largest towns was called to preach the funeral.

He read a part of Cor. xv. on the resurrection. And if ever a good opportunity was offered to teach the people something in regard to the resurrection of the dead, this was one. But what did he do? He selected his text from Psa. cvii. 30, and failed to say one word about a resurrection. He said the one before him cold in death, was happy in heaven singing sweeter than any one there could possibly do. He further told the large crowd that to believe in Jesus was all there was to do, Trust him and he (Christ) would do the rest. How can men stand up before intelligent people and deceive them in such a manner.

To all who believe such the following is applicable.

Nothing either great or small,
Remains for me to do,
Jesus died and paid it all,
All to him I owe.

But what says the Bible? "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." Phil. ii. 12. And again, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might, for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave whither thou goest." Eccl. ix. 10.

Contrast the following with the popular teaching of the day. In death there is no remembrance of thee, in the grave who can give thee thanks? Psa. vi. 5.

The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence. Psa. cxv. 17.

How important then to have our faith built upon the prophets, Christ and the apostles, then it will stand the test. But if the foundation be loose, shifting sand, it will sooner or later be swept away, for the time is coming that will try every man's works of whatever sort it is.

Dear reader, do you want to be among the blood-washed throng? To see Jesus as he is! Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the ancient worthies? Then in that parable of the sower, receive the word in an honest and good heart. Keep it and bring forth fruit with patience.

J. J. CADY.

The Proposed Theocracy.

All Christians whose foundations are based upon the Abrahamic promises will believe that the Theocratic Kingdom as is contemplated by the "National Reform Association," will be anything but Theocratic in its nature, and if it should ever come into force would be nothing less than a human dictatorship whose fruits would be persecutions equal to the papal persecutions of the dark ages and would utterly fail to bring in everlasting righteousness.

The writer has for some time taught that all of our modern religious organizations will eventually with their train brother the labor organizations, fall into line with antichrist, and oppose the true Christ when He cometh in His kingdom. As He will not come as they desire, they will refuse to own Him as their king. Much is done in our day in all religious circles "In His Name" and for His glory and exhultation by people that know nothing of the oath-bound promise of the "Most High" and do not believe the blessed Gospel of the Kingdom even if they hear it in its primitive pureness, but look upon it as childish and fanatical. They think and believe that the desired blessings of the Theocracy cannot come without their aid, and instead of watching and patient waiting with continually praying "Thy Kingdom Come" they must go to work and from their point of view set up the desired kingdom which if they would succeed would only be another popedom and rob Jesus of His Davidic throne.

Next to death the greatest enemy to the happiness of our people is the drink traffic, and all organizations of mortal man for the removal of that curse has made it only worse. The high license law of which our Temperance organizations are the direct cause, has made these hot-beds of hell in our state (Pa.) respectable houses, and no one who patronizes them can from a legal point of view be looked upon as a disrespectful person. If these institutions were classified in our code of law, as they should be in a professing Christian land as lewd and immoral houses, not fit to be taxed, no person of any repute would dare to enter them. So with all other inventions of a purely human mind who is of itself depraved and incapable of doing any good, will and must fail to bring about the coveted blessings in social and political life, so the professed human Theocracy would utterly fail to bring in everlasting righteousness and "good will to all" but would rather increase the curse of a suffering human race.

Dear brothers and sisters, be not deceived by the sleight of sinful men but stand firm upon the oath-bound promise of the "Most High" and do not yield to the spirit of antichrist now working in the hearts of men. No power on earth is able to remove the curse and its cause, and to save a lost race. It remains for the true seed of Abraham who has overcome Himself to make all things new. All efforts made this side His coming to remove the curse, and to bring in everlasting righteousness of the Theocratic kingdom must and will fail. Therefore stand firm upon your watch-tower and only preach the Kingdom of God, and the times of restitution when Jesus comes again. Preach to a fallen race, Jesus and the resurrection as our only hope, not to be had on any part of the old Roman domain, but in the new order of things—in the kingdom of God— when Jesus will rule the world in righteousness. Watch and be vigilant, evil times are at hand.

Death a Blessing.

At a period in the history of the church from henceforth blessed are the dead that die in the Lord. For they rest from their labors and their works follow them. Perhaps they escape a painful time of trouble. But they rest from their labors and their works follow them, they are at peace and out of danger. Death may not be a calamity in all cases. There are many who will not die. A great blessing, but they may have painful troubles to meet before they reach that period.

One thing certain they will not go before those that are asleep, that truth forbids the common pretense that the sleeping ones have gone before the living. Perhaps we Adventists have taken too gloomy a view of death. They say the devil kills God's children. No, no. He could not kill Father Job. He was sick before Satan began. And he was sick after Satan had finished, and died in a good old age. Shout, Christian friends, over your dead ones "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

On the evening of March 24th, while working on our books a lamp bracket broke, the lamp was overturned and broken to pieces, the oil igniting, and before the fire could be extinguished the desk and side of the wall was burned. The books and papers on and in the desk were badly burned. A few letters that were awaiting replies before being filed, together with some manuscripts, besides many valuable papers were destroyed. Part of the oil fell on my clothing and it was necessary to give first attention to self, otherwise the fire might have been controlled sooner. We are indeed thankful that it is no worse. For ourself, the suffocation from smoke is all over with, and we are quite well again. Private papers of value are lost beyond recall and we must get along without them as best we can. Manuscripts that are burned can be replaced only by our faithful contributors. We can only ask their forbearance, and request a continuance of their favors. Because [illegible] manuscripts suffered worst of all, the copy for at least two issues of the paper being entirely lost.

Bro. [illegible] writes that the good work is still going [illegible], four [illegible] believing [illegible] to follow Christ, and [illegible] hearts are glad."

In our issue of March 22, a poem on page 5, "Only a little cloud?" has the appearance of being written by Sister Willard. She merely copied it and sent to us for publication, and does not claim the authorship. We do not know the author's name.

SISTER S. E. WILLARD, of Haddonfield, N. J. is at present visiting with Sister Chaplin in this City. Many years ago Sister Willard was here, and became well acquainted with the older friends, but the changes of life have filled the places of many of these with newer faces. The brethren and sisters met at the home of Sister Chaplin for their prayer meeting of last week, and we hope Sister Willard will find among the friends here some whose hearts are as warm as those of other years, though none can fill the vacancy caused by their removal.

THE little Church at Plymouth is prospering some what. At the meeting held by Brother Geiselman in March one young lady named Florence Burch, a daughter of Brother Loyal Burch north of this place, went forward, and desired baptism, which was attended to the same day. On last Sunday at the morning meeting two young ladies, Minnie Kipfer and Vina Hoffman oldest daughter of Bro. Josiah Hoffman, made the good confession and were immersed in the afternoon. In the evening another, Miss Susie Kauffman signified her desire to be united with the people of God, and on Monday morning was immersed. The Church is encouraged by this action on the part of the young, who have been attentive to the instruction received at home and in Sunday School. We pray the Father to be with and guide the steps of these dear sisters, that they may be among the number that shall be called to enter in to the marriage supper of the Lamb.

WHAT would we think of a God who, knowing that man would sin, yet made him capable of sinning to all eternity, and afterward sent his Son to die in order to put away sin? Would he be an all wise God? If his scheme to put an end to sin, fail, would it not be an everlasting defeat? If so, would he be an Almighty God? Would not that title belong to him by whom he had been defeated? Would a God of love make man immortal when he knew that the bulk of mankind would spend an eternity of suffering and sorrow, because out of harmony with himself? It has well been asked if the idea of the eternity of sin would not rob God of his perfection, Christ of his glory, and the Gospel of its power?

JUDGE Collins of Chicago struck alleged spirits a hard blow when he decided that acts directed by them were not legal.

SOME one has said that a day will come when these who are not born again or from above, will wish that they had never been born.

THE sufferer must remember that the more he suffers against his own will, the greater his submission to God's will, and this will ensure growth in God's favor.

IT was Thomas Erskine who said, "The Bible tells of the streams that it may allure us to the fountain; it tells us of the past acts of God's faithful love that we may be led to set our hope on God, to feel assured that he who hath helped will help, and He who hath loved will love unto the end.

MATTHEW Henry says: "They that make the glory of God their end, the Word of God their rule, the spirit of God the guide of their affections, the Providence of God the guide of their affairs, may be confident that the Lord goes before them as truly as he went before Israel in the wilderness, though not so sensibly."

A MIDWIFE at Iasiz, Russia, has been found guilty of suffocating one hundred and eleven children whose bodies were found in her cellar. As she had followed the business for nearly twenty years it is believed that her victims reach away into the hundreds, and yet, through the powerful influence of some of her former patrons, she was only sentenced to one year's imprisonment.

IT is said that ninety-one million dollars of foreign capital, mostly British, are invested in American breweries, and drain out of this country about five millions every year in the way of profits. What a devilish business that is! Five millions a year for ruining homes, blasting prospects, destroying life, making drunkards, and orphans, and widows for us to support! And besides this, drowning hundreds of thousands in perdition that possibly may hear, believe, obey and be saved, or at least subjects of the kingdom.

ALARMING news comes from Germany in regard to Prince Bismarck's health. He is reported as in a critical condition. He has been suffering for several weeks with neuralgia and insomania, and the doctors have not been able to conquer these two old enemies of his, which attack him every winter. His strength and vigor is giving way rapidly. On the first of April he will be 78 years old if living; and when this is taken into account, together with the fact that he refuses to have his wine limited, or to be moved to another climate, the gravest apprehensions are entertained.

READER, are you watching for the morning, the morning without clouds? We have read that on the night preceding the first of August, 1834, the day the slaves of the West Indian Isles were to be set free, many of them did not go to bed. Tens of thousands of them [illegible] in their places of worship, singing praises to God, waiting for the first streak of the light of day. Some of them went to the hills where they could get the first gleams, and signal to those below that they were men, and not chattels any longer. Well will it be for us if we are ever on the outlook for the morning, and the bright star of the morning. If we fall asleep now it may be a fatal sleep. It may be a hard matter to keep awake; but as it is a question of life or no life, kingdom or no kingdom, crown or no crown, it would seem that self interest should keep us awake in the absence of nobler motives. Let us heed the spirit's injunction not to sleep as do others, and be ever watching for the morning.

The Millennium.

Prof. Totten announces that the millennium is at hand. That we are actually in the midnight hour, and the parable of the ten virgins is about to be fulfilled, and the golden age of a thousand years of peace will be ushered in next September. "The clock," said the professor, "is still striking; the tenth stroke will end its sounding at the coming March equinox, the eleventh in June, and the twelfth or final stroke, at the September equinox of the current year. After that none of the virgins need be in doubt as to the 'time,' or as to what or who is at hand." "Many facts," he says, "assures me that we are at the midnight hour of the Christian dispensation, and I am sure that the seventh angel of the Savior's revelation to St. John is soon to sound the seventh trumpet and final trumpet, which lifts the veil from the mystery of God, but which is not to be confused with the 'final trump,' as commonly understood. In spite of misrepresentations to the country, I do not anticipate the end of the world, but the beginning of a new and better dispensation. I anticipate a crisis 'tomorrow' and millenium 'the day after.' I expect the first resurrection very soon but not the second until a thousand years of golden age have sped away."

The above is an item that appeared in the press dispatches of a late date, regarding a lecture delivered by Prof. Totten a short time since. We give it place in order to make occasion to say once more that the management of this paper are not yet prepared to commit themselves to the setting of definite time for the Lord's coming, but rather urge the people of God to a more prayerful and earnest watching and waiting for that event so dear to each heart. The reason we do not wish to advertise Totten is because we do not believe he knows the time of the Lord's Second Advent, any more than any other man. We believe that time is with the Father, and that while he has given an outline of what the condition of the world will be when it is ripe for that event, the time he holds himself. We are content to await the Father's will. We know full well that it is urged by friends of Prof. Totten that he does not positively and actually set the time for the Lord's coming. This may be true, and we will grant he does not, but he does positively and actually set the time for other events, which when they occur are bound to be immediately followed by the appearing of the Lord. We have no objection to those who chose reading and following out the calculations of Prof. Totten, Bro. Russell, or a host of others who are now at this business of time setting, each differing widely, however, but while doing so try and be not carried away by the idea that this one or that seems to be "specially inspired" for this time. Rather remember that these are mortal men, and are only just as positive as others have been in days gone by. The admonition is watch and be ready, for in such a time as ye think not the Son of Man will come. May we each be ready for him, and not be ashamed to meet him, but rejoice.

Editor Restitution:

I send in this $1.50 to renew my paper for 1893. It should have been sent sooner, but I could not well do so. I enjoy the paper so much of late, and am so glad to read the letters from many whose names have become familiar to us, as also to follow the thoughts of its writers on topics of common interest to us all. I will renew the paper for the brother at Sioux City soon, as his six months must be nearly out.

I wish to say in regard to my queries of a former letter, that I misstated the words of Prof. Totten in regard to the Alpha and Omega. He says in his book that it was in the year 96 that the vision was shown to John on the isle of Patmos when Christ declared himself to be the beginning, and the ending, the Alpha and Omega. As Christ was not the beginning of time which has no end, nor of creation, or the created, which has no entire end, he must, I think, have meant the duration of the vision. At least there seems to be a significance in the Greek numerals of Alpha being 1000, and of Omega 800, which being added to 96 makes 1896. While I have not read all of the Professor's book, nor endorsed all I have read, yet I will say he shows a scholarly research not attained by any other writer after whom I have read, and I recommend his studies to all candid minds who wish to find startling bits of history, both past and present, that have at least a strange coincidence with the prophets. He does not set any time for the advent of Christ, neither is he a novice.

I cannot think with Brother G. that the Antichrist is the natural man, for many things tend to the fact that it is some specific person. And the beast of Revelation 13, seems to be a definite person, one who will be helped by the dragon, and receive power of the dragon. And power was given to continue a limited time (forty, and two months) and whose number is the number of a man, not all natural men. He was also have power to cause men to worship the beast.

As to the professor using the chronology of the common version, I must say he uses all versions, and applies the test of astronomical reckoning to them using both solar and lunar time, and gives us more historical research than has been often seen on these lines of the right.

While we may gather from passing events that our Lord is near to come, we know that the day and the hour the Father has kept in his own power, for if we knew them there were no need of the command to watch, yet we are fully convinced that the midnight oil necessary for the trimming of our lamps is not more heart preparation. Although that too is necessary, for there had been some announcement that the Bridegroom was to return, and all the ten virgins went out to meet him and all alike slumbered and slept. But the Apostle has said "Ye brethren are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief." No, no, let us not deceive ourselves, that oil must be that which will throw light along the way of his approach, for the oil in the lamps of the virgins was to light them individually along the way he was to come, neither could they be lighted by another's lamp, nor borrow from another. Oh, let us not be led to the other extreme, and for fear we become fanatical, neglect to study all that is written, and discern what is their fulfillment in passing events lest we at last be 'taken' with astonishment, for even Wm. Miller was making the first announcement and was only mistaken as to where his warning was to be applied.

Noah received warning 120 years before the flood came, and had faith to work steadily on under clear skies all that time, so the first great sign given by our Savior came in the dark day of 1780, just 120 years before 1900 the end of the week, or seven years of trial, or troublous times into which many think we are now entering, and the midst of which some are looking for the Lord to appear, and while we should take no one's views on trust, nor enter into idle speculation, we should not turn away from evidence unheard.

It will pay any one who can do so to read the "Our Race Series" of Colonel Totten for his historical research, and much of his application of prophecy to passing events, for while we do not receive all of it, it opens a wide field for thought and study. At any rate he is sounding out a warning to "be ye also ready" that should not be unheeded. I am watching with intense interest God's dealings with his ancient people, it seems truly that judgment has begun at the house of God. Surely they are being led in strange ways to bring them out of the nations, and plant them in their own land. Truly the stream runs more rapid, deep, and wide as it nears the ocean. May God show us each our work in these important times, for certainly it seems that we are in the day of his preparation.

Socinians.

Faustus Socinus, who died in Poland in 1604, is generally considered the founder of the sect of Socinians. Concerning that sect the "Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge," 1848, remarks:

"Their sentiments are as follows: that the Father, and he alone, is truly and properly God; that the Son had no existence whatsoever, before he was conceived by the virgin Mary; and that the Holy Spirit is no distinct subsistence from the Father and the Son, but that the title is merely figurative, denoting the power or energy of God. They confess that Christ is called God in the Holy Scriptures; but contend that it is only a deputed title, investing him with great authority; and that while he is nominally God, he is really nothing more than a mere man; yet that he was an extraordinary person, acting under a divine commission as a teacher of truth and righteousness; and that in him the prophecies relating to the Messiah were completely, though not literally, fulfilled. They admit the whole history of his ascension and glorification in its literal acceptation; but, believing him to be a mere man like themselves, though endowed with a large portion of divine wisdom, they assert that the only objects of his mission were to teach the efficacy of repentance, without any proper atonement for sin, as a means of restoring us to the divine favor; to exhibit in his life and conduct an example for our imitation; to seal his doctrine with his blood; and in his resurrection from the dead, to furnish a proof of the certainty of our resurrection at the last day...... The Socinians of the sixteenth century believed that Christ was advanced to the government of the universe, after his resurrection, and that religious worship was to be paid to him; but those of the present day generally consider this notion unscriptural, and therefore reject it; and, regarding him as a mere man like themselves, they very consistently withhold from him all religious homage."—Page 1051.

Adam Clarke on Heb. i. 8. says, "Socinianism produces a kind of general infidelity, or disrespect to the Sacred Writings, so that several parts of them are rejected as being uncanonical, and the inspiration of a major part of the New Testament strongly suspected."

Let us take care not to tie such a millstone as Socinianism about the neck of the Gospel of the Kingdom, for on the belief of that Gospel our eternal salvation depends. The teaching of Socinus concerning the nature of Christ is an old and deadly error refuted long ago by profound students of the Bible.

Dr. John Thomas devoted much time to the study of that most profound subject—the nature of Christ. In 1869 commenting on 1 Jno. v. 20, he wrote, "Deity is 'very God.' Christ, the Word, who 'in the beginning laid the foundations of the earth,' therefore pre-existed before the birth of 'the body prepared' of the substance of Mary, and which lay dead in the tomb. That body named Jesus, had no existence until developed by the Christ-power. Federally indeed, it pre-existed in the loins of Abraham, and we in Adam, before birth, but not otherwise. The pre-existent Christ, or Deity, was not the less Deity because he veiled himself in flesh, in our sinful flesh, and styled himself JESUS, or he who shall be Savior......If one side of the shield be black, and the other side white, what is the color of the shield? Jesus Christ in the day of his weakness, had two sides—the one DEITY; the other MAN—the eternal Christ-Power veiled in and manifested through the flesh created from the ground......This is Jesus Christ the true Deity, whom to know is life eternal."—Ambassador, for August.

Connecting the Baltic and Black Sea.

The scheme for the construction of a canal from the Elbe to the Danube, for the purpose of connecting the Baltic and the Black Sea, has assumed definite shape. The Austrian government is to provide a great part of the capital and the remainder has been subscribed by a London syndicate. The work is to be undertaken by London engineers.

A Singular River.

The waters of the River Tinto in Spain are as yellow as topaz and petrify the sand in a short time. If a stone falls into the river and rests upon another they both become perfectly united and conglutinated in a year. It withers all the plants on its banks, as well as the roots of the trees, which it dyes of the same hue as its waters. No fish live in the stream.

Obituary.

Schoolie S. Pike son of S. N. and M. L. Pike was born Oct. 4th, 1871, and died Feb. 20th, 1893, at Kalamazoo, Mich. He was at this time in the employ of J. C. Thoma, the leading jeweller Burdick Block Kalamazoo, Mich. Boarded and roomed at the Sill House, a private boarding house on Rose Street where he breathed his last. He leaves a father, mother, one brother, four sisters, grand-parents, and a host of other friends to mourn his loss.

S. N. and M. L. PIKE.

A MEMORIAL.

Schoolie Pike, the subject of this sketch was born in Watson, Allegan Co., Michigan and from his birth had heard of the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God, and the soon coming King. He was a quiet, kind and obedient child and early in life showed a desire to bear the name of Christ. At the age of fifteen, with several young associates, he was immersed and had up to the day of his death led an exemplary Christian life. He had been a dyspeptic from childhood and at times become very melancholy, saying life had no charms or brightness for him and he would be better off if he were dead. Six months ago, he being of age, sought employment in Kalamazoo, where he found what seemed to be well-fitting for him in the office of Mr. Thoma, a jeweller; he was making rapid progress in his chosen profession, and was held in high esteem by his employer; his associates were never the low and vulgar, but he always sought the company of the good and pure. But in spite of all on Feb. 20th, a fated spell took possession of him. For weeks he had complained of a headache and on this evening he complained of the pain being unusually severe, and was urged by friends to see a physician. Instead of doing this he went to his room, undressed, packed every thing in his trunk and went to bed, taking the deadly weapon with which ended his life. A 32 calibre revolver was found in his hands next morning and he lay dead with the fatal wound in his right temple, showing how true had been his aim. Without a light his room mate came in at ten and went to bed and had lain by him all night and only discovered Schoolie's condition in the morning. Bro. L. E. Conner who was holding revival meetings in Watson at the time preached the funeral sermon from the text "Thy brother shall rise again." The entire service was pathetic and impressive. Brother and Sister Pike and family have the sympathy of the entire community. Beautiful flowers adorned the casket, but brought no comfort to the sorrowing friends. Schoolie was beloved by all as the immense crowd at the funeral attested.

M. A. WOODWARD.

We laid our darling down to rest.
Away from toil and strife,
But why we had to God knows best;
It may save another's life.

He rests in peace from a world of care,
With no more heart aches here;
We must so live to meet him there,
Where the Son of God can cheer.

His life was one of the purest kind;
No one had his enmity,
But kindest words for every one,
So gains their sympathy.

But the dreaded hand of death came in,
And took his life away,
But God is able him to restore
To life and immortality.

Farewell loved one, now we leave thee
In the hands of God most pure;
For we know that in his keeping
Your eternal life is sure.

Oh! we miss thee from our circle;
Here no can fill thy place,
But we're waiting now till Jesus comes
To meet you face to face.

A Famous Hymn.

When Bishop Heber's famous missionary hymn, "From Greenland's Icy Mountains," which he wrote in 1824, when in Ceylon, first reached this country a lady in Charleston was much impressed with the beauty of it, and particularly anxious to find a tune suited to it. She ransacked her music in vain, and then chancing to remember that in a bank down the street was a young clerk who had considerable reputation as a musical genius, she sent her son to the clerk with the request that he write a tune to fit it. In just half an hour the boy came back with the hymn, and the melody thus dashed off in hot haste is today sung all over the world and is inseparably connected with the hymn. The young bank clerk was Lowell Mason.—Young Men's Era.

In Silence.

Frances Ridley Havergal says, "The dew distils in silence; so does the speech of our God; most frequently in the silence of trust. In that stillness, God's silent love can be condensed into dew-like communications: not read, not heard, but made known by the direct power of the Spirit upon the soul."

The great thing for us is to have the soul in such a quiet and trustful attitude before God as to receive these communications, distilled like dew. We must be still before God, and in a receptive mood, if we would hear his voice, inly speaking and making to us the revelations of the things of the kingdom. "Be still, and know that I am God" is the Bible order. And, in the reception of these divine communications, we shall be refreshed and strengthened, as is the earth by the softly falling dew. They may come silently, and yet be clothed with power, bringing us into the midst of marvelous spiritual verities.

The great thing is to have the communications between God and the soul open, that there be no obstruction. Sin is the deadly obstructor. It should be utterly destroyed, so that there shall be no discordant voice within, so that God can speak to us.—Christian Standard.

Conference Notice.

The annual conference of the churches of God of the Abrahamic faith in Iowa, will meet at Clarkesville, Butler Co. Iowa, June the 2nd, 1893, and continue over two Sundays. The large audience tent and a half dozen or more small or living tents will be ready to accommodate those who come. And as the preaching brethren are always ready to make any sacrifice to be present, and labor for the interest of the meeting and the good of all, we hope and earnestly entreat all who have an interest in the cause of the Master and are looking for his soon coming to make a sacrifice also if necessary to be at this meeting, for we are persuaded that while all mean to be steadfast, yet there is an ominous tendency to falling away among all Christian societies that will proceed his coming. Then let us, as many as can possibly do so, go to this meeting, determined to make it a means of filling our lamps with that oil that will throw light along the way of the bridegroom's approach, so that if we slumber and sleep before his arrival we will be ready when the final cry is sounded to go out to meet him, and go in with him to the wedding, and not have the door shut upon us while we go to seek for light. He may be nearer than we think.

Nature of Man.

A discourse delivered by Eld. Almus Adams on the Nature of Man at the Barnes Opera House Ainsworth, Neb. March 8, 1893.

The subject for to-night as already announced is "The Nature of Man." We want to discuss to-night my friends the subject from a Bible standpoint, and from the standpoint of reason coupled with the Bible. You will find the text recorded in Heb. ii. 6. "But one in a certain place testified, saying, What is man that thou art mindful of him? or the son of man that thou visitest him?"

As the most of us have come together to-night for the purpose of studying the word of God, let us do it with simplicity and in the Spirit of truth. Jesus said, "God is Spirit and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." That is we must manifest the right spirit, and a spirit that is in harmony with the truth, when we worship God in a manner to be accepted. Therefore I trust that when you come here to-night if you ever had any prejudice you left it out side, and that you have come here for the purpose of listening to what God has said.

A solemn question has been propounded here. "What is man that thou art mindful of him? or the son of man that thou visitest him?" My friends what do you think you are any-way? Why, one says, I think I am a dual being, that is, there is the natural and the spiritual, or the outward man and the inward man. Now that is the way that the world believes. There are two prevalent beliefs in the world. One is that man by virtue of his creation is immortal, that is that man possesses a dual nature; that within this mortal there is an immortal soul that survives the death of the body; while there is another class that believe that they are mortal and that all there is of man is what we see and know of him, and that he does not possess in this life any part of immortality. To that class I belong, and I am glad of it because it is the truth; you may question that, and if you really don't believe it I am glad you call it in question, until you find out in the word of God which is right. Where did this belief come from? The question arises now; did we both get our belief out of the Bible? No. God does not contradict himself, therefore you are either right and I am wrong, or I am right and you are wrong. Here is another thing; all questions have two sides. I never knew of a question but what had two sides. This is a fact too that when people hold opposite view both can not be right and possibly both may be wrong; but this question is unlike any other in this respect, there is no neutral ground, you are all either mortal or immortal, you cannot be half mortal or half immortal. It leaves the question in just this way, that you are right and I am wrong, or I am right and you are wrong. When this question is asked, what is man? Where shall we go to find out? The majority of the Christian world go to the heathen philosophers for a settlement of this question. The heathen philosophers were responsible for this doctrine being handed to the world in theology, and I am sorry to say that the world at large are not aware of the fact that they are believing a doctrine that originated with them; but it is a fact. I will show you how that can be, and I believe you will all see the point. You know that the Bible teaches us that there was a time when the Jews were the chosen people of the Lord, that the prophets were all Jews, the apostles were Jews, and Christ himself was a Jew, and the Bible says "Salvation is of the Jews." We see in times past, in Plato's day, the Gentiles had not received the gospel, they were called heathen nations, and these heathen nations having no revelation, not having ever had it revealed unto them that there was another life, and having a natural desire for it, they consequently commenced to study in reference to this matter. They knew nothing of the coming of Jesus, they knew nothing of the resurrection, consequently you can see just were they stood. They possessed this natural life the same as the Jews, and having a desire for a future life sought some way to obtain it. The only way that they could see out of it was this; that there must be a part of man that did not die. They could see people dying around them on every hand and returning back to dust. They knew nothing of the resurrection therefore their knowledge stopped at the grave, consequently they bridged over the grave, teaching there was a part of man or the real man that did not die. That is the only way that they could see out of it. Place yourselves back there, how much would you know about the future? With all the learning we have today could you find out what is beyond the grave without a revelation from God but with that natural desire that we have for life it would no doubt set some of our learned men to thinking and philosophizing. You may wipe out the Bible, and you may forget God and forget Christ and in ten years from now the world will have some kind of a god and be worshiping it. Yes it is natural for man to look beyond this life and to worship some kind of a god. These men therefore knowing nothing of the future simply taught that there was a part of man that did not die—that it went on, and lived separate from the body. But if they had had the revelation of God upon this question and could have seen that God could raise the dead they would never have had any use for that doctrine, but it was taught and believed and handed down from one to another until it was finally incorporated into the church creeds and today is a doctrinal cornerstone. I know that some will question this but it is nevertheless true. I believe that when the question is asked "What is Man?" that there is no one so able to tell us as God himself, and God being the Maker and Creator of man, He knows how he made him, and he knows his nature. He knows him, the Bible says, "Altogether." Therefore I am going to consult God and ask him what we are, and when I have found out I am going to believe what he says about it. I invite your attention to Gen. ii. 7. Listen to the reading of this text. "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground." What are we studying? "What is Man?" Then man according to the text just quoted is "dust." What does it say next? "And breathed into his nostrils." Whose nostrils? Man's nostrils. "the breath of life, and man became a living soul." It doesn't say God breathed into man an immortal soul. It was the man that was formed out of the dust of the grund that became a living soul or creature by receiving the breath of life. We learn that God made two forms, the first he called earth, the second he called man. The forms are different but the material is the same and both likewise without life; therefore the difference in name can only be the result of the difference in the organism. As form always represents design it is evident from a study of the organism of the form (man) that it was designed to receive life. Life therefore being a state, never had anything to do with the man's name or nature, both remain the same. The condition of the man is changed, he is now a living man, an animate form, whereas it was inanimate before, the only point to be settled is as to whether the condition now is eternal or temporal. That the latter is true is proved from the fact that when the life leaves the organism man resumes his former condition. We can truthfully say that when death ensues man becomes as though he had not been. The life eminating from God goes back to God, the form that God made of the dust goes back to dust; the condition is just the same as it was before he was formed at all. The life Adam possessed was not his—the life you possess is not yours, it is simply loaned to you, but while you have the loan of this life you must make provisions for another, that, when you get it you can call it your own, why? Because you have worked for it? but what did you ever do to gain this present one? We will leave that for the time being and go on a little farther. The man now has no helpmeet. God now says he caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and while in that deep sleep he took from his side a rib and he made Eve. Let us take the position now that the breath of life breathed into Adam was the living or immortal soul. Then what about Eve? Does it say anywhere that God breathed into her the breath of life? No. But let us now follow this pair into the garden and out again.

He says that he took the pair and put them in a garden, the garden of Eden, and he told them that they might have the right to every tree in the garden except one,—"the tree of the knowledge of good and evil." He told them they should not eat of it "for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." God leaves them and goes away, finally the serpent comes along and accosts the woman and requests her to eat of the forbidden fruit, but Eve said that God had told them that they should not eat. No, she says, not touch it lest we die. Don't you see Eve understood that —certainly she did! Here was the devil—let him be what he may—He is there on a mission, and his desire is to cause the fall of Adam and Eve, and cause their death and wipe them off the face of the earth. He finds when he meets them that there has been a law left there and that is that they were not to touch that tree lest they die. He finds those parties believing it. He says at once, being a subtle creature, that there is but one way for him to accomplish his mission. He sees readily that there is this fact existing—that when God says "you have the right to all of these trees except the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, and when you eat of that tree you shall surely die—it simply means this—that as long as they did not eat of it they would not die. Of course the devil sees there is but one way to bring death into the world and that is to get them to eat of that fruit. Then my friends I believe you and I would be subtle enough to see how to do that, and there was but one way that it could be done, that was to get Eve to believe that it wouldn't kill her. He sees that God meant just what he said, and the only way now that he could carry his desired end was to get that woman to believe that it wouldn't kill her. I might come here with a little white powder and try to persuade you to take a dose of it, and you might think it was strychnine and just as long as you thought it was strychnine you wouldn't take it, but I might work upon you and persuade you to believe that it was a harmless powder instead of strychnine and get you to take a dose and it would kill you just the same. Then the devil commenced upon that line and he got Eve to believe that it would not kill her. How quickly he said, "Thou shalt not surely die, but God doth know that in the day thou eatest thereof your eyes shall be opened." Then she took of the fruit of the tree and did eat, and gave to Adam and he was foolish enough to eat. Then God appeared again upon the scene, and he found that they were hid. Adam commenced excusing himself when he heard God walking in the garden. God knew something was wrong and he said, Have you eaten of the tree which I told you, you were not to eat of? And Adam commenced doing like most men do—accusing the woman. Yes, he said, Eve gave to me and I did eat, but it did no good to make excuses. The woman here arraigned the devil, she said the devil persuaded her and she did eat. The devil, having no one to attribute his conduct to, received the sentence without murmuring. Here God commenced pronouncing upon them their sentence, and when he came to Adam, He told him in so many words "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return to the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return! Who? Adam, and we have never heard tell of but one Adam and that was the one made of the dust of the ground. That is the truth. But here, is the point I want you to see that God said to Adam, "Thou shalt surely die." Positive language. The devil comes up and says, "Thou shalt not surely die." There are two statements, just alike only one is reverse to the other. Which one are we going to believe? My friends let me tell you now in solemn tones that that statement deceived our first parents and it has deceived their posterity. You may have never thought of it in this light but it is true, that if we believe and teach that the real man does not die it is the same pernicious doctrine taught by the serpent when he said, "Ye shall not surely die," and the doctrine, my friends, of a principle in man that won't die is the same thing, isn't it? Whenever we say that the real man, the true man, does not die it is the very same thing that deceived Eve and destroyed her. That is a solemn thing to think of. God plainly told them that they should surely die; the adversary said the opposite. Which told the truth? According to the facts God did, because he pronounced the death penalty upon Adam and in nine hundred and thirty years it was carried out, and Adam died and he is dead yet, and there is no part of him living, if there is where do we find it so recorded? There is another thing to take into consideration here, and that is, that after God pronounced the penalty upon them and drove them out of the garden he placed over the east gate a cherubim and a flaming sword which turned every way. What for? To guard the way of the tree of life. What did he want to guard the way of the tree of life for? Let God tell us "Lest he put forth his hands and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live forever." I thought he had something that lived forever. Not according to that. Why didn't God want Adam and Eve to live forever? I thought he placed them in a condition to live forever? Yes, he did, just as long as they were obedient they would have lived forever, if they had never disobeyed they would have been living yet; death never would have entered into the world if they had not disobeyed, for death entered through disobedience says Paul, and if they had never disobeyed they would never have died. It is plain that if they had remained loyal they would still be alive, the same Adam and Eve, too, that God formed of the dust of the ground, not a spirit. We can see that there was a time when God desired that they should live forever. What has changed his mind? Disobedience. Here is the thought—Adam and Eve are transgressors and sinners. So you can see that the result would have been this—had God left them in the garden so they could have had access to the tree of life—He would have had immortal sinners. That is just exactly why he drove them out and guarded the tree of life—to prevent having immortal sinners. We are told by the most prominent preachers of the day that saint and sinners alike are immortal, and I will tell you the quicker we get rid of it the better; don't let us believe anything that has such an origin as that when can see so plainly that God drove them away from the tree to prevent having immortal sinners, so don't let us try at this late date to change it. It is plain that Adam and his entire posterity lost their life and character alike by disobedience, and must therefore regain them by obedience. But here we ask the question. What is immortality? It is deathlessness not only that it is unchangeable. Let us see now if we can not prove it? The Bible tells us that God is immortal it also tells us that he changes not and that He is the same yesterday, to-day and forever. Why? Because he is immortal, he possesses that nature that is unchangeable and eternal; therefore if you and I have within us a part of God or his nature it must also be deathless, eternal, and unchangeable. As it is a gift of God, and all good and perfect gifts are from God, man must have received it in that condition, hence universal salvation because it can not change. If I thought you were already immortal here in Ainsworth you would never find me fooling away my time preaching here. What would be the use? You can never change, God is immortal and if you are immortal and are subject to change, why not God? But you will find by the study of the Scripture that when you get to be immortal you will be like God, you will never change. As already stated God drove man out of the garden of Eden to prevent having immortal sinners. You can see by this action upon the part of God that he never intended that sin should go beyond the flesh—that is become immortal. As sin is to be destroyed God kept it within the bounds of destruction (hence mortal.) Paul presents this thought in the 8th chapter of Romans 3 verse and incorporates it in the mission of Jesus. The text reads—"For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God, sending his Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh." Where did the Savior condemn it? He condemned it in the flesh; and there is where it is—not that man has an immortal soul or spirit that is sinful. The sin of man rests in the flesh and Jesus condemned it there consequently sin can never go beyond the flesh. That will stand the test and no reasoning will ever change it. We have seen that it was never intended that sin should go beyond the flesh yet if the doctrine be true that God has a burning hell somewhere and immortal souls are there, then we have got millions of sinners beyond the flesh and God's word broken. I want now before noticing this part any farther to notice a little in reference to the condition of man in death. People tell us that when man dies, the real man lives on in a conscious state—that is the conscious part of man is the spirit. Yes, says one, I know a text that will prove that. I know one that will too—if it can be proved. Eccl. xii. 7. reads "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." Well now, that is a clincher is it not? Don't understand me to be teaching that man has no spirit; we believe as strong as anybody in the world that man has a spirit, but we do not believe that it is any part of man, ever was or ever will be—it is simply called the spirit of man. Don't you see that when a man dies the spirit returns to God? But look here, they were the dust of the earth as it was. We can see how the body can return to the earth because there is where it came from. You can not return to this house unless you have been here before. You couldn't return to the dust unless you had been there before. "And the spirit shall return unto God who gave it," that proves that the spirit has been there before. The text is brought up to prove a conscious existence at the right hand of God; then my friends if it returns there as it was before will you please tell me some things that you saw and enjoyed when you were there the first time? I don't believe there is a person before me tonight but what can see this, that if the spirit goes back in a conscious state it must have been conscious before, because it uses the word return, and if you don't know anything about what you saw there before, the spirit is very forgetful. Here is another thought—Theology teaches us that the spirit is the part of man that does the hearing, the thinking, the feeling, the tasting, and the smelling—that the five senses belong to the spirit. Very well, I want to test that point in the theology for a moment. Bishop Foster, acknowledged to be the most eloquent and learned man in the M. E. Church, during their great convention in Omaha last spring made this statement as published in the Omaha Bee, "You think you see Bishop Foster"—but he says "You do not see me. you just simply see the house that I, Bishop Foster, lives in, and that these eyes are only the windows that the spirit looks out of." That is the doctrine, my friends, of theology; but look here—when a man gets those windows put out he can't see, can he? No. Then it must be the spirit that is blind; if the spirit does the hearing, when you become deaf, it must be the spirit that is deaf, and so with all the five senses. So you see Bishop Foster's statement proves too much for him—therefore proves nothing except that in death man is wholly unconscious, because in death the five senses are all destroyed and if they belong to the spirit it is the spirit that is unconscious. Now these things go to prove that there is no such thing in existence as a conscious spirit in man; it is the man himself, that is conscious, the organism is the man and the consciousness remains just as long as he is alive. When man dies he returns to dust and we will leave him there till tomorrow night when we will talk of his hope and resurrection.

There are two or three points here I want to call your attention to before I close. I want you to meditate over this a little between now and tomorrow night. Turn to Eccl. 3rd chapter commencing at 18th verse and let us listen to Solomon. I said in mine heart concerning the estate of the sons of men, that God might manifest them, and that they might see that they themselves are beasts." What! the world raises up in horror when we quote that and go away and say, "That man says we are no better than beasts." If you have any fault to find with that, find it with Solomon, he was an inspired man and I am not responsible for the statement. It won't sound so bad when you understand what God, in Christ, has done for us in this lowly state.

Of the three kingdoms: animal, vegetable and mineral, which do you belong to? We are taught in school that we belong to the animal. As we are talking of man's nature, we will listen to Solomon farther upon this point. He says, "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts, even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth so dieth the other." Yes, they both loose their breath and die exactly the same. When God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life, he breathed exactly the same into beasts. We talk of man having a different breath to the animal, but Solomon says they have the same. I will take inspiration for it—that they do have the same. "So that a man hath no preeminence above the beast. All go unto one place." "All" he says are of the dust and all return to dust again. Then he asks this question—"Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth?" Who knoweth that is after God has made it so manifest that we are identical in nature by calling our attention to facts that we can not deny—who knoweth the spirit of the one goeth upward and the other downward? In this connection, I remark that man stands at the head of the creation of God, so far as intelligence is concerned; not so because he possesses an immortal soul or conscious spirit, but because his brain capacity is greater than that of the lower animal. It is the difference in the shape of the head and size of the brain that makes the difference in their capacity to think and act. Upon that hypothesis we can account for a little bird being able to fly directly to its nest in the hedge or field without having to hunt for it. It is because the organ of locality predominates. You can't do that notwithstanding your greater reasoning powers; likewise the little bee performs feats of mechanism in the building of the honey-comb that no mechanic on earth can approximate. Why? Because it possesses a higher principle of life? No, but because it is organized for that special work. Man can do many things that they cannot but not because he possesses an immortal soul but because he is organized for his special work. I now leave this part of the subject and hasten on to a conclusion.

I want here to ask you a question—How many times in the Word of God is the word immortal used? How many times do you suppose it is used? Please remember—it is just used once—no more I will turn and read it; 1st Timothy i. 17, "Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honor and glory for ever and ever. Amen." The Bible nowhere uses this term in reference to man, I leave that with you. You hear people talk so much about immortal souls; how many times in the Bible is the word immortality used? I have asked people that before and they would say "The Bible is full of it." The pulpit is full of it, men are continually preaching about saving immortal souls, but the Scripture is silent so far as those terms are concerned. The word immortality is used but five times in the Bible, then in the five places we read, if we find one place that it says immortal soul or never dying spirit I will give up the question—but in opposition to this we read in Ezek. xviii. 4, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." Now we will follow up the five times the word immortality is used and if we can find one place that it refers to man as already possessing it I will give up the case. Turn to Romans ii. 6, 7 "Who will render to every man according to his deeds. To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life." Why! I thought we already had immortality—but Paul says by well doing we seek for it. That doesn't look much like we had it. Friends and brethren how will the ministry of this day meet these things at the great judgment? When they teach the world that they are immortal when Paul has told us, that we by well doing, seek for it. Now the immortality that Adam had almost within his grasp, you and I have got to seek for by well doing. The reason God drove Adam and Eve from the garden was to prevent having immortal sinners. Consequently if we get it by well doing those who do not do well will not get it. It is not to save an immortal soul but to get one, that we continue in well doing.

Now we turn to 1st Corinth. xv. 51 to 56, Paul is talking here of the resurrection of the dead and he says—"Behold I show you a mystery (Friends and brethren listen—Paul is going to unfold a mystery) we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible." We who are living, that is living when he comes. "For this corruptible must put on incorruption and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then is brought to pass the saying that is written. Death is swallowed up in victory." Let me ask the question here, when is death swallowed up in victory? When you have put on incorruption and immortality and not until then, and if you have it now don't you see you have already swallowed death up in victory? Paul is pointing us to a time when this mortal that goes back to the dust, if it has done well shall come forth and be made immortal and incorruptible; the time is coming when those who have gone down in death will hear the trumpet sound and will come forth and sing that song that is written—O, grave! where is thy victory? O, death where is thy sting? The sting of death is sin and the strength of sin is the law. Now listen! where do we get this victory? Here is the beautiful part of it—"But thanks be to God who gave us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." You don't get the victory through the fact that you have already an immortal soul, but you gained the victory through the Lord Jesus Christ by doing well in this life and seeking for it, and if you have done that when He comes, if your name has been recorded in the "Book of Life," you will come forth never more to return into corruption. Revelations i. 18. The Savior says "I am alive forever more." The same thing you and I can at the resurrection. Now we quote from 1st Timothy vi. 13 to 16. If what we have already read does not finish this matter with you this ought to and if it does not it can't be done, "I give thee charge in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and before Christ Jesus, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession, that thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ; which in his times he shall shew, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords. Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen nor can see; to whom be honor and power everlasting. Amen." My friends if I should stand before you and try to persuade you that man possesses immortality what would you think of that text? What can you think of the man that will stand up and say that you are immortal now, when it says, in so many words, He only hath it. God we have learned is immortal. I here take the position that this refers to Jesus and that he was the one that witnessed the good confession before Pontius Pilate, and according to Paul, he was the only one that had attained to immortality, that is of the human family, and was then dwelling in the light that no mortal man can approach unto. No He had to be made immortal before he could enter the presence of the immortal One.

We will quote the last text upon this point 3rd Timothy i. 10, "But is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel." Paul doesn't say yet you have it, but that it was brought to light through the gospel, not through Adam, hence if the Gospel brought immortality to light how important for us to obey the Gospel. May you then heed the divine injunction and live for the great boon of life and immortality that Jesus, our elder brother, has already attained to. No wonder John heard them giving praise and glory and honor to Him that sitteth on the throne when we learn that we have been redeemed from such a lowly state to such an exalted nature. By a belief in the truth we may be one of that number. So "let us strive that we may enter." Amen.

An Evidence of Inspiration.

The Spirit of God is "the Spirit of truth," as destinguished from the spirit of falsehood and "the spirit of error." There are mighty evidences of the divine inspiration of the Scriptures found in the prophetic foresight exhibited in their pages. The prophets foresaw what no one else could foresee, and foretold what no mortal could have foretold without the aid of divine foreknowledge. And in this respect the writings of the prophets stand alone. The heathen world may be challenged to produce anything that can be compared with the minute, definite, and circumstantial predictions of the prophets, the fulfillment of which is written on the pages of history, and visible on the face of the earth to-day.

But mighty as is the evidence of divine inspiration derived from the prediction of future events which no mortal could have foreseen, there is yet another evidence of prophetic inspiration which is almost equally strong. The prophets not only uttered truth for days to come, but they told the truth for the hour in which they spoke. They did not write secret memoirs of events, to be sealed up in the hands of literary executors, and only opened after they and all the parties concerned were dead and buried; but they spoke the words which were needed at the time, declaring many things which other people perhaps knew, but did not dare to utter. These men, who sacrificed everything to conscience and conviction, testified for God, rebuked sin even in high places, warned men of coming danger, and bade them turn from the error of their ways, and avert the doom which their sins had provoked.

No doubt there were plenty of gossipers in Jerusalem more or less familiar with the sins and snares in which David had been entangled and led astray; and it required no divine gift to hint, and squint, and wink, and shrug the shoulders; but it required the inspiration of the Almighty to send a man into the presence of his king warning him of the sin of his wrong doing, and smiting him to the heart with the words, "Thou art the man!"

The open shamelessness of Herod's life was visible to saint and sinner alike; but there was only one man who dared at the peril of his life to rebuke the wickedness of the ruler of his people, and brave the vengeance of his guilty paramour, though he did it at the risk of his life and the cost of his head.

It may have required no special inspiration in the time of Paul to know what kind of a man Felix was, or what kind of a life he lived, but there was a degree of inspiration when the captive stood in the presence of his judge and "reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come" till Felix trembled at his prisoner's words.

There were plenty of men in England who understood clearly enough the character of their king, but it took a man like old Hugh Latimer, with the inspiration of God in his soul, to stand in his course garment in the train of princes and courtiers who were present with their birthday gifts and congratulations, and hand to his sovereign a New Testament with a leaf turned down conspicuously to Hebrews xiii. 4,—"Whoremongers and adulterers God will judge."

The special type of inspiration, so needful in all ages, even down to the present time, is a mighty evidence of the truthfulness of the ancient prophets, and of the truth of the Holy Scriptures received from their hands. The men who uttered the words of God, were not liars nor deceivers, they were not sycophants nor time-servers; they were not men who tried to please the rich and flatter the proud; they were men who bore on their hearts the burden of the Word of God, and who uttered things which they would gladly have concealed; who restrained themselves until the Word of God was like burning fire shut up in their bones; and who then at the peril of every earthly interest, and at the risk of life itself, delivered the solemn message of Almighty God, and cleared their skirts of the blood of souls. And the books which they wrote were not forgeries which they had concocted, or fictions which they had invented, but they were the written records of the thoughts of God which were throbbing in the hearts of his people, which at last found voice in words which worldlings dared not breathe, and thundered forth truths which other men only whispered with bated breath. And these inspired words, ranging through the past, the present, and the future, witnessing for God and bearing testimony against all evil, shine forth as a fiery pillar, and as a guiding cloud, amid the darkness that enfolds a sinful world. And these words have come to us, and we thus have the prophetic word more firm, which is "as a light that shineth in a dark place until the day dawn, and the day star arise"—and to this "sure word of prophecy" we do well that we take heed.—Armory.

Numismatics in the Chinese Empire.

China is the paradise of the numismatist. The collections of cash, according to Consul Edward Bedloe's report to the State Department, are something marvelous. They are small coins of bronze, brass, copper, or silver, ranging in intrinsic value from one-twentieth of a cent to 25 cents. The oldest of these coins on record appeared about 1300 B. C. Over 150,000 different kinds of cash are preserved in collections.

Some are wonderful examples of coinage, but most of them are clumsy and course. The numismatist can work all his life, spend very little money, and leave to posterity thousands of coins. All he needs to do is to confine his work to the collection of cash, the small coins in brass and bronze, whose value ranges from one-tenth to one-fourteenth of a cent. Their workmanship varies, but is usually very good.

Their shape today is like that of European coins, with the exception that through the center is a square hole through which the coins are strung together like beads. In the past, however, other forms were employed, including the square, triangle, heart, ellipse, shield, key, sword, and spear. The number of kinds is simply immense. They are referred to in the literature as far back as 250 B. C. "The earliest that I have heard of," says Consul Bedloe, "dates from the Tsin dynasty, which ruled from 255 to 207 B. C.

"From that time until today these useful little coins have been used by every monarch, no matter whether he was an Emperor of the entire country or King of one of the petty principalities into which, from time to time, the Chinese Empire was broken. There have been over 1,200 occupants of the various thrones, royal and imperial. In addition to these regular issues, if such they may be called, there have been special issues from time to time and also special local issues. A wealthy mandarin in Canton is said to have the finest collection extant, containing 25,000 specimens of different kinds."

The cost increases as you go backward in time. The cash of this century can be secured at their nominal face value. Those of the eighteenth and seventeenth centuries bring from one cent to ten cents each. Those of the Han dynasties, from 206 to 100 A. D., bring $100 each when in fine state of preservation.

These true antiques are found in ancient tombs and ruins. Several hundred were discovered in Amoy this year in digging a grave, when the laborers broke into an old tomb several feet below the surface of the soil.

The coins lay in a pretty earthenware jar and were incrusted with a thin layer of malachite that here and there had been changed by moisture into azurite. The coins were sold by the lucky coolies in the next twenty-four hours, and are said to have brought $1 a piece, an immense sum to men working for 12 cents a day.

To succeed in collecting cash a person must be a fine Chinese scholar. The labor thereby involved is so severe as to preclude most collectors from indulging in the pleasure to any great extent.

The Scriptures Opened—Thoughts and Themes for Bible Students—Lectures and Miscellaneous Papers Exhibiting the Revealed Purposes of God Concerning the Earth and All its Families. What We Are, and What We May Become. The Nature, Extent, Epoch, and Method of our Christian Redemption, by Robert Ashcroft, is the title of a book of 343 pages. This is a compilation of the public utterances and writings of the author while engaged as a minister in England. It is divided into some thirty-one lectures, and an addition of about fifty pages of "things that have struck me in daily Bible readings," being comments on particular texts that have called for thought while reading. This book is published by the author at Toronto, Canada, but may be ordered from Bro. J. O. Woodruff, of Elizabeth, N. J., or from this office. Price $1.25.

Future Probation. By Wm. G. Moncrieff. We have received an invoice of the new book, [illegible] pages, written by William Glen Moncrieff, subject, "Future Probation: Is That Awaiting Any of the Unrighteous?" Bro. Moncrieff is a writer well known to our readers, and of undoubted ability. This book is paper covers, and sells for 25 cts. each, and can be had at this office.

"A Discourse on Foundation Work, considered physically, morally and religiously," is the title of a 32 page tract, written by R. McLaughlan of Cleveland, Ohio. The author has supplied us with a large quantity of these pamphlets, which we will be pleased to mail to all who desire them, at 5 cents each. The usual price of tracts this size is 10 cents. In this case the desire of the Authors is to secure a wide circulation for these works and so do good, hence the price is put at the cost of the postage and handling them. No better opportunity can be given to secure good solid reading to hand to the uninformed. Don't let these works remain long on our shelves, but send them out on their mission of love.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

How Little it Costs.

How little it costs, if we give it a thought,
To make one happy each day!
Just one kind word, or a tender smile,
As we go on our daily way.
Perchance a look will suffice to clear
The cloud from a neighbor's face,
And the press of a hand in sympathy,
A sorrowful tear efface.

One walks in sunlight, another goes
All wearily in the shade;
One treads a path that is fair and smooth,
Another must pray for aid.
O'er ways that are rough with stumbling stones,
Where the tired feet go slow,
One sees with eyes which are glad and bright,
Another's with tears o'erflow.

We pass each other as days go by,
But we seldom have time to heed,
We who are filled with our own content,
How much our neighbors may need.
Can't we stop to give just a kindly smile?
Or a tender word or so?
Or only one glance of sympathy
Which might to some sad heart go?

And kindle therein a glow of trust,
And dry the falling tears,
And help sweet faith to revive again
In the place of grief and fears?
It costs so little! I wonder why
We give it so little thought!
A smile, kind words, a glance, a touch!
What magic with them is wrought!
—Mary D. Brine.

Current Events and Sundry Thoughts.

If there is any one thing more than another in which the heirs of eternal life are devoutly interested, it is in knowing how soon, or how near we are to the time when heirship shall cease, and inheritance de facto begin.

The certainty of a much desired and joyous event, as yet invisible will hardly be acceptable as a substitute for knowledge concerning the time of its occurrence, and much less will the former be equal to the latter in preserving the fire of enthusiasm and zeal that faith and hope has kindled, and which are so potent in resisting the discouraging influences of adverse times and circumstances.

The man of faith in divine testimony, ought to be of all men the most enthusiastic, and ambitious. So true was this of Paul that the skeptic has styled him an enthusiast, as if that was sufficient to dismiss his strange and unaccountable career from further notice. But enthusiasm was not peculiar to Paul, more than some of his colaborers, only as his wider field of opportunity and activity makes it of necessity more conspicuous. The man without enthusiasm is a failure, be his calling what it may, and we know from the history of the world, that when the greatest enthusiasm has been displayed it has always been accompanied and sustained by ability to comprehend the necessities of the time, and a clear perception of the results to follow. Enthusiasm is the best evidence in the world of sincerity, and well grounded conviction. That there is an appointed time for Christ to return and inaugurate his reign over the nations of the earth is so explicitly taught in the Scriptures and confirmed by so many precedents on record, that it seems almost superfluous to cite quotations in proof thereof. It is certainly reasonable in the light of Scripture testimony upon the subject to conclude that the approach of that long looked for time of release may be approximately known. This is all that is necessary,—to know more, would destroy the attitude of expectancy and watchfulness; to know less, would afford scope for indifference and slothfulness, and to plead excuse on the ground of ignorance.

This desire for certain knowledge concerning an event around which cluster all things for which the heirs expectant hope is not the mere craving of an idle curiosity, but rather a wholesome spiritual appetite, to partake of viands that will pleasurably invigorate the hungry soul, with strength and patience to endure unto the end. And not only this, but also to open the eyes to a clear perception of the fact, so liable to be overlooked, that the present world however much or little one may possess of it, is in no way permanent or satisfactory beyond the temporary necessities of food and raiment. What matters it, whether a man be a pauper or millionaire if in Christ he is rich in faith, for both practically speaking are equally poor, and equally wealthy. I may add however that it is hardly possible for a servant of Christ to accumulate much wealth, and rarely will he be found among low down paupers. Great possessions cannot be accumulated honestly, nor can they be hoarded with singleness of purpose save it be to the leanness of selfishness.

This is a day of pilfer and profit, to which all the world is given, —an age of money getting and riotous pleasure, in the midst of which, only a few will be found able to stem the tide until the day of release. These few deny themselves of present enjoyment, for the sake of obtaining something better hereafter. How long hereafter, is certainly a question of interest that will ever be uppermost in the minds of all who follow Christ in word and spirit,—wisdom and purity.

Possibly some one is ready to express his disapproval, and further his disinclination to know any thing about the time when Christ shall appear on the stage of human affairs. Surely if "ignorance be bliss 'tis folly to be wise," unless there be associated with it a desire and ambition to make knowledge conducive to our highest well being both now and hereafter.

We are seldom curious to learn what is distasteful, nor are we desirous of enquiring into that for which we cherish a feeling of aversion and positive dislike. The prospective presence of Christ interfering with vested interests, and enterprises of a worldly nature, will no doubt go a long way toward banishing the thought, or possibility of that event being imminent. At any rate some admitting it to be a Scriptural doctrine, will nevertheless cherish the hope that its remoteness is so great—as to be unworthy of serious consideration. I have heard clergyman say Christ may come to-morrow, and he may not come for a million of years, the inner desire however preferred the remoteness of a million years, to that of twenty-four hours. The earth will wear itself out moving in its orbit around the sun, before this class of worldly minded religionists will be ready to even think on the subject.

"Since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." 2 Pet. 3-4. These words are expressive of a sentiment, as common ground upon which all classes of scoffers and unbelievers can meet. However much they may differ otherwise, they are one and inseparable here. The learned scientist and the illiterate laborer—the eloquent preacher, and his patronizing pew-holder all agree that nothing out of the ordinary or natural course of things has ever occurred since the creation, and how natural to infer that nothing supernatural ever will occur. The philosophy or naturalism rules the world of thought in high and low places. Of the flood in Noah's time they are "willing ignorant," says the apostle. These words are the more significant because the watery disaster of Noah's day is exceptionally conceded to have transpired. I say exceptionally for the reason that nearly every thing of a miraculous nature found on the page of Bible history is in these days pronounced a myth. The flood however is conceded to have transpired, some what after the manner as described in the book of Genesis. Of course that it was in any sense a judgment is denied, or that Noah and his family were saved in a big boat is hardly acceptable, nor was it universal says the scientist as we read it from the book of nature. The evidence that this great inundation of water actually transpired is so complete, apart from Bible history that it constitutes as it were one of the unfallen mile stones in the history of the world. The naturalist of course does not admit that there was anything of miracle in it, but simply one of those catastrophes resulting from natural courses.

Be it so, we have no disposition to contend when contention is fruitless, for the cause underlying so extraordinary an event whether natural or supernatural is in either case unseen and unknown if considered in the abstract as a physical disturbance. What causes primarily operate in the material world to produce great and disastrous disturbances are not among the discoveries of natural science. If the man of faith comes to a more summary conclusion than the naturalist, it has the advantage of being more satisfactory, and morally profitable, for no time and strength is wasted in speculating about the unknowable. The relationship that Jehovah's servants have sustained to all critical epochs of past history, and their conduct under the circumstances, is the chief element of interest, and really the only one of advantage to us who are forewarned of a like crisis to come.

The earth's submergence in water, was the end of the world to that generation—it was their predetermined set time, when their cup had come to the full. It did not occur without warning,—it did not come of an accident, it was not one of those unforeseen misfortunes coming so suddenly, as to afford, neither time or opportunity for escape,—true "They knew not until the flood took them away," but their want of knowledge or understanding was self-imposed, and not therefore an inevitable necessity. As an event it was made the final test of faith, and a typical visitation of judgment upon the obstinate and rebellious. The chart of history and of time have their distinct dispensational lines,—closely relative to each other yet distinguishable in many things, and illustrative of Jehovah's dealing with mankind. From Adam to Noah the time was short compared with subsequent times, and the shortness of human life. The great longevity to which men attained previous to the flood made them scarcely more than grandchildren to Adam. A written record of what had transpired was hardly necessary in Noah's time to relate the events of fifteen hundred years. There was hardly any scope for idolatry to obscure the light of truth, any perverting the world's knowledge of the true and living God, as it did in subsequent ages. It was hardly possible for idol worship to prevail where the knowledge of God had so many active witnesses as must have arisen in the Seth family.

Some perhaps would style it as peculiarly an age of infidelity, but it was more, it was a time of deliberate perversity of mind and heart, wherein men were defiantly disloyal to their Creator. All restraint was abandoned, and the flesh glorified itself in the gratification of its animal passions and desires. "Every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." Gen. vi. 5. For a long time the children of Seth continued distinct and separate from the family of Cain, but at last the woman's seed was captivated by the daughters of Adam. If the maidens of the home of Cain had the charm and merit of beauty, they had also the heritage of their father's perverse and rebellious heart. One would naturally think that a mother's beauty, and a father's piety would be the richest legacy a child could inherit, and so it would if the mother transmitted nothing but physical beauty as a companion for spirituality of a mind and heart. But it must be borne in mind that vanity and pride always have a luxuriant growth when protected by a handsome face. In the days of Noah apostacy made rapid strides when the sons of God intermarried with the daughters of men. This commingling and fraternizing of the woman's seed with the serpent's progeny soon decimated the ranks of those who "feared God and trembled at his Word." Where there had been many hundreds only one family remains,—even eight souls saved from the wreck of sin. "My Spirit saith the Lord shall not always strive with man." The old world, young in years, but hardened in wickedness grieved the Creator's spirit and it went down in the waters of darkness and death.

Thus ends the first chapter of the world's history. The thing most denied and most defiantly rejected, is what actually transpired —to wit divine interference with the affairs of man. That moral delinquincy is in any way related to or responsible for physical disturbances in the material world, resulting in discomfort and death, is to the mere naturalist a proposition worthy only of ridicule. Not more so in the days of Noah, than in other times. I cannot better conclude these articles than by calling attention to the fact that in the teaching of our Savior the condition of the world socially and religiously preceding the flood, foreshadows a like condition that shall obtain at the time when the Son of man is revealed. If to be forewarned is to be forearmed it is the more imperative that the forewarning be duly considered and apprehended in all those features wherein the servants of God are personally concerned, as acting a part in the closing drama of the times.

The history of the antediluvian world is exceedingly brief, requiring not more than a half hour to read the whole narrative. The want of time cannot be offered as an excuse for neglecting it. It is very plain in its statements, and its brevity by no means exceeds the simplicity thereof, so that it is hardly possible for the feeble of faith to misapprehend its teaching. Jesus and Paul never out done the author of Genesis in requiring the servants of God to be distinct and separate from the world. If Paul said "be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," the author of Genesis forbids the sons of God to even intermarry with the alien daughters of men. When the servants of God relax their mental grip on the truth, and yield to the sentimentalism of the hour, and the vapid, sickly notions as to what men are pleased to style charity and liberality, they lose their bearing and begin to drift with the tide and flow that rapidly matures the harvest of sin. What matters it, that Noah cried aloud to his contemporary fellow men? Faith had been overcome of unbelief, and the fear of God, the voice of conscience, and the love of truth, had all given way before the carnal mind and the pleasures in which it delighted. No man who feels the least concern for both himself and his fellow servants can rest contented and silent, when he knows that the times in which we live, very nearly answer the shadow of the Noahchan epoch. The spirit of violence is everywhere abroad in the world. The increase of knowledge is apparently subservient to the powers of evil, and plottings of wholesale destruction and a fiendish spirit of cruelty that laughs at the ruin it has wrought.

At the same time trade and traffic for gain commands the energies of man while competitive skill hastens their footsteps to keep abreast of the world of commerce. The struggle for existence is growing more difficult and intense, irritating the human mind and goading it with a feeling of unrest that breeds discontent, and instability.

The times immediately preceding the establishment of God's kingdom on the earth, are many sided, and are not to be looked upon simply from one standpoint of observation. There are varied features and all of them must be duly considered if the true situation is to be clearly apprehended. Moreover the various aspects of the situation as given in the Scriptures, seem at first sight contradictory. For example it is said at that time "when hearts shall fail them for fear, and for looking after those things coming on earth." One is ready to ask how can such a condition obtain if the world is to be absorbed in the pleasure of eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, as though nothing out of the ordinary course of things was anticipated? It is a time of war, and warlike preparation, and yet a time when they shall say "peace and safety." A time of trade and commercial activity and the accumulation of property, "buying and selling, building and planting, indicative of great prosperity and plenty. Again it is a time when men "shall run to and fro, in the earth and knowledge shall be increased," and at the same time "darkness covers the earth and gross darkness the people." These statements seem to be and no doubt are irreconcilable in the minds of some, but there is a place wherein each and all of them fit exactly. It will not do to give attention to one class of prophetic statements, and at the same time overlook all the others. This is a mistake that many have made with reference to other Bible subjects, as can be clearly seen in the fact, that all the religious sects of our time give particular attention to one or two doctrinal themes to the exclusion of all others. It is perhaps possible to gather up the truth as a whole by collecting the fragments found in the various ecclesiastical bodies of our time, but it would require the patience of Job and the wisdom of Daniel to accomplish the work. It is illustrative of the difficulty of clearly apprehending a subject as a whole when certain important elements are absent or overlooked. On the subject of unfulfilled prophecy, the utmost care is requisite in order to place all the testimony in its proper place. In recent times men have set the time for the Lord's coming, not once but many times. They have manipulated the figures of chronology and the symbolic numbers of Daniel and John, in such a way, as to make it look quite plausible, but in the meantime they have completely overlooked other lines of prophecy which if understood and considered would have enabled them to see the error of their reasoning. I cannot give much confidence to any man's figures until the situation is ripe. We will take a look at this in our next article.

GEO. MOYER.

Peter's First Epistle. Chapter 5.

1. As your fellow-elder and witness to the sufferings of the Christ, your partner also in the glory destined to be revealed, I exhort the elders among you,

2. Shepherd the flock in your midst, not in a compulsory way, but in a free-will way according to God, not in a shameless way for gain, but with forward zeal;

3. Nor as though lording it over your allotments, but in becoming patterns for the flock;

4. And when the chief-shepherd hath appeared ye will realize the amaranthine garland (crown) of the glory.

5. Likewise, ye younger ones subordinate yourselves to older ones (elders) and may ye all have worn your humility constantly as a garment in relation to one another, God arrayeth himself against the haughty, but giveth grace to the humble.

6. May ye have been humbled then under the controlling hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time.

7. Casting all your undue anxiety (worry) upon him, because he is caring for you,

8. Be temperate, be wakeful; the plaintiff your accuser (the Devil) is going about like a roaring lion as it were, seeking whom he may devour,

9. Whom resist, firm in the faith, knowing that the same (experiences) in the sufferings are being accomplished on the brotherhood in your cosmos (world)

10. And the God of all grace, who hath called you unto his eternal glory in Christ after ye have suffered a little, he will restore you to order, will stay you, will strengthen you, will place you on a foundation.

11. To him be the glory and the controling-power for the ages of the ages, Amen.

12. Through Silouanos your trustworthy brother, as I account him, have I written briefly, exhorting and testifying to this being God's true grace in which ye may stand.

13. The joint-elect (church) in Babylon greeteth you, also mark my Son,

14. Greet one another with a friendly act (kiss, embrace, handshaking, etc.,) of love (sanctified love). Peace be with you all who are in Christ, Amen.

COMMENT.

"Witness" here used in the sense of giving testimony not "eye witness."

"Partnership" the idea here in the present experiences of testimony and suffering and in the glory hereafter—not fellowship or communion. We've got to take part. We may commune and fellowship of course; but I don't think we will be satisfied to commune with the glory. We'll want a share of it no doubt. Notice these expressions here

"Shepherd the flock."

"Not in a compulsory way but in a free-will way."

"Not as though lording it over your allotments but as patterns, etc."

"And may ye have all worn your humility constantly as a garment in relation to one another." How do these expressions comport with the character and position attributed to Peter now by the whole Catholic church?

"Under the controling hand of God" is a very significant statement to say the least in view of some Calvanistic doctrines still entertained in some churches.

"Under anxiety" instead of "care" C. V. or "anxiety" merely R. V. We have to have "care" and "anxiety." It is the undue sway over us that we are cautioned against.

"Plaintiff" instead of "adversary" R. V. This legal term as used in the Scriptures. Satan has no power in relation to mankind except in a legal way, and this is a case where God is our judge and Christ our "advocate." Our case is a "state case" and "the plaintiff" in such cases is "the states attorney." This the Devil's official position and he has perverted his office and become "false-accuser."

"Brotherhood" instead of "brethren" R. V.

"Your cosmos or world" instead of "the world" R. V.

"Will" instead "shall" R. V.

"Controling-power" instead of "dominion" R. V. too indefinite a term for any power, to translate this word.

"In which ye may stand" instead of "stand ye fast therein" R. V. This is not a separate clause and an exhortation: but the two clauses are connected.

How does your idea of Peter formed from an unprejudiced perusal of this epistle, which you perceive is an epitome of Peter's theology agree with either the Catholic or Protestant idea of him?

I address this quiry to any honest reader who has been interested enough to consecutively follow this translation and comment from the beginning through to the end. Of course honest error is virtue compared with conscious deception and duplicity; but it is high time the word, both Christian and Pagan awoke to the common-sense truth as well as divinely revealed fact that one's conscience cannot rise higher in its conclusions than one's conscious knowledge in any given case. In other words that a stream cannot rise higher than its source. And that this is true in the moral as well as physical world. Our good purpose in other words cannot rise higher in action than our enlightenment or conscious knowledge of right. All this talk about obeying our intuitive, infallible conscience is bosh, and all Christian as well as Pagan experience proves it. The pagan conscience has prompted parents to offer their children to Baal in fire worship, and the Christian conscience instituted and maintained the horrors of the inquisition. Were they right?

The Passing Caravan of Camels.

A great caravan in march is a superb spectacle; alas, too infrequent now in Northern Africa. At first Arabs alone can detect it, a mere speck lost in a dusty halo, whence it emerges at length a tawny-colored mass possessed of a strange motion, the swarming of a thousand lives in one.

Here and there silhouettes of straggling camels stand profiled, like hieroglyphics, on the fiery sky, as insensibly trailing its snake-like curves, the convoy advances. Hours after being sighted, it passes in slow defile, led by a vanguard of blooded camels, whose gait and bearing have an air of arrogance not customary to that race of proletarian, the chieftains seated aloft in their floating burnooses, alert of eye, with gun in hand, statuesque guardians of the convoy treasure.

Behind them the camels of burden, exhausted less by loads than with the fatigues of the journey, their legs and croppers bald and scarred by blows, straggle forward languidly, thrusting out the tongue as they press their huge, spongy feet in the yielding ground. What resignation in their soft staring eyes! Verily, no philosopher knows better than these poor brutes how inane are the revolts against inexorable fate.

Near at hand walk the drivers, their emanciated features savagely illumined by eyes of fire, and white, gleaming teeth piercing their parched lips. Of all who started with the caravan how many have fallen by the way, abandoned to agonize alone in the desolation?—Scribner.

Be faithful in little things. Delude not yourself with the idea that you can be uncertain and untrue in trifles, and yet be reliable and trustworthy in great matters. Trifles make up our life, and we are the ultimate test of fidelity. The best will cannot ripen into permanent greatness when the fearful power of negligent habit in trivial things has given bent and character to the soul. God's laws are not broken with impunity.

Character is not constituted by a brilliant dash now and then, but is what we make it by the use of our powers in the routine affairs of current life. Only those who are faithful in the few things of common life are to rule over many things in the exalted stations of the heavenly realms.

News from St Petersburg indicate that the ravages of cholera have already commenced. It says the blessing comes to those who seek Jehovah with the whole heart, and this shows that no others obtain it. •

Monster demonstrations are being made in the north of Ireland against the Home Rule movement. They are headed by Balfour, the ex-secretary for Ireland, the Marquis of Londonderry, the Duke of Abercorn, the Mayor of Belfast and other notables. "Ah, indeed; what was the subject?" replied the other. Well, he spoke from the words in John x. 10, "I am come that thy might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." "Yes;" said the other, "and do you remember anything he said about it?" "Oh yes: he said when Christ came into the world the minds of men were dull and dark and stupid; he roused them out of it and infused into them new life and energy and ambition, and so forth." Just think of this, as the mission of God's Son, for a moment; you who look to him as your very existence after death, your Lord, your all, and praise God that the light of the glorious Gospel hath shined into, and illumined your minds in spite of the midnight darkness all around. Yes, praise him for the gift of death's conquerer and life's demonstrator and dispenser. •

The Woman's Seed. No. 6.

We invite the reader to consider the 5th and 6th verses of the 49th chapter of Isaiah if he wishes to know certainly where the personal history of Jesus of Nazareth commenced. It says: And now, saith the Lord that formed me from the womb to be his servant, to bring Jacob again to him. Though Israel be not gathered, yet shall I be glorious in the eyes of the Lord, and my God shall be my strength. The prophet puts this language into the mouth of Jesus; and we see from this that he knew where, and how, and why, he had been formed, and by whom. In the 6th verse Jesus is still speaking—informs us still further of what Jehovah had said to him thus; "And he said, It is a light think that thou shouldst be my servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob and to restore the preserved of Israel; I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation unto the end of the earth." It is plain to be seen that his history commenced when the word was made flesh; when he was made of a woman; made under the law; it is also evident that he was formed for a purpose, viz: to be Jehovah's Servant; and the work assigned him was, first, to bring Jacob again to him, and restore the preserved of Israel,—but this was a light thing, was in fact but a means to an end. Had not God said to Abraham that all the families of the earth should be blessed in him? If in him—if in Abraham, how, in any other person, could the blessing come? Let us come down from our high notions and do as Abraham did—believe God, and then our belief will be reckoned to us for righteousness as was his to him. In harmony with this seed of promise to Abraham, we come down to David, perhaps a thousand years later, and read in 2 Sam. 7: 12, 13 "When thy days be completed, and thou wilt sleep with thy Fathers, then will I set up thy seed after thee, who shall proceed out of thy body, and I will establish his kingdom. He shall build a house for my name, and I will establish the throne of his Kingdom forever." This is the reading of the Jewish translation according to the Massoretic text after the best Hebrew authorities, by Isaac Leeser, an English Jew. And we submit that no one but a literal descendant of David could come and fulfill this prediction. This is emphasized in the 123 Psalm, and the 18th verse, thus:—"Of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne." And when this is read in connection with Rom. 1: 1-4 we do not see how any reasonable person can withstand the evidence that no pre-existent personage could fill this bill. It says: "Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle, separated unto the Gospel of God, which He had premised afore by his prophets in the Holy Scriptures, concerning His Son Jesus Christ our Lord." The question is, who is he? This, to us, is a most important question. We want to believe in the Christ of God, not in an imaginary one, the idea of whom never could have obtained but for the dual nature of man taught by Plato. As Paul tells us who he was, and is, we cannot do better than settle the matter here and now. This is what is said descriptive of the Master of Paul the Servant,—Jesus Christ:—"Which was made of the seed of David, according to the flesh," not spirit. That relates to his origin and nature to the time of his death. As he speaks back from heaven to tell he is now alive forevermore. Rev. 1: 18, and as he has informed us in John 3: 6 that "that which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the spirit is spirit, we should be able to appreciate what is said by the apostle in the 4th verse of the first of Romans. If we read closely we shall ascertain when he became the Son of God in another sense than that of miraculous formation out of the substance of a virgin. It reads, "And declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness by the resurrection from the dead." All are aware that the Spirit descended upon him at his baptism, and a voice from heaven said, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." This imparted to him supernatural power and strength for the great work before him, but to have imparted divine nature at that time would have frustrated the object of his mission. He was born of flesh, and his word for it he was flesh,—but flesh endowed with spirit power as were many others in a limited degree.

The last verse quoted shows us when he became spirit,—shows us when he was born of the spirit, brought forth of Spirit, and therefore spirit;—"by the resurrection from the dead;" and "dieth no more, death hath no more dominion over him. Rom. 6: 9. The word of the spirit for it, he by the resurrection from the dead became Son of God in a sense in which he was not Son of God before. We see, then, that he is really our elder brother, who has overcome; and we have to overcome as he did; we can and must follow in his footsteps; if at a distance, yet follow we must.

Let us return to 2 Sam. 7. 12, 13 a moment. Jehovah said, "He shall build a house for my name," and while this may possibly have a double application, the central idea is that embodied in the words of Jesus in Matt. 16: 18. "Upon this rock I will build my church;" for in Tim. 3: 15 the church is said to be the House of God; and in Heb. 3: 3, Christ is actually shown to be the builder of this House; and the promise to David, 2 Sam. 7: 12, 13, said the House was to be built for God's name; and Acts 15: 14 shows that this is why the Gentiles are being visited by the Gospel, to take out a people for his name; and in line with this thought the Spirit in Peter's first letter, chap. 2: 5 says to the elect ones, "Ye also as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ."

Another Scripture of the Old Testament worthy of our consideration is the tenth verse of the 16th Psalm. "For thou wilt not suffer thine holy one to see corruption." Certainly a pre-existent Christ would not be corruptible. If the real Christ pre-existed the pre-existent Christ would certainly be holy; but the testimony of the Spirit is that whatever constitutes the personality of Christ was both holy and corruptible; so that we have infallible testimony that God's Holy One was he formed of woman. Gabriel, indeed called the to-be-born Son, "that holy thing." Luke, 1; 35.

We are sorry for those who cannot see this stream of harmonious truth. How can they love one who could neither sin nor die, as they could love one who could sin but did not,—and who could die and did die on their account? •

Dear Restitution:

Enclosed please find $1.50 for another year's subscription for The Restitution, as I cannot get along without it. It is the only preaching I can hear of the one faith every week, and it does me good to read the letters from different ones, and in different parts of the country, and the good that is being done by different ones scattered abroad. I also see that there are others like myself, the only preaching they hear is through the columns of The Restitution. I sometimes feel as though I was alone until I pick up the grand, old Restitution and see they are scattered all over the land, in different parts of the globe. I do feel as though we are fast drifting down the scenes of life, and when I listen to the clock and think how fast each tick passes away and can never be brought back again, I think of our deeds and acts toward mankind that can never be done over again, I think, are we doing them right?

Oh, Christian friends, we are passing to an age that is fast approaching, and can we say we are ready, or must we say there is something yet we have to do before the Master comes?

Christ having presented his own example, in keeping his Father's commandments that he might abide in his Father's, as a reason why we should keep his commandments that we may abide in his love. He then gave them one of his commandments as a test of their love for him. He says, this is my commandment, that ye love one another, as I have loved you. John xv. 12. Profession without practice will not save any one. Christ closed his great discourse on the mount with the following language, "not every one that saith Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Matt. vii. 21.

He thus informs us how we may know when we are doing our heavenly Father's will so we cannot be ignorant. Verses 24-27 in same chapter. Thus the whole issue of salvation turns upon hearing and doing the sayings of Jesus Christ, and not man. Let us keep our armor bright, and watch while it is yet day, for we know not when the Master comes. Christians are as candidates canvassing for office here, but their canvass is for a much better office than man can give. They are canvassing for election to the high position of kings and priests, to administer justice and mercy to all nations.

The Apostle Peter prescribes the virtues we must add to make our calling and election sure. He commands us to give all diligence and to add to our faith courage, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, love. If these things be in you and abound, they make you that ye shall be neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord and Master. Ah, how sad it will be after having waited so long, to be found off our guard, with our lamps gone out, and be found among the foolish virgins on the outside, to knock for admittance when it is too late. Let us keep our armor bright, and watch a little longer. If we must fall before the Bridegroom comes let us fall at our post. Christ says, behold I come quickly, hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown. Rev. iii. 11. How sad the thought that after struggling so hard and long for the incorruptible crown, to be found off our watch tower at the last moment and another occupying the place we might have retained, and the crown that we might have worn.

Christ having given the last signs of his coming and kingdom, does not conclude without giving a word of warning and admonition to his waiting, watching people. He says, take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and the cares of this life, so that day come upon you unawares, for as a snare it shall come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth. Watch ye therefore, and pray always that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man. Luke xxi. 34-36. Let us make our calling and election sure, is my prayer. Your brother waiting for the return of the Master. Amen.

Dear Restitution:

Old and respected friend, that brings us so much good news and glad tidings, from east, west, north and south. It is food for the hungry soul that lives isolated from those of the one faith of the true Gospel. We have plenty of Gospels, such as Paul says, is not another Gospel, it seems to be risky business to preach any other Gospel than that Paul preached. Is it not important that all that teaches others to know and understand what kind of a gospel that Christ and the apostles did preach in Galatians i. 6. It seems that in Paul's day, some, as Bro. Wagoner says, used the saw and hammer to make things harmonize with their own idea of things, for it seems they were perverting the Gospel of Christ, which caused Paul to pronounce a curse on such as perverted the Gospel of Christ. Paul held the Gospel very sacred when he said, "Though we or an angel from heaven preach any other Gospel let him be accursed." In Revelations xxii. 16, Jesus says, "I have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things." What things were the angels testifying to? Verse 18 tells us, "for I testify unto every man that heareth the prophecy of this Book, if any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues written in this Book." It is a fearful thing to add any thing to what is written in the Holy Scriptures. The isms say we have immortal souls that go to heaven at death and are in the enjoyment of all the blessings of heaven. Now do they not add unto when they say that folks go to heaven at death. Jesus said, "no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of Man which is in heaven. John iii. 13. Peter said that David had not ascended into the heavens. Acts ii. 34. But the isms say they do go to heaven at death and join the redeemed in praising God. "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." Psa. cxv. "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish." Psa. cxlvi. 4. Ezekiel xviii. 20, says, "The soul that sinneth it shall die."

It seems it would take a vast amount of labor and machinery to twist such plain Scriptures to harmonize with the teachings of so many Revs. but it is no difference as long as they believe Paul was honest in persecuting the church of Christ. He said that he did it through ignorance. He thought he was doing God's service. There is no excuse in believing the devil's lie in place of God's truth, for God's Word is Truth.

The Arizona Desert.

The process of reclaiming the Arizona deserts goes on apace. During recent years many irrigation projects have been put on a working basis and districts varying from a few thousands to hundreds of thousands of acres are being rapidly brought into agricultural and horticultural use. The greatest project of this character yet undertaken was practically begun a few days ago and plans for one still greater are announced. For the first contracts have been placed involving an expenditure of more than $2,000,000 for the construction of reservoirs and canals to utilize water from the Gila River in reclaiming 300,000 acres of land, which will be first-class fruit and vine land. The dam will be one of the largest in the country and seventy-two miles of canals are to be constructed. The second project contemplates the reclamation of 400,000 acres now arid land, with water taken from the Rio Verde, stored in three immense reservoirs, and distributed by 150 miles of canals. The land and the canal routes have been surveyed and the $2,500,000 necessary to undertake the work subscribed. Much of the land will make good orange growing land.—New York Sun.

The Loneliness of the Plains.

Mid-ocean is not more lonesome than the plains; nor night so gloomy as that of dumb sunlight. It is barren of sound. The brown grass is knee deep—and even that trifle gives a shock, in this hoof obliterated land. The bands of antelope that drift, like cloud shadows, across the dun landscape suggest less of life than of the supernatural. The spell of the plains is a wondrous thing. At first it fascinates. Then it bewilders. At last, it crushes. It is sure as the grave—and worse. It is intangible, but resistless; stronger than hope, reason, will,—stronger than humanity. When one cannot otherwise escape the plains, one takes refuge in madness.—Scribner.

The River Nile.

The total length of the Nile is 3,370 miles. It drains a country as extensive as Russia and for the last 1,200 miles of its course receives no surface affluent, large or small. The fall from Assoun to Cairo is from two to three inches in a mile, and throughout the Delta this slight slope diminishes to less than one inch.

Railways in Egypt.

Railway extensions are to be built in Upper and Lower Egypt to a cost of about £1,250,000. The existing line from Ghirgen to Keneh will be extended and a narrow-guage railway built to Luxor.

Let the love of your brethren be as a fire within you, consuming that selfishness that is so contrary to it, and is so natural to man; let it set your thoughts on work to study how to do good to others; let your love be an active love, witnessing within you, and extending itself in doing good to the souls and bodies of your brethren as they need and you are able.—Archbishop Leighton.

It is surprising and disheartening to discover how many ingredients of self-regard lurk in our best endeavors and most generous deeds. A kind of unconscious barter, a good deal of it is; I like you because you like me. "But if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? Do not even the publicans the same? . . . Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." And the perfection here meant is God's love in its self-regardlessness. In his love, God lets clean go of himself. —C. H. Parkhurst.

MARRIED

Fry-Hubbell.—At the home of the bride's parents, in Huntington Co. Ind. March 23, 1893, Mr. Charles H. Fry, of Bucyrus, Ohio, and Miss Nora Hubbell, of Bracken, Ind.

A goodly number of friends and neighbors, most of whom were associates of the bride, were present to witness the ceremony, and offer congratulations. A number of presents which cannot here be enumerated were received. The evening was very pleasantly spent by the happy ones present, in singing and social conversation.

The following Saturday the young couple departed for Bucyrus, Ohio, the place of their future home.

May peace and prosperity go with them. May success crown their efforts in life, and may the glorious Gospel of the "Son of God" shine upon their pathway; and may they walk therein, and thus have on the wedding garment when the Bridegroom comes.

DIED

Of heart failure, March 5, 1893, at his residence in Rome Center, Mich. Warren Norton in the 81st year of his age.

Brother Norton early learned and embraced the Gospel of the Kingdom, and ever after lived a consistent life. He leaves a companion, several children, and a large circle of friends to mourn his loss, but rejoice in the hope of the Resurrection. Services by the writer.

"Thy Kingdom Come."

We pray,
"Thy kingdom come;"
And like a vision of the night
Comes up before our view
The faithful church,
Who e'en in ages past
Didst pray this prayer
That Jesus taught
His little flock to pray
Unto his Father, God—
"Thy kingdom come."
But oh, the days were long,
And weariness and pain
Filled up their sum;
And yet no sign appeared
To show the kingdom nigh.
But as the mariner on bolst'rous sea,
When storms assail his bark
And warring elements unite
To founder and to wreck,
Still holds his course,
With thoughts on destined port,
He thinks not of retreat,
But keeps his vessel's prow
Straight toward the port
For which he started out—
The goal of all his hopes,
The haven of his rest,
So did the church of God
Who prayed, "Thy kingdom come;"
For as they prayed, they journeyed on
With hearts intent,
And purpose fully set
To gain that kingdom—
Haven of their rest.
The Spirit clearly taught,
And well they knew.
The way was long
And weary wastes of years
Filled up with sorrow,
Pain and tribulation sore,
Lay 'twixt them and the goal.
Yet still they struggled on
And as they walked they prayed,
And knew by those things
Which they suffered
That their course was right
And that the kingdom lay ahead,
And thought not of retreat;
But only prayed,
"Thy kingdom come."
We pray that prayer to-day,
And as we pray,
Comes up before our view
The kingdom near.
The weary wastes of time
Behind us lay,
And looming through the mist
The way-marks rise
Which e'en did guide the church
Who kept their watch
And laid them down to sleep
'Till port was gained.
To us they left their trust
When called below;
And we to-day hold watch,
Which e'en shall see
The good ship enter port,
We pray, "Thy kingdom come."
But lo! the heavens are black,
With storm clouds tossed
And piled in rugged awful shapes;
While in and out
The lightening flashes play
Revealing caverns deep,
With glimpses of wierd and mystic forms
As though the fabled hosts of hell
Were mustering for the fray;
While on the troubled sea of time
The waves roll high
In mad tumultuous course,
As warring elements each other smite.
Upon the harbor bar
The breakers roar
And rear their crested heads
To bar the way
'Gainst all who refuge seek.
So pray, "Thy kingdom come,"
And hold the course
Straight for the harbor's mouth,
Nor think of other port.
There is no harbor on the shores of time
And only he makes port
That anchor casts
Within the head-lands
Of the eternal shore.
The storm, the strife,
The wreck of earth,
The end of time,
Lie 'twixt us and the kingdom;
Yet none of these things
Move us to affright,
But with our trust in God
We still do pray
That prayer of all the saints—
"Thy kingdom come."

The Coming Time of Trouble.

> "And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people: and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time: and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book." Dan. xii. 1.

There are some prophetic expositors who think we have already entered upon the time of trouble spoken of by the angel Gabriel to Daniel. We are certainly living in a time full of peril, disaster, and calamity, which if not that referred to in our text, may be taken as premonitory of the coming storm. Gabriel was revealing certain things to Daniel, with respect to his people the Jews, and particularly what should happen to them in "the time of the end." It is such a common practice for Gentile Christians to apply promises and prophecies to themselves, which were spoken to and about the Jews, that it requires us to be careful as to how we read. This unparalelled time of trouble was to be in connection with Daniel's people, but certain ones of them had the promise of deliverance, "every one that shall be found written in the book." And these will be Jewish saints, whose names will be written in God's "book of remembrance." Mal. iii. 16-18. Those who remain in Jerusalem, and are left in Zion—those that are delivered—"shall be called holy, even every one that is written among the living in Jerusalem." Isa. iv. 3. But while the righteous will be delivered, "all the proud, yea, all that do wickedly, shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." Mal. iv. 1. Thus we may see that the coming time will be a day of judgment as well as deliverance, but for the Jews especially. And the time is specified—"at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people." What time is referred to? Evidently "the time of the end," spoken of in verse 40 of preceding chapter, when there will be war between the wilful king, and the kings of the north and the south.

Some expositors think that we entered upon "the time of the end" many years ago, and adduce as proof, that many are now running to and fro, and knowledge is increasing: and that the book of Daniel which was closed up and sealed "till the time of the end" is now opened and understood. I admit that this is partially true; that there never was more travel, nor more facilities for the traveling public than at present, and that knowledge is rapidly increasing; also that the book of Daniel has been more read and studied within the last fifty years than ever before. And yet I think these are only approximations of what will be when the time is fully come. Expositors are not agreed as to the times mentioned in the book, whether days or years; nor as to the little horn, whether it is the Papacy, which has been in power for 1200 years, or is a power yet to be developed, and prosper only for 1200 days. Before we can definitely understand the times and the seasons, we will have to wait until the Father reveals them by fulfilling them. I have said, and still hold to the same opinion, that "the time of the end" will not come until introduced by the resurrection of the dead, and the rapture of the saints. If the reader will turn to Rev. xi. 14-19, he will find this will take place under the seventh or last trumpet. The nations are angry—God's wrath comes—the time of the dead that they should be judged—and that reward should be given to his saints, and destruction meted out to the corrupters of the earth. This agrees with Dan. xii. 1, 2, 13, and Isa. xxvi. 19-21.

This future time of trouble will not be confined to the Jews alone by any means; the Gentiles will be involved in it. An inspired apostle says—"Indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil, to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile." Rom. ii. 8, 9. And Jehovah through Jeremiah has said—"Lo, I begin to bring evil upon the city which is called by my name, and should ye be utterly unpunished? Ye shall not be unpunished. * * * * The Lord hath a controversy with the nations; he will plead with all flesh; he will give them that are wicked to the sword." Jer. xxv. 29-33. Isaiah places this judgment at the coming of the Lord. He says, "Behold, the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh; and the slain of the Lord shall be many." Isa. xvi. 15, 16; 2 Thess. i. 7-10; ii. 8-10. Because the Gentiles have oppressed the Jews, and trodden their city under foot for eighteen hundred years, Jehovah has a controversy with them. "In that day will I make Jerusalem a burdensome stone for all people; all that burden themselves with it shall be cut in pieces, though all the people of the earth be gathered together against it." Zech. xii. 3; xiv. 2-5. This gathering of the nations against Jerusalem, will be "in those days, and in that time," when Jehovah shall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem." Then and there will he plead with them for his people, and his land. Joel iii. 1, 2, 9-17. The gathering of the nations will be effected by evil influences or counsels proceeding from the dragon, beast, and false prophet, to the kings of the earth, and the whole habitable. This will be to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty; the place is Armageddon; and the time the coming of the Lord. Rev. xvi. 13-16. "The kings of the earth"—ten in number—represented by the toes of Nebuchadnezzar's image, and the horns of the scarlet colored beast of Rev. xvii. 3, agree to give their kingdom, power, and authority to the beast, for one hour, or a short time, "until the words of God shall be fulfilled," verses 12, 13, 17. This confederacy of kings turn against the lewd woman who rides the beast, "hate her, make her desolate and naked, eat her flesh, and burn her with fire." Thus will come to an end that monstrous, wicked, and deceitful system of wickedness,—the Papacy. See chapter xviii. for a detailed account thereof. The Lord uses the wicked to punish the wicked; and then punishes them for their wickedness. So when this confederacy of kings, under the rule of the beast and the false prophet, come against Jerusalem, after the downfall of mystic Babylon, intending the destruction of the city, and the suppression of the rising kingdom of the Jews, they meet a foe which is too strong for them. "These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them." They make a grand and fatal mistake; for he is a Lamb no more; he is now "the Lion of the tribe of Judah"—"he is Lord of lords, and King of kings; and they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful," verse 14. See chap. xix. 11-21, for a description of the advent of this mighty Warrior and his armies from heaven, and their complete victory over the beast, the false prophet, the kings of the earth, and their armies.

This coming time of trouble is connected with what is called "the day of the Lord," "the day or hour of judgment," "the day of vengeance of our God," etc., and intimately associated with the glorious advent of the Son of man. Preceding remarks have already alluded to these things; but much more remains. Jesus, in answering the questions of his disciples, about the destruction of the temple, the sign of his coming and the end of the age, as given in Matt. xxiv., Mark xiii., and Luke xxi., gives prophetically, certain signs which would precede the demolition of the temple, and the end of the age. First, religious deceivers, assuming Christ's name. Second, wars, and political and national disturbances. Third, physical phenomena, such as, earthquakes, fearful sights and great signs from heaven, famine and pestilence. "All these are the beginnings of sorrows." Then, Fourth, persecution even unto death for "my name's sake;" the prevalence of iniquity; the decline of faith and love; followed by the proclamation of the Gospel of the kingdom to the whole habitable for a witness unto all the nations. Fifth, "and when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh." Then follows directions for those who wish to escape from the threatened trouble—"for there shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people." And Sixth, "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." The treading of Jerusalem and her people under the iron heel of Gentile oppression has lasted for more than eighteen centuries, but "the time to favor Zion, yea, the set time is come." Psa. cii. 13. The signs of the times indicate a great change. The persecution of the Jews in Russia and the exodus of large numbers of them from that land of oppression to other countries, but especially to Palestine; the building of railroads in the land, and the introduction of Western civilization and modern improvements in and around Jerusalem, show the trend of events. Chronologically, we are now in the very last days of Gentile times, when the resuscitated leopard-beast of Rev. xiii., will make a desperate and final effort for the supremacy of the world. This, however, we know, from the prophetic word, will be a complete failure, and bring disaster upon all those nations engaged in that conflict. It is then that Gentile times terminate, and Gentile rule is broken; for it is at that time when Michael, the great prince of the Jews, shall undertake their cause, and they will be delivered. And the kingdom will then come to Israel—the kingdom—which the God of heaven will set up—and which will be given to the Son of man and the saints. Dan. vii. 14, 27; ii. 44; Micah iv. 8.

This coming time of trouble will be "after the tribulation of those days," foretold by Jesus, as I have already noticed. Some say, that tribulation ended more than a century ago. Remember that the prophecy was concerning the Jews only. The tribulation which began about A. D. 70, in the destruction of the temple and city of Jerusalem, in the death by sword, famine and pestilence of over a million of Jews, and the rest led into captivity, has not ended yet. Witness the bitter trials they are passing through in Russia. Nor will "the days of vengeance" be fully completed until both Jew and Gentile have filled up the measure of their guilt, and received the punishment due to their sins. The events which Jesus spoke of to his disciples, that were to precede the end of the Mosaic age, I think may be repeated, but intensified in these last days. Even now, we hear of many false prophets; rumors of wars, and great preparations for war; great atmospheric disturbances, earthquakes, cyclones, floods, disasters on land and sea, famines, pestilences, etc.; a great decline in faith; the love of many waxing cold; infidelity spreading, and iniquity abounding; the poor and the rich, or labor and capital in conflict; and men's hearts failing them for fear of coming troubles. Nor is it at all improbable that persecution will yet rise again. Read and study Rev. xiii. 15-17; xiv. 6-13. Here we have a proclamation of the gospel to all nations—not a sectarian gospel—but an authoritative one, proclaiming the hour of judgment, and the good news of the coming age. This will cause trouble with the beast and false prophet, and probably be one cause of the fall of Babylon. Persecution, even unto death, will follow.

I cannot see with some that "the tribulation of those days" has any reference to the persecutions which took place under either pagan or papal Rome. It seems to me to be rather that time of trouble, of Dan. xii. 1; and called "the great tribulation," out of which that unnumbered company of Gentiles came, after the sealing of the 144,000 Israelites, mentioned in Rev. vii. 9, 13, 14. Jesus spoke of that day as coming unexpectedly upon the world; "for as a snare (gin or trap) shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth. Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." Luke xxi. 34-36. How may we escape? Hear what the exalted and glorified Jesus sent to the church at Philadelphia, and through them to every one of like character—"Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of trial, which shall come upon the whole habitable, to try them that dwell upon the earth." Rev. iii. 10. The saints of this class, whether Jew or Gentile, will be saved from the evil to come. "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast." Isa. xxvi. 20, 21. That day of the Lord will come stealthily and suddenly as a thief in the night, upon those who are crying, "Peace and safety;" and asking mockingly, "Where is the promise of his coming?" 1 Thess. v. 2, 3; 2 Pet. iii. 5, 10. But the children of light, are sober and watching; that day will not overtake them as a thief. "For God has not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ, who died for us, that whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him."

While the signs of the times are ominous, and are very significant of coming events, full of import to the world at large, the student of God's Word has an advantage over the unbeliever, the politician, or mere worldly man, because he can look out from his watch-tower, and see what is coming. He can say with the watchman when looking towards the East, "The morning cometh, and also the night." There is a mixture of light and darkness—joy and grief—hope and despair. There is a glorious day coming, when "He that ruleth over men will be just, ruling in the fear of God. He will be as the light of the morning when the sun riseth, a morning without clouds; when the tender grass springeth out of the earth through clear shining after rain." 2 Sam. xxiii. 3, 4. "The Sun of righteousness will arise with healing in his wings" upon Israel, who has long been in sorrow and darkness, and also upon the nations who are seeking deliverance from human bondage. "Sorrow may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."

Yes, "the morning cometh, and also the night." But "watchman, what of the night?" It is called "the day of the Lord," but the prophet asks, "Shall not the days of the Lord be darkness, and not light? even very dark, and no brightness in it?" "A day of darkness and of gloominess, a day of clouds and of thick darkness, as the morning spread upon the mountains." A very dark picture or description of a day—no light, or joy, or hope in it. We may read a symbolic prophecy of that day, under the opening of the sixth seal, in Rev. vi. 12, 17; and also what will transpire during that dark day, when the sixth vial of wrath is being poured out. Rev. xvi. 12-16. It is during the pouring out of this vial that Jesus says, "Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame." He comes and takes away the watching ones. "How great is thy goodness, which thou hast laid up for them that fear thee; which thou hast wrought for them that trust in thee before the sons of men! Thou shalt hide them in the secret of thy presence from the pride of man: thou shalt keep them secretly in a pavilion from the strife of tongues." Psa. xxxi. 19, 20; xxvii. 5. This will be the lot of the watchers; saved out of the hour of trouble, and hid until the indignation passes over; while those who are not ready, are left over, to pass through "the great tribulation." Oh, let us all hear what the Faithful and True Witness says to the lukewarm Laodicean church, before the time of trouble overtakes us unawares; for he says, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me," Rev. iii. 20; if we thus act, he will share his throne with the overcomers. Amen.

Report of Meetings.

The following is a report of meeting held by Eld. Almus Adams at Fair View School House, Sheridan Co., Neb.

Bro. Adams arrived in Gordon at 12:35 a. m. Wednesday March 15. 1893. Bro. Bouck was there ready to convey him to his destination and he arrived at Bro. C. H. Watkins in time for breakfast. His time being limited he was not permitted to rest and meeting was announced for that evening.

A few weeks before Bro. Adams arrived here, Mr. Ward, a Seventh Day Adventist had been holding meeting in our school house. Of course our Bible views differed widely. This man's principal hobby was the Sabbath question and he harped on it so much that some one asked him if he would debate the question, to which he made the broad statement that he would debate that question with the king on his throne. So when Bro. Adams arrived here Mr. Ward was afforded an excellent opportunity for setting forth his views of the Sabbath, but when it came to debating instead of talking debate it was a different thing. and he made many frivolous excuses to avoid the discussion. But parties that had been attending his meetings regularly, although members of neither church, decided that he should defend his statement or acknowledge that he could not defend it. He chose the former. So on Saturday afternoon he came into the neighborhood intending to keep it a secret from our people, and by so doing surprise Bro. Adams when he came out to fill his appointment in the evening, but this failed as Bro. Orth by some means discovered his whereabouts and immediately informed Bro. Adams that his opponent was in the neighborhood engaged in hard study preparatory for a discussion that evening. Had it not been for Bro. Orth's information Bro. Adams would have been without even a tablet for notes, but he would have carried the day just the same for about all he needs is the Bible and that is always with him. However they met at the school-house at about 7 p. m. and made arrangements for the discussion. As Mr. Ward could spend but that night and the next day with us it was decided to discuss the question in half hour speeches until the question was settled.

Question—Is the fourth commandment binding on the Gentiles? Aff. Mr. Ward, Neg. Eld. Almus Adams. The discussion began at 8:30 p. m. and by 2:30 a. m. Mr. Ward had decided that it was highly necessary for him to return to his family, and the audience decided that he had made a failure and might as well go home. In fact it was the best thing he could do. So the discussion closed and Mr. Ward took his departure while Bro. Adams after a little rest filled his 11 o'clock appointment Sunday forenoon just as well as if he had never seen Mr. Ward or any of his people.

Our meetings then continued without further interruption until Tuesday evening when Bro. Adams was obliged to preach his farewell sermon for the present in order to fill an appointment at the quarterly conference in Furnas Co. March 24. He delivered seven sermons here and his efforts were crowned when the door of the church was opened and three willing souls accepted Christ as their Savior. Wednesday forenoon we met at my home for social meeting and to perform the sad task of bidding good bye to a brother that we have learned to love so dearly. Why? Because through his instrumentality we have been rescued from everlasting darkness and nonentity to a hope of everlasting life and happiness. "God's blessing rest upon him is my prayer. Amen."

Conference Report.

The regular Quarterly Conference of the "Church of God." met at the Fairview School-house, Furnas Co. Neb. March 24, to 26.

The weather was all that could be desired and a fair audience filled the house each session.

Those present from a distance were, Bro. and Sr. Sellick, Bro. and Sr. Prime, Bro. and Sr. Brown, Bro. and Sr. Misner, Bro. J. P. Glenn and son. The preaching brethren present were, Eld. A. Adams, Eld. J. T. Prime, and Bro. J. P. Glenn. The business matters of the Conference were taken up on Saturday afternoon, and the minutes of the last meeting were read by the Secretary.

The Treasurer reported the amount received, $185.00, and the same paid out for labor, and general expenses.

The Evangelist reported the amount received $185.60. Expenses $32.01, less expenses $153.59. Number of sermons delivered, 75. Additions to the church, 15. Number of miles traveled by rail, 2017, and by team 200. Total 2367.

One church organized at Ainsworth, Neb. and a discussion held near Gordon, with one Ward, a Seventh Day Adventist.

The Assistant Evangelist reported, amount received for labor, $28.50, amount due Mar. 1, 1893, $7.00, number of days employed 23, number of sermons delivered 19, additions to church, 2. Visits were made to Wanneta, Moorsfield, Fair Haven, Kan. and the new church in Frontier Co.

Bro. Prime reports himself ready and willing to answer calls, and to do what he could towards "Gathering in the sheaves," during the remainder of the conference year.

We started out to try to do more evangelistic work this year than ever before. Bro. Adams' work for the last quarter exceeds that of any other in many respects.

Let us draw a little summary report for the six months ending Mar 1. Number of sermons delivered by both evangelists 173, additions 80, amount paid out for said work, less expenses $381.47. This we think a creditable showing.

The tent work was talked over for the coming season and it was decided to start at St. Paul, Neb. about June 15th, unless something transpired before then to necessitate a change.

Upon suggestion of the President it was decided to defer the location of the next conference until some future time.

J. J. CADY, Sec'y.

Conference Notice.

The annual conference of the churches of God of the Abrahamic faith in Iowa, will meet at Clarkesville, Butler Co. Iowa, June the 2nd, 1893, and continue over two Sundays. The large audience tent and a half dozen or more small or living tents will be ready to accommodate those who come. And as the preaching brethren are always ready to make any sacrifice to be present, and labor for the interest of the meeting and the good of all, we hope and earnestly entreat all who have an interest in the cause of the Master and are looking for his soon coming to make a sacrifice also if necessary to be at this meeting, for we are persuaded that while all mean to be steadfast, yet there is an ominous tendency to falling away among all Christian societies that will proceed his coming. Then let us, as many as can possibly do so, go to this meeting, determined to make it a means of filling our lamps with that oil that will throw light along the way of the bridegroom's approach, so that if we slumber and sleep before his arrival we will be ready when the final cry is sounded to go out to meet him, and go in with him to the wedding, and not have the door shut upon us while we go to seek for light. He may be nearer than we think.

LIBBIE PALMER, Sec.

Many matters that seem of greatest moment to us, will be as nothing to our posterity while the many littles of the present, in their multiplicity or summing may prove to them a matter of greatest moment.

The Thief on the Cross.

This is the title of a tract that needs no introduction, having been printed in this paper substantially as it appears in the tract Writte by M. Joblin. The design I been to issue this work as cheap as possible, and sell it as neces. as can be. It makes 16 pages, the price is placed at one cent each in quantities, the buyer to pay postage. The postage and wrapper on 100 cost about 20 cents, so that $1.20 pays for 100 postpaid. Single copy 5 cents, 25 copies 30 cents, 50 copies 60 cents. For any quantity above 25, at rate of 1 cent each with an additional charge of 20 cents per hundred for postage.

Contingent Fund.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to THE RESTITUTION office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

Poetry.

O Lord, How Long?

They tell me
That some have heard the mighty chariot wheels
Roll in the distance; that the world's salt tears
Are clearing their last furrows in her cheeks.
It may be so; I know not. Oft the ear,
Alert and eager for some comfort [illegible],
Construes each breeze among the vocal boughs
Into the tokens of his wished approach.
But this I know; He liveth and shall stand
Upon this earth; and round Him thick as waves
That laugh with light at noon, uncounted hosts
Of his redeemed.
O dawn millennial day! Come, blessed morn!
Appear, Desire of nations! rend thy heavens
And stand revealed upon thy cloud of light!

Does Rome Fill the Prophecy?

Did the thing that the prophet spoke of concerning the fourth member of the image as seen in the vision literally follow or come to pass? If so, that ends the contention, for this is God's rule for testing the fulfillment of prophecy. Then did Rome thus fulfil the measure of the prophecy? Is the fourth member of the vision duplicated in Rome? To admit that the prophecy is fulfilled in a very limited manner by Rome in the past is as destructive of the rule, as to claim as many do that in her the full prophecy is duplicated! The first departure from the rule in the vain attempt to fit into Daniel's precise description of the fourth member of the vision, something widely dissimilar. "These great beasts which are four, are four kings which shall arise out of the earth." Was the first member of the vision an individual king? Prophecy answers yes. Was this rule broken in the second and third members of the vision? Prophecy unhesitatingly answers no. Then by what rule can the claim be established that more than forty distinct individuals, some of whom were popes, some consuls, some kings, some tribunes, some triumvers, all be said to be the fourth king? The "saw and hammer" together with powerful hydraulic pressure, are evidently called into requisition in trying to make out a case of fulfilled prophecy. Daniel's fourth beast, seen in the prophetical vision rising out of the sea, may not be chronologically located so that it might be readily fixed in point of time, but when it is identified in John's vision in Rev. 13, its chronology is settled, for surely John could not have seen in prophetic vision the first appearance of a power that had arisen in [illegible] and was then in the zenith of its power as all must admit that Rome was at the time of John's vision. The power that is described as "dreadful and terrible and strong exceedingly" and was to "devour, break in pieces, and stamp the residue with the feet of it" was to do this when in that state of combination with the iron (satanic power) that was to give it this super-human power. While in this condition, this terrible power is to make war with the Lamb, and the issue of this battle in destruction of the Satanic host by the Lamb who at this time will be King of kings and Lord of lords assisted by the chosen and faithful who are then crowned with immortality and have this exalted honor that David describes in the 149th Psalm.

Assuming then that some phases of the prophecy have been fulfilled by Rome, the writer begs the privilege of replying to the question "How could six of the seven heads of the beast have already appeared on the beast in John's time if the beast has not yet made its appearance?" by asking another: "How could this or any other phase of prophecy exist at the time John writes it if the revelation was intended as expressed in verse 1 of first chapter, to show into his servant (John) things which must shortly come to pass." Or as expressed in verse 1 chapter 4 "I will show thee (John) things which must be hereafter?" The terms used in the prophecy by John, certainly was not present tense as related to that time, but to time when the prophecy would be fulfilled. Is not this true of all prophetic statements? Does not God speak of things that are not as though they were? Then did not John see things as they will exist when the prophecy will be fulfilled and not when it was given by the angel to him?

The three distinct stages of the beast's existence can certainly apply to the times of the fulfilment of the prophecies concerning it, and this will harmonize the apparent discrepancy.

The questions propounded by Bro. J. C. Kinsey as to the "temple of God in which the Man of Sin is to sit" are entitled to due consideration, for whatever conclusions may be reached the fact stands admitted that the "Man of Sin" was to sit in the "temple of God." If in a somewhat strained use of the prophecy the conclusion is reached that the popes of Rome and the Man of Sin are identical, the Roman Catholic Church must stand admitted as the "temple" for they did not sit in a literal temple as that did not exist! The inquiry of Bro. Kinsey is "What temple we (the writer and Bible Class) have in mind." The writer would by no means answer for the Bible Class, but would cheerfully speak of the "temple" that was in his mind and tell how it came to have an existence in the mind. Now my Brother when you ask if "we understand that God will commission some one to build a temple for the Man of Sin to exhibit himself in," would imply that this is all the use God would have for it.

As well conclude that because Christ drove the money changers out of the temple that it was built for that special purpose. The temple in the mind of the writer is the one that God so beautifully describes in the prophecy of Ezekiel, beginning at the fortieth chapter and treated in detail to the close of the forty-eighth chapter. That such a temple as the prophet describes has never been built is a fact beyond question. That such a temple will be built in the future is an item of faith based upon the sure word of prophecy. That God's children are typically "the temple of God" is a fact not questioned by Bible students, but that fact no more destroys the idea of a future literal temple to be built for the glory of God and the consummation of His purposes than it does the fact that God once had a literal temple on earth forbids the idea of God's people now being typically the temple of the living God. The same root idea belongs to both, the worship and the glory of God being inseparable connected with them. Through both, God manifests His love and power. "Where will such a temple be built?" "And he said unto me, Son of man the place of my throne and the place of the soles of my feet where I will dwell in the midst of the children of Israel forever, and my holy name shall the house of Israel no more defile, neither they nor their kings, by their whoredom nor by the carcasses of their kings in their high places." Ezekiel xliii. 7.

The name of the city where this grand temple is to be built is to be known by the new title that will then be given it, "Jehovah Shammah" literally "the Lord is there," now called Jerusalem, the capital city of the kingdom of God. "Why will it be called the temple of God?" Because God orders such a temple to be built for the consummation of His purpose. To this temple the Lord will come as Malachi testifies, Chapter iii. 1-4, then begins the purifying process by which the sons of Levi (Jews) shall be purged of their wickedness and thus be in a condition to offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall sacrifices be offered unto the Lord in Jerusalem "as in the days of old." Thus will the Lord deal with the outcasts of Israel, thus will be disciplined the "sheep" that Jesus said "were not of this fold." God would visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name, but after this begins the grand work of discipline with "his own" who did not receive His Son and as a punishment for rejecting him were scattered to the four winds of heaven, but "he that scattered Israel will also gather him." No wonder that in view of the final accomplishment of God's purpose concerning his chosen people, the apostle breaks forth in that rapturous expression "O the depths of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God, how unsearchable are his judgments and his ways past finding out." O, yes how few comprehend his wonderful purposes concerning those who as touching the Gospel were enemies for your (Gentile) sakes." Blessed sacrifice through which the Gentiles have access to the kingly priesthood, and let us praise God that as touching the election they are beloved for the father's sakes. Truly the gifts and calling of God will not be repented of. No, his eternal purpose will be accomplished, and while human wisdom may not be able now to fathom the deep purposes and secret counsels of the omnipotent one, yet when the rubbish shall be all removed and the scaffolding taken away there will be heard a universal cry of joy as the acclamations of praise will be heard shouting grace, grace unto it. Then it will be acknowledged that the Judge of all the earth did do right. "Who was to apostalize or fall away and is this future?" To apostalize is to renounce faith, to fall away then or apostalize could only be done by those who once held the faith. As Gentile religionists never had the faith it would be a very bad use of the word to say they had apostalized from the faith. Is the word apostate applicable now to any other people upon the earth except the Jews? Did they once hold the faith? Yes they were for ages the sole repositories of the sacred oracles. With them God made all the covenants that were made. Now where are these people as related to the faith? Almost without exception they are apostates from the ancient faith. Let us bear in mind the fact that the Jews are almost exclusively the subjects of prophecy, and the grand mistake of expositors of prophecy has been made in trying to make Gentile history fit into the facts of Jewish prophecy. People need to be reminded often of the great Scriptural truth "salvation is of the Jews." Ignoring this fact has led to an interpretation that does violence to the truth. Take Jewish history out of the Bible and little will be left. Take the Jewish plan of salvation out and nothing will be left. Lay down the "saw and hammer" and let the facts of history fit into the facts of prophecy, and the adjustment will be so readily made that all can see that the "thing which the prophet hath spoken" hath come to pass.

Yours in the hope of Israel.

"Let Down Your Nets."

Launch out into the deep.
The awful depth of a world's despair;
Hearts that are break[illegible] that weep,
Sorrow and ruin a[illegible]
And the sea is wide [illegible] less tide
Bears on its bosom [illegible]
Beauty and youth [illegible] rock
To its dark abyss for aye—f[illegible] aye.

But the Master's voice comes over the sea,
"Let down your nets for a draught" for me!
He stands in [illegible] strand,
And sweet and royal is his command.
His pleading call
Is to each—to all;
And where the royal call is heard,
There hang the nets of the royal Word,
Trust to the nets, and to your skill,
Trust to the royal Master's will!
Let down your nets each day, each hour,
For the word of a King is a day of power,
And the King's own voice comes o'er the sea,
"Let down your nets for a draught" for me!

Original.

Signs of the Times.

Dear Restitution:

If you have a little space in your columns you can grant me, I would like to write you a few lines on a favorite subject of mine, and I trust an interesting one to all the dear household of faith. "The signs of the times" or my reasons for believing and preaching, as I have for nearly a quarter of a century, that the Lord was very soon coming, yes! even at the door. But, if the positions taken by some of our dear brethren is correct who have written quite extensively of late on prophecy, and the times of its fulfillment, then the best thing I can do is to stop preaching, or at least on that subject, and use the rest of my days in humble confession for misleading the people on a subject of such vital importance.

After our Lord had fulfilled to the very letter all the predictions of the prophets in regard to his first advent, the Pharisees and Sadducees in their unbelief and impudence, came tempting him, that he would show them a sign from heaven. He answered them, "When it is evening ye say, it will be fair weather for the sky is red, and in the morning, it will be foul weather today for the sky is red and lowering." "O, ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky, but ye can not discern the signs of the times." Matt. xvi. 1, 2, 3.

In Matt. xxiv. I understand our Lord gave us, his people or church, a brief history of this Gospel Dispensation. In verse 42 we are commanded to watch. Who shall watch? Not the Jews who rejected him, but the Church of God. "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief." Why not? Because our Lord had given us the necessary instructions as per request of the disciples. In Matt. xxiv. 1-2, he speaks of the destruction of the Temple, and quotes from the prophets. As he sat upon the Mount of Olives the disciples came unto him privately saying, "tell us when shall these things be, and what shall be the signs of thy coming, and the end of the world?" Who were interested in his glorious returning then? His disciples. Who are interested now? Not a worldly church, not the Jews, but such as are looking for his return. Remember this conversation was strictly private, questions asked of awful importance then, and to us now of much more importance. Tell us when shall these things be? When shall Jerusalem be destroyed, and not one stone left upon another that shall not be thrown down, etc. At the 15th verse he gave them signs by which they might know and escape the awful fate awaiting the doomed city. When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet standing in the holy place, or when ye shall see Jerusalem encompassed with armies then know the destruction is nigh. We understand Christ's followers did discern the signs and made their escape. He informed them of other things that would transpire, then gives them three definite signs by which they might know he was near, even at the door. Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, etc. The majority of the professed Christian world believe this tribulation had reference to the destruction of Jerusalem, while others believe it to be yet in the future. I cannot believe either to be right for the following reasons:

1. These three signs given by our Lord were not fulfilled immediately after the destruction of Jerusalem. Let us see if we can find out when they were fulfilled. We believe it applies to the papal persecutions. We understand this tribulation was to continue twelve hundred and sixty years. Rev. xii. 14. And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent. Verse 6. A thousand two hundred and three score days. Symbolic days. Ezek. iv. 6; Num. xiv. 34.

A good brother not long since, asked, when the great tribulation began? A very reasonable question. Let us see. "In 533 Justinian entered upon his Vandal and Gothic wars. Wishing to receive the influence of the Pope and the Catholic party, he issued the memorable letter which was to constitute the Pope the head of all the churches, and from the carrying out of which in 538, when the last of the three Arian horns was plucked up the period of papal supremacy is to be dated." The catholics everywhere hailed as deliverers the army of Belisarius the General of Justinian.

What will the great tribulation do? And shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws; and they shall be given into his hands until a time, and times, and dividing of time. Dan. vii. 25

How has papacy worn out the saints? By its relentless persecutions of Christians, having put to death fifty millions (some writers say, one hundred millions) by every conceivable means of torture which wicked men or demons could invent through all these dreary centuries. O! if Latimer, Cranmer, Hooper, Rogers, Ridley and untold millions could speak and unfold to our horrified gaze, the Inquisition, the torturing rack, the dark, damp, slimy, dungeon, the fires of the burning victims tied to the stake, and add to these the fires of Smithfield. Think you those martyrs of Christianity would want to place those terrible persecutions in some future period?

Remember dear reader, this awful power was to wear out "The Saints of the Most High." Not the Jews, who had rejected their Messiah, and are now justly suffering their dispersion and punishment. All other persecutions fall into utter insignificance compared to the great tribulations suffered by the Christian Church during these ages of martyrdom, when the last great time of trouble spoken of by Daniel and other writers transpires, the Saints will not be worn out, but will be "caught away" or hidden under the sheltering care of God, as Isa. xxvi. 20, says, hide thyself for a little moment until the indignation be overpast. Those who are not ready will be left to pass through the greatest time of trouble the world has ever witnessed. Also this same power was to change times and laws. Has it done this? "It has expunged the greater part of the second commandment in order to establish the adoration of images, dividing the tenth to complete the number ten." in fact we find them nearly all greatly mutilated, which any one can find by consulting Butler's Catechism, p. 28, Edition of 1877, published by Hoffman Bros. Milwaukee, Wis. Is she guilty of changing any of the Ordinances? Yes. For the Sacred rite of Baptism by immersion, she has given us sprinkling, which is no baptism.

For that sweet and blessed remembrancer given by our Master "till he comes," she gives us in its place Transubstantiation. Has she broken the Everlasting Covenant? Look dear reader at Isa. ex. 7-8-9-10-11. See what that covenant was, and thus ask yourself if she or her apostate daughters, quick to follow in her footsteps teach that covenant now, but listen to their theories of a sky-kingdom, hell, and purgatory, and see how effectually she has broken it. Has she spoken words against the "Most High?" Listen to her. The Pope calls himself "The Vicar of Christ." Leo 10, styled himself "The Lion of the tribes of Judah" Leo 12 allowed himself to be called "The Lord our God." Pope Martin 5th called himself "The most holy, and most happy, who is arbiter of heaven, and the Lord of earth, the successor of St. Peter, the Anointed of the Lord, the Master of the universe, the Father of Kings, and the Light of the world." (Bible Readings, p. 20.) "They have assumed infallibility, which belongs only to God, and they go beyond God in pretending to loose whole nations from their oath of allegiance to their kings, when such kings do not please them. They go against God when they give indulgences for sin." A. Clark, on Dan. vii. 25, Scores of other evidences might be quoted. Is papery truly the "Man of Sin?" If there is yet another one to come God pity the world!

But has God's prophetic clock ever stopped? No, not one moment, but following it in its careful tickings what do we find? At the expiration of 1260 years, Feb. 1798 Berthea entered Rome at the head of the French army and took Pope Pius 6, prisoner, established a republic in Rome and the pope died in exile the following year. Two years was the world without a pope. Chambers Encyclopedia. Thence receiving his deadly wound. No general persecutions since.

When was the sun darkened? Just at the right time, just when the Lord said it would be. Within those days, after that tribulation. Mark xiii. 34. The days ran out 1798, sun darkened 1780. Just 18 years before the expiration of the 1260 years. Something strikingly awful shall forewarn people that the world will come to an end, and that the last day is even at the door. Martin Luther.

The 19th of May 1780 was a remarkably dark day. Candles were lighted, the birds were silent and disappeared, fowls retired to their roosts, and it was the general opinion that the Day of Judgment had come. The Legislature of Connecticut was in session at Hartford, but being unable to transact business adjourned. President Dwight. The dark day of May 19th, 1780, the heavens were covered with a dense cloud for hours for which no satisfactory reason has been assigned. Noah Webster. And the moon shall not give her light. Matt. xxiv.29.

"The darkness of the following evening May 19, 1870 was probably as gross as has ever been observed since the Almighty first gave birth to light. I could not help conceiving at the time that if every luminous body in the universe had been shrouded in impenetrable darkness, or struck out of existence, the darkness could not have been more complete. A sheet of white paper held within a few inches of the eyes, was equally invisible with the blackest velvet." Mr. Tenny, N. H. quoted by Mr. Gage, to the Historical Society. This was not the result of an eclipse as history tells us the moon fulled the day before. And yet some one skeptically inclined may ask, but why were these not seen by the whole world? For the same reason that the star which guided the Wise Men of the East to the birth-place of the Savior was only seen by them. "The wise shall understand, but none of the wicked." Dan. The second sign. And the stars shall fall from heaven. Has this sign been fulfilled? Let us quote Prof. Olmstead of Yale College, a distinguished Meteorologist. "The extent of the shower of 1833 was such as to cover considerable part of the earth's surface from the middle of the Atlantic on the east, to the Pacific on the west, and from the northern coast of South America, to undefined regions among the British possessions of the north, the exhibition was visible, and everywhere presented the same appearance." "Those who were so fortunate as to witness the exhibitions of shooting stars on the morning of Nov. 13, 1833, probably saw the greatest display of celestial fire-works that has ever been seen since the creation of the world, or at least within the annals covered by the pages of history." And the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs when she is shaken of a mighty wind. Rev. vi. 13.

One writer remarked, "This language has always been considered metaphorical, but last night it was literally fulfilled."

My dear, doubting friend, will that grand and awfully sublime phenomena satisfy your unbelief, or will you still ask for more stars and like the Pharisees of old, ask for another sign from heaven.

[illegible] proved to the Wise Men of Old, that their Savior was born. Be wise and believe the signs he has already sent of his second coming.

Third and last sign. The powers of the heavens shall be shaken, and then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven. Now my dear reader for the application. Did you ever hear the word cyclone until within the last 25 years? When we consult the U. S. Signal Service, and there learn that over four hundred of these death-dealing, property destroying storms occurred in one year, then read from any secular paper, that the cyclone or electric storms have destroyed more life and property the last few years than has ever been known since the creation from like causes. Again, the tidal waves, and earthquakes, are much more frequent than ever before, and each year increases their number and severity. Truly, men's hearts have reason to fail them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming upon the earth.

One of the easiest things is to say, O, well, I do not believe those things mean anything, but dear reader you can never explain them away, even to your own satisfaction. Remember the poor skeptic is just as afraid of the cyclone as we are. In all my evangelist work, this one discourse on "The Signs of the Times," has done more to arrest attention and cause thought and investigation, and acceptance of the Gospel, than any other one subject. I have in my mind two Infidels past sixty years of age, who were led to accept the Gospel by learning these facts and fulfillments. One of them has fallen asleep with the blessed words of hope upon his lips, "I know that my Redeemer liveth."

I was once asked to preach on "The Signs of the Times" and did so. Several ministers were present and the audience large, but most conspicuous there was our dearly beloved, Father Chaplin, thoughtful, earnest, to me he resembled a prophet of old, and I felt like an infant learner at his feet. At the close of the service, a brother minister, came to me and said, "Brother Woodward you have entirely misapplied Matt. xxiv. It has no reference to the Gentile Church whatever, applies to the Jews, and Jerusalem." Father Chaplin answered, "I think Brother Woodward is right." I thought so too, and have had no reason to change my mind since.

Now brethren if these three different signs given by our Lord have not yet been fulfilled, what reason have we for believing our Lord is soon to come. It may take untold years to develop them, then as we heard a minister say not long since, "It may be ten thousand years yet before the Master returns to earth." That view would forever close my mouth on that subject, and I would wait for further evidences.

Let us be consistent, for, "consistency thou art a Jewel." Not one word have I said, dearly beloved in the Lord, for controversy, but I cannot cry, "Peace and safety" and thereby lull thousands to sleep. I ask your prayerful consideration of the words written by your brother in Christ.

B. W. Woodward.

Peter's Second Epistle.
Chap. 1.

1. Symeon Peter a bond-servant and apostle of Jesous Christ unto you who have been allotted a like-precious faith in the righteousness of our God and of our Savior Jesous Christ,

2. Grace be yours and may your peace have been made full in an acquaintance with God and with Jesous our Lord;

3. Since all things belonging to his divine ability which hath been given us, are ours through our ac[illegible] called us, the things namely relating to God and life and true piety, his own (ideas) of glory and virtue (i. e. manhood)

4. Through which (divine ability and personal acquaintance) the to us precious and greatest promises have been beneficently given, that thereby (by the promises) ye might become partners in divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the cosmos in inordinate-desire;

5. To this very end indeed may ye have brought to bear all diligence and have added a full supply of the manhood to your faith, and to your manhood the comprehension, and to the comprehension the control from within, and to the control from within the patient endurance the true-reverence,

7. And to the true reverence the friendship-of-brethren and to the friendship-of-brethren, the sanctified-love.

8. For if these things be yours and they abound, they constitute you not slothful nor unfruitful in your acquaintance with our Lord Jesous Christ.

9. For he is blind, in whom these things are not present, short-sighted and one who ignoreth his cleansing from his former sins.

10. Therefore, brethren the rather be diligent through good works (or deeds) to make your calling and election assured. For those who do these things shall never fail.

11. Yea, in this wise will your entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesous Christ have been richly supplied.

12. Therefore I intend to be always reminding you about these things, though ye know them, and are firmly fixed in the present truth.

13. And I consider it right, as long as I am in this tabernacle to be stirring you up in the way of reminder:

14. Knowing that the putting off of my tabernacle is speeding even as our Lord Jesous Christ revealed to me,

15. And I shall be diligent on every occasion to have you, after my departure, bring about a remembrance of these things,

16. For not by having followed out mythical sophisms have we made known unto you the ability and coming of our Lord Jesous Christ, but in having become eye-witnesses of his majesty.

17. He having received moreover from God the Father honor and glory when a voice was brought unto him of such glory beneath the majesty, as this is my Son, my beloved, in whom I am satisfied.

18. And this voice we heard brought from out the heavens, we being along with him on the sacred mountain.

19. And we have the more assured prophetic word, which we do well to heed, as a lamp that is shining in a squalid place until the day shall dawn, and a light-bringer shall arise in your hearts.

20. Knowing this first that no Scriptural prophecy hath occurred for one's own interpretation.

21. For no prophecy was ever brought by man's will, but as men of God, saints when borne by sanctified spirits talked it.

COMMENT.

"Who have been allotted" suggests the persistent use of this term "allot" throughout the Scriptures from Genesis to the Apocalypse and all the speculation it has given rise to. If however the reader will try and understand that God's creation was just as much according to a definite plan matured in his own mind as the architect's is in his and infinitely more so; the mystery will at least be less a mystery. In such a plan every stone is quarried, cut to size and allotted to its place according to the plan long before it is placed. We are said to be "living stones" to be put into "a living temple" which is a [illegible] and plan of God. To an ignorant and undisciplined mind it seems uncomprehensible how the architect can work out all these details before ever a stone is quarried; but simple enough to any one who has mind enough to study it out. So I imagine God's "decrees" and "allotments" will by and by seem to the mind of "the perfected" saint.

"Acquaintance" instead of "knowledge" C. V. and R. V. This term implies in English a personal relation established. For example, Do you know this person? No. I am not acquainted with him. I've heard of him; but am not personally acquainted with him. This is the thought here of the writer of this epistle. He is not speaking of knowledge about Jesous Christ; but acquaintance with him personally as I apprehend the thought here. Compare this whole statement contained in the 4th and 5th verses as here translated with the C. V. and R. V. and see if I am not right in this conclusion, "Partners in" here not "partakers of" C. V. and R. V.

Definite article the important here, as the Scriptural standard of all these virtues is a definite one and very far from agreeing with that of the world's philosophy. God's man is different from the world's man and God's friend is not generally rated as the world's friend. God's love is a specific kind of love which no unregenerate heart ever experiences.

"Control from within" is the full meaning of the word rendered "temperance" in all the versions and which is a translation of a translation. We get the word from the Latin "temperantia" which does not translate the idea contained in Greek the word εγκρατεια.

"Manhood" instead of "virtue" C. V. for the same reason αρετη expresses in the Greek all the qualities that belong to true manhood.

"Patient-endurance" instead of "Patience" merely C. V. and R. V.

"True-reverence" as opposed to false-worship or idolatry of any form.

"Assured" instead of "sure" C. V. and R. V. A sure faith and an assured faith are not the same thought by any means.

The Restitution.

The Restitution advocates the "final" restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Fear Not.

"Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Then we read, "There is no fear in love, but perfect love casteth out fear." Herein is our love made perfect that we may have boldness in the day of judgment." 1 John 4: 17.

A Christian need not fear, for the reason that he whom we serve is able to save to the uttermost all that come unto him. If we fear, it is not because God is not able to save us, but because we do not perform our part.

After the transgression of Adam the Lord God said to Adam, "Where art thou?" The reply was, I heard thy voice in the garden, and I was afraid. Gen. iii. 9. The day of judgment for his transgression had come and Adam was called on to give an account to God. He was a sinner and he knew it. He had disobeyed God's reasonable command and he had no boldness when the hour came to stand before his Judge, and so he hid himself. But he could not hide from God; he was compelled to appear, and all his excuses were of no avail.

The penalty of transgression was made known to him in advance, and he was warned to flee the wrath to come by obedience to God. After transgression came judgment. At the judgment the Judge gave sentence: "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return."

Paul says, "The wages of sin (transgression) is death." Rom. vi. 23. And that God has "appointed a day in the which he will judge writes to Timothy that Christ is to "judge the living and the dead at his appearing and kingdom." There is no fear in love. If we love God we shall be obedient to his Word, and if we are obedient to him he will give us an abundant entrance into his everlasting kingdom.

If we fear not, then we may go forward, like Moses at the Red Sea, or like Joshua at the river Jordan. These two men of God had no fears but what their "Leader" and "Commander" would be able to open the way. They loved God, believed his Word, and went forward in obedience to the command, one step at a time, and the result was, deliverance soon came.

Now, is the day of trial for us. Now, is the time for us to go forward in Christian work and duty. Now, is the time to love God and fear not. If we fear not, and have faith and hope in God, we shall have boldness in the day of judgment, and can say, "Lo, this is our God! we have waited for him, and he will save us; we will rejoice in his salvation." But if we fear, and fail to go forward in the performance of what God declares we must do, then our boldness will all depart from us in the day of judgment, and we will find ourselves among those who call on the mountains and rocks, "Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb.—S. H. Coleman, in Our Hope.

Aigrettes set with diamonds are the fashionable coiffure, and the woman who affect them may be interested to know that the graceful, filmy feathers are taken from a kind of heron called the egret, at the breeding season. They are attacked at the time when the young birds are fully fledged, but not able to fly, and the mother bird in her solicitude is forgetful of her own danger. When the slaughter is finished and the few handfuls of coveted feathers are plucked out the poor birds are left in a heap on the ground in sight of their orphaned young.

No matter how morally good we are, no good dwells in the flesh, if Paul understood himself. •

THE Christian should remember that it is when he is in the path of duty only that he has claims upon the protection and care and mercy of the Father in heaven. •

ANOTHER sign that an era of progress has dawned upon the Holy Land is given in the daily papers. They say that the electric light has been introduced into a new flour mill near the supposed sight of Calvary, and close to the Damascus gate, at Jerusalem. •

IF it be true that we must be sanctified by God's truth, as taught by Jesus,—we cannot afford to lose sight of the solemn fact for a moment. Fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, friends and neighbors cannot come in between us and the truth. No guess-work, Jesus word for it. •

THE Christian should never be satisfied with his present attainment. His growing season should last all the year round. This of course implies liberal feeding on food wholesome and strong; and there is nothing to prevent this, if the appetite be good and the digestion strong. Yes, the Christian motto should ever be, onward, forward, upward, in the divine life—ever reaching forth unto those things which are before—the coming of his Lord and life-giver, and the riches of God's favor to be dispensed by him. •

As a test of the claim that death unsheathes spirit-mind, and that the spirit-man resembles the material body in which it formerly dwelt, having eyes, tongue and limbs; and that the material arm arm, the material leg the sheath for the spirit-man's leg, and so on; so that when the material leg is amputated the spirit-leg is dis-embodied, an exchange suggests the following:—"In order to see if the spirit-man can suffer pain by fire, put the spirit-leg into fire, and if it suffers no pain by contact with fire, neither would the whole spirit-man." •

DR. GUTHRIE on Rom. ix. 32, "He spared not his own Son," supposes the case of a condemned criminal sending a petition for pardon and eagerly awaiting the result day after day till he finally hears rapid steps approaching. They stop at his cell, the bolt is drawn, and the messenger gives the answer,—"The Sovereign pities the man but cannot pardon the crime." His hopes are dashed to the ground; he wrings his hands in anguish and gives up all for lost. But the messenger adds there is but one way now by which he can be saved—if the King's Son would change places with him, he might go free. Although drowning men will catch at straws he did not catch at that. The idea of the heir to the throne dying for him! Fancy, if you can, his astonishment, sinking to incredulity, and then rising to paroxysm of joy when the messenger says, "I am the King's son; it is my wish and my Father's will. In me shall the crime be punished; in you shall the criminal be saved. Escape! Behold, I set before you an open door."

What a shameful carricature of the love of God and of Christ that is! We indistinctly turned to the words of the Spirit in Isaiah xxix. 15, 16, "Woe unto them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord, and their works in the dark, and they say, who seeth us now and who knoweth us? Surely your turning of things upside down shall be esteemed as the potter's clay." In the words of the leaders of religions, thought as Dr. Guthrie, the songsters get inspiration for their popular pieces, such as, "Jesus paid it all;" substitution takes the place of the Gospel of the Kingdom and all its conditions; they climb up some other way only to hear the awful words, "I never knew you." •

"IF it be true, as Lavater says, "Actions, words, looks, and steps, form the alphabet by which character may be spelled," dissemblers are amongst the greatest of fools for their pains. •

FOR a minute or two we were at leisure the other day. On opening a book casually these words attracted us: "Prayer in secret is genuine prayer. Prayer in the presence of others is not necessarily so. Christ inculcates privacy in the matter; not that he excludes public addresses to the Father in season, for he himself exemplified this phase, John n. 41, 42. And Paul also, Acts xxvii. 35. But he enjoins secrecy on the whole, in this matter, as in almsgiving. Men of God pray much in secret as Jesus did, who often withdrew himself to solitude to pray, Luke vi. 12. And Daniel did so three times a day, Dan. vi. 10, and David who seven times a day gave thanks and praise, Psa. cxix. 164. The men who pray most in secret, pray best in public: for the genuineness of their private habit infuses itself into their public petitions. The formality of prayer-saying is a transparent abomination." •

THE daily papers of April 16, tell of Prince Alexander of Servia, while at a banquet with the high men of his nation, rising to his feet and announcing to them that they may consider themselves prisoners, and declaring himself King of Servia. These papers give startling headlines: "War not unlikely." "Almost sure to follow Alexander's accession." "Russia behind him," etc. The dispatches of April 15, in the Chicago Tribune contain the following in regard to the situation:

What sent the continental bourses rattling downward in such precipitation yesterday and today convinces Europe on reflection that it has a crisis on its hands not specially related to Alexander's mental outfit or moral character. By putting several things together an impressive explanation of this coup d'etat in Belgrade has been arrived at. When, a week ago, these dispatches reflected a general impression that something violent was known that officials of the Russian embassy at Belgrade were making themselves conspicuous at Radical meetings, but no definite importance was attached to this. Today, however, brings numerous proofs that the Russians in Servia knew all about the upheaval before it occurred, and brings also an official court announcement from St. Petersburg that Queen Natalie lunched with the Czar in the Crimea Thursday. It is a rather obvious guess that the telegram brought to her son that evening at dinner, upon the receipt of which he stood up and made his little history changing speech, was an outgrowth of that far-away luncheon at Livadia. It does not need the rumor that young Alexander's betrothal to the Grand Duchess Xenia, elder daughter of the Czar, will be speedily announced to reveal the stamp of Russian paternity which the entire transaction bears.

Europe views with pardonable nervousness every external move of Muscovite policy. Its special anxiety in this case is the possibility that Russia may be intending to set Servia in motion against those contumacious Bulgarians whose Prince is to marry a Catholic bride next Thursday. There is no doubt as to the extreme bitterness with which official Russia views this match. There is no doubt, too, about the ardor with which the younger generation of Servians, their King included, would jump at a chance of retrieving the disgrace of Slivinetza if sure of Russia backing.

Milan arrived at Belgrave to-day, and if there be any such game afoot we may trust his gambling impetuosity to set the ball rolling with the smallest possible amount of delay. Servia has gone back in every sense—financial, military, and political—since the humiliating thrashing it received at Bulgarian hands in 1885. That it will be whipped out of its boots now in a single-handed fight with Bulgaria is taken for granted by every martial expert, but evidently such a fight would only be begun under the guarantee of Russian help, and that would almost inevitably involve Austrian intervention and general trouble.

It is quite possible that none of these sinister mischances may ensue. Europe is kept in such a chronic state of wearied hysteria by the weight and magnitude of its armaments, and by the abiding consciousness that the issue, peace or war, lies in the hands of important but erratic and semi-civilized hordes on the eastern and southern borders, that it is continually shying at what turns out to be only a shadow. But it remembers that since Napoleonic days every big Old World war has had a quarrel of churches and creeds as its inspiring basis, if not its pretext, and the sudden importation of the ancient savage Græco-Roman feud into the perennial imbroglios in the Balkans.

A Living Sacrifice!

In Romans xii. 1, the Apostle commences a series of practical lessons drawn from what he had previously said. "I beseech you, therefore brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." reasonable in view of God's mercies. This passage is a reassertion of the truth taught in the 7th chapter, concerning the war between the members of the body; a reassertion of the truth in the sixth chapter; sin must not be served; a reassertion of the truth in the 7th chapter, the deeds of the body must be mortified, and mortification means death. The apostle made it his business to keep his body under and bring it into subjection, Cor. ix. 27. Not that Paul and his body were two persons; but it shows that the one Paul was possessed of animal propensities, and moral and intellectual faculties. At conversion the whole body was placed under the control of the renewed mind, and from this point forward it was the object of his life so far as he himself was concerned, to prevent the old man from again assuming control. And the passage at the head of this article shows that he wants us to do the same.

We see the narrowness of the way illustrated by this Scripture, and how unelastic the discipline and glory is. The flesh will ever be trying to assert itself; its desires will frequently make themselves known, but they must not be gratified, for if gratified they grow and become imperious in their demands. The only safe way is not to feed them, and they will gradually weaken till they practically become harmless for evil.

The intellectual believer of the Gospel does not expect to live in touch with his surroundings; understands that he has a warfare to wage, a race to run, a prize to gain. He realizes, too, that he enlisted to fight after counting the cost of forsaking all to follow Christ. And inasmuch as even Christ did not please himself (Rom. xv. 3) he could not reasonably expect to; nay; he is alive to the fact that his body must be sacrificed; the mercies of God being the lever to lift him up to the sacrificing point. If God's great mercy be kept uppermost in his mind the reasonableness of the sacrifice called for will clearly be seen; but if his attention be diverted from them, he will begin to think that somehow or other he has some rights which God is obliged to respect in any event, and therefore he assumes that the flesh may be humored with impunity once in a while, and once in awhile soon becomes a confirmed habit.

Our readers will see what we understand by presenting our bodies a living sacrifice to God. It is a life denial of self, a life devoted to God. To make this plainer, if possible, let us suppose one who wishes to get even, as it is called, with some one for real or imaginary wrongs. The fact that vengeance is Jehovah's prerogative is ignored, he takes matters into his own hands,—the flesh is gratified; it has begun to rule again, and the utmost vigilance will be required to prevent it from regaining complete control. This is what it is not to sacrifice the body. To sacrifice the body is not to let it have its way; it is to deprive it of any authority over our thoughts, words or deeds; it is to do the bidding of the spirit, and confer not with flesh and blood.

A man's name on the church book will not help him if he allows the flesh to govern his conduct, even with respect to one thing, if it be a violation of God's law. Sin is sin, in the sight of God. And as one leak will sink a ship, so one sin not forsaken and pardoned will remove his sin-covering, and sink him in the blackness of darkness forever.

Let us suppose, again, that one brother has offended another, there's a Divine rule laid down for its settlement. Will the offended apply that rule, or will he think he knows a better way? That depends whether or not the renewed mind is in authority. If it is he will go to that brother and tell him his fault alone,—but if the flesh is in the ascendant, he will nurse the wrong till hatred and variance induces him to tell everybody but the proper one, so that there are then two offenders in place of one. The first may not really be an offender; but the second certainly is; ah, and a double offender is he. He has willfully violated the divine rule, and added evil speaking and anger and malice to it. We are all liable to do this in unguarded moments, and a family throne for disbursing favors to God's children has been established. They can come to God in Jesus' name and ask pardon, and be again at peace if they sorrow after a godly sort, and forsake what they ask forgiveness for. But if they persist in doing it week after week, month after month and year after year, they are not saints, they are sinners. Their sin covering is removed. They have no part or lot or interest in Christ. They sin wilfully; they serve sin, and cannot serve two masters. The body was not presented to God as a living sacrifice, and the end is death.

In our judgment the violation of the rule of life mentioned in the 3rd verse of Rom. xii., entails bitterer results than that of almost any other. It is this; "Not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think. He may and must think highly enough of himself to keep himself pure, unspotted, respectable; but there is a point beyond which he must not go. The context shows the reason why the portance would cause all to want the highest office regardless of qualifications. There are offices of a lower order to be filled—must be filled. The feet and hands are as necessary to the head, as the head is to the feet and hands.

The Spirit know beforehand what we prove by experience, that those who think too highly of themselves are seldom satisfied with the estimate of others,—who, in the nature of things are best qualified to form an impartial estimate, and friction is the result. This principle is illustrated every day in political, religious and business circles. The history of faction shows that nine-tenths of all divisions and factions originate with those who are dissatisfied with the estimate formed of them by others. As there can be but one head to a body, they could not shine as stars of the first magnitude, and the only alternative was to make bodies for new heads to rest upon. If we narrow our field of vision to the church, we are safe in saying that the Divine rule of promotion is too slow and circuitous to suit them, and is therefore ignored; their turn may never come that way, they cannot run the risk of trying it. The divine way is as follows: "For whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased, and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." Those who find by experience that this divine rule prevails seem astonished to find that the Master meant what he said. Their self importance blinds them to other equally plain announcements of the spirit, such as, "For not he that commendeth himself is approved, but whom the Lord commendeth." They forget, too, that the "flesh profiteth nothing;" and forget that "God accepteth no man's person," Gal. ii. 6. Should it be asked, what then, does he accept? We reply, man's humble trust and loving obedience and loyalty. This places high and low, rich and poor, learned and illiterate, young and old, black and white on a common level before God, in so far as these several states and conditions are concerned. Character alone makes the difference with God.

Our object in writing these words is to undeceive any who may think they have a title clear to mansions in the Father's house, who have not presented their bodies as living sacrifices to God, but who humor the whims and foibles of the flesh instead of walking in the Spirit.

The time may soon come when we shall have to give an account of our stewardship, and we want to render it with confidence and joy, not having shunned to declare the whole counsel of God so far as we understand it. We as a people have heaps of truth that others are blind to,—and while this should ever be a source of joy and cause for gratitude, we must never forget that responsibility is the basis of judgment with God, and that it is knowledge which makes us responsible. Where much is given, much is required. •

3. The Bible says that man is mortal. Job. iv. 17. while you say that he is a compound being, both mortal and immortal. Is that not an addition?

4. The Bible says plainly that man dies and wastes away. Job. xvii. 10. But you say that is only the body in which the man lived. Do you say the truth, or take from the truth—which?

5. The Bible says—For the living know that they shall die, but the dead know not anything. Eccl. ix. 5. But you say the living know that they must die or be separated or divided, both soul and body. Then dare you be consistent and say that man when thus will you say it, or that the dead know more than all living?

6. The Bible says—"For there is no work nor device nor knowledge nor wisdom, in the grave whither thou goest," Eccl. ix. 10, while you say the personal pronoun thou only refers to the body while the other personal pronoun soul supplied goes to heaven or hell where there is work, device and knowledge and wisdom. What a wholesale addition of tradition.

7. The Bible says, "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." Gen. iii. 19. But you say that only refers to the body. Are you sure of it? Then the Lord was talking to the body or house, was he?

20. The Bible offers salvation to dying men and women. St. John iii. 14-16. While you are seeking to save immortal souls that cannot die.

21. The Bible clearly teaches that Christ died to save sinners. Rom. v. 8. While you teach that he died to save immortal souls, and only his body died at that. Did you ever stop and think how it was that the mortal body of Christ that died, and his blood that was shed, could atone for the sins of an immortal, immaterial, never-dying soul, did you?

A Few Observations.

It seems that Bro. Niles has caught on to some new light touching the new covenant. If I understand him, he thinks the teaching and writing of the ten precepts the conditions of the old covenant in the hearts of men and women now constitutes the new covenant, and that the seventh day Sabbath is yet in force. Is he right? Please give the trumpet a certain sound.

And Bro. Wagoner has made a manly effort to clear away the fog and get down to solid rock on prophecy. It requires good courage and lots of it to cross over and call in question old time honored theories. Hew to the line Bro. Wagoner, but keep your eye on the line and do not hew it out, as we are yet in a dark place and need the prophetic light to guide us until the day dawns and the day star arises.

Those two articles selected by Bro. Hatch, written by Bro. Bowman, I regard as the precious truth of God and well told, and should have a wide circulation. If the author would consent to enlarge and improve them, and print them in a small tract form to scatter broadcast, there is no telling how much good they might do in reaching the hearts of a class of men and women who do their own thinking.

Brethren and Sisters, if we can not conveniently attend the conference meetings on account of means and distance, we can with very little trouble and a light expense be at the social meetings, if not in person we can in spirit or mind by sending in a word of cheer, a word of exhortation. Do not neglect the assembling together as the manner of some, but exhorting one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching. The wise only will see and understand.

What has become of our boy preacher Porter Haskell? Who can and will tell us something about him, and what he is doing, and oblige.

Fearful Waste Wrought by War.

Just now the civilized world is at peace or at least the civilized world is more quiet than for 100 years.

From 1793 to 1815 the Napoleonic wars prevailed.

In 1828 there was war between Russia and Turkey.

In 1830-1840 civil war prevailed in Spain and Portugal.

From 1830 to 1847 war was carried on between France and Algeria.

From 1854 to 1856 there was war between England and France and Russia.

From 1861 to 1865 civil war prevailed in America.

In 1866 Prussia and Austria were in conflict.

In 1866 France was at war with Mexico.

In 1870-71 France and Germany were at war.

In 1876 and 1877 Russia and Turkey were at war.

In this century of conflict the loss in men is estimated at 4,140,000, not counting the almost unending conflicts in South America.

In the Franco-German war Mulhall estimates the losses of both nations in killed, died of wounds, died of sickness, and disabled, at 371,751: German, 133,751; French, 238,000.

Of these numbers 107,000 were killed or died of wounds, 60,000 died of sickness, 205,000 were disabled.

The same authority thus estimates the losses in killed and wounded at the different periods of the conflict as 311,000.

The improvement in war weapons is thus stated: The Germans in the war of 1870-71 fired 400 shots to every person killed, whereas in the American war it took 740 shots to kill a man.

War costs more in life; peace costs more in expense. The German army is not killing anybody now, but it cost in 1889 to maintain it $95,000,000.

The appropriation for the army of the United States is one-fourth of this sum, or $24,000,000; but it is to be remembered that our army is only a shadow, chasing the Indians over the plains.—Chicago Tribune.

QUESTIONS.

Editor Restitution:

I would like to have you or some of the writers of THE RESTITUTION, to explain what is meant by calling up the Spirits, as spoken of in 1 Samuel xxviii. from the 8th to the 20th verse.

Was this woman (or witch) endowed with power from God; or was it mere witchcraft or fortune telling?

Some people seem to think that this proves the immortality of the soul. They say that these were disembodied spirits that visited Saul. Please show that they were not, and oblige, your brother in Christ.

MONTY HART.

Dear Restitution:

It is time to renew our subscription to THE RESTITUTION, please find enclosed a post office order for $1.50 to pay for 1893 and 25 cents for Bro. Joblin's tracts, which we will distribute among those not of the Abrahamic faith. How swiftly the years pass but each one brings nearer the coming and the kingdom of our Lord and Savior. He has said, "And behold I come quickly and my reward is with me to give to every man according as his work shall be." Can he say to us in that day, "Well done thou good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things I will make thee ruler over many things. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Dear brothers and sisters that is the time I long to see. When we will be gathered together in one great family never to be separated. Eternal life is worth striving for. We know it is promised to all those that prove faithful. Let us try and be ready for we know not what hour our Lord will come. Your sister in hope.

MRS. MARY J. WORTHINGTON.

Lead Me.

"I do not ask, dear Lord, that life may be
A pleasant road;
I do not ask that thou wouldst take from me
Aught of its load;
I do not ask that flowers should always spring
Beneath my feet;
I know too well the poison and the sting
Of things too sweet.
For one thing only, Lord, dear Lord, I plead;
Lead me aright,
Tho' strength falter, and tho' heart should bleed,
Through peace to light.

I do not ask, dear Lord, that thou shouldst shed
Full radiance here;
Give but a ray of peace, that I may tread
Without a fear;
I do not ask my cross to understand,
My way to see;
Better in darkness, just to feel thy hand,
And follow thee.
Joy is like restless day, but peace divine
Like quiet night;
Lead me, O Lord, till perfect day shall shine,
Through peace to light."

Selected.

The Gospel of the Kingdom of God.

Recently I observed a street preacher speaking very earnestly to a crowd collected around him on a street, and when I came close up I stood to listen. His subject was the parable of the sower, which is recorded in Matt. xiii. I listened very attentively until he concluded, and if I had been a public speaker, I would have stepped forward and said what I now say to you:

My Dear Friends,—I am very glad indeed that there are men amongst us who are able to come out and speak to their fellows about a life beyond this present life; and it does my heart good to see this done, and those men should be encouraged and commended for doing so, because I do think that their motive is good. Now, I have listened to a very good discourse; a good description has been given of the various kinds of hearers which are spoken of in this most interesting and instructive parable, and the closing remarks were a very earnest appeal for you to accept of Jesus as your Savior for your eternal well-being.

Now, my dear friends, I did not hear a word about the seed which Christ sowed in the hearts of His hearers when He spoke this parable, and if the proper seed is not sown it is not natural to expect a proper crop. Christ, in explaining this parable to his disciples, tells them what the seed is (v. 18), "Here ye, therefore, the parable of the sower. When any one heareth the word of the kingdom, and understandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart." Now the seed which Christ sowed in the hearts of his hearers was the word of the kingdom, and it is important to know what this seed is. Luke i. 30, "And the angel said unto her, Fear not, Mary; for thou hast found favor with God. And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Here we see Jesus is to get his father David's throne and reign king for ever, and in the first verse of Matthew we read, "The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham," where he is called the son of David. Nathan the prophet said to David, "And when thy days be fulfilled, and thou shalt sleep with thy fathers, I will set up thy seed after thee, which shall proceed out of thy bowels, and I will establish his kingdom. He shall build an house for My name; and I will establish the throne of his kingdom for ever. I will be his Father, and he shall be My son." "And thine house and thy kingdom shall be established for ever before thee: thy throne shall be established for ever" (2 Sam. vii. 12-16). This Jesus is the promised son to David, who is to reign for ever.

Jesus is also called the son of Abraham, and in Gen. xiii. 15 we read—"For all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever." Paul says—"Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ" (Gal. iii. 16). Now Christ is the promised seed to Abraham, and so the connection between Christ and David and Abraham is quite clear.

When Christ himself began to preach, He "came into Galilee, preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom of God, and saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the Gospel" (Mark i. 14). The Gospel preached here is, "the kingdom of God is at hand," and this gospel of the kingdom is expressed in various ways in the New Testament, such as—The word, The word of God, the gospel of God, Glad tidings, The Word of the kingdom. As in the parable of the sower, so the seed which Christ sowed in the heart of his hearers was, "The kingdom of God is at hand," or any other of those phrases you choose.

We follow Christ's teaching a little further: "And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness, and all manner of disease among the people" (Matt. iv. 23). "And he (Jesus) said unto them, I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also; for therefore am I sent" (Luke iv. 43). Now Christ being sent to preach the Gospel, and having commissioned his twelve disciples to preach the same gospel, for he said unto them, "As you go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand" (Matt. x. 7)—it is your duty and mine to believe it. And we see the consequence of rejecting (or not believing) this gospel (v. 14),—"And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear your words, when you depart out of that house or city, shake off the dust of your feet. Verily I say unto you it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrha in the day of judgment, than for that city." The consequence of not believing the gospel of the kingdom of God is very serious indeed, for in Luke x. 8, we find that Christ sent out seventy other disciples to preach the same gospel, and in giving them their instructions he said, "And into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you, eat such things as are set before you: and heal the sick that are therein: and say unto them, The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you. But into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you not, go your ways out into the streets of the same, and say, Even the very dust of your city which cleaveth on us, we do wipe off against you: notwithstanding, be ye sure of this, that the kingdom of God is nigh unto you. But I say unto you that it shall be more tolerable in that day for Sodom than for that city."

Some may ask, In what sense was the kingdom of God at hand? In this, that it was preached to men for them to believe it so that they might participate in the kingdom of God when it did come. It was at hand in that sense then, and it is at hand in the same sense to-day, and will be till the kingdom comes.

Paul says, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard Him?" (Heb. ii. 3). Now I have just been telling you what the Lord began to speak of at the first, and Paul styles it the great salvation. How then shall we escape if this is neglected? I know of no escape whatever.

Christ says, "Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child shall in no wise enter therein" (Luke xviii. 17). Now the gospel of the kingdom of God which Christ preached and commissioned the twelve and the seventy disciples to preach is most assuredly the gospel of Christ, and Paul says of it in Rom. i. 16, "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Paul does not say that it is the power of God unto salvation to those who believe, hence the necessity of believing this gospel of the kingdom of God.

The reason why I have written all this is just because the religious world at the present day entirely overlooks these things. The gospel of the kingdom of God has no part in the pulpit ministrations of to-day. The sum and substance of what is to be believed for salvation according to this street preacher is just this, accept of Jesus as your Savior, believe in Him, believe that he died for you, and throw yourself entirely upon him, then you will find that peace which this world can neither give nor take away. And this preacher is very much in accord with the religious teaching of to-day.

Now Christ proclaimed the gospel thus, "The kingdom of God is at hand," and the twelve and the seventy disciples he sent out to preach did the same, even whilst at that time they did not know that Christ was to suffer on Calvary's cross. When Christ began to tell them of his sufferings and death, it was something foreign to their minds, they had no idea of it at all. "From that time forth began Jesus to show unto his disciples how that he must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests, and scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day. Then Peter took him, and began to rebuke him, saying, Be it far from Thee, Lord: this shall not be unto Thee" (Matt. xvi. 22). It is evident from this passage, and from others of the same kind, that the death of Christ had no part in their preaching, and in Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John we have a detailed account of Christ's sufferings, death, and resurrection, but we have no command in these four gospels to repent and believe in the death of Christ, but we have a command from the Lord himself to repent and believe the gospel, as in Mark i. 14. The death of Christ is not proclaimed till the day of Pentecost, then after this the gospel of the kingdom of God and the things concerning the Lord Jesus Christ go together for belief. We quote another passage in John xx. 30, "And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book; but these are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name." It seems that John wrote his book for the purpose of showing that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of God. Now the Christ is "the anointed." David was anointed king over God's people Israel, and Solomon and Saul likewise; these kings are dead, but Jesus is the Christ, the anointed of God for the throne of His father David, and he shall reign for ever. "For unto us a child is born, unto us a Son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulders: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever" (Is. ix. 6). It is evident from these Scriptures that Christ is to reign king for ever on David's throne, which was in Jerusalem. "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him" (Dan. vii. 27). Here again we see that this kingdom will be set up on the earth, and the good news of this kingdom is the seed which Christ sowed in the hearts of his hearers when he spoke the parable of the sower.

I will quote again. "But these are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name" (John xx. 31). To believe in His name is to believe that he is the Christ, or God's Messiah (the Son of God)—the anointed of God for the throne of his father David. Christ himself confessed to the woman of Samaria that he was the Messiah:—"The woman saith unto him, I know that Messias cometh, which is called; Christ when he is come, he will tell us all things. Jesus saith unto her, I that speak unto thee am he" (John iv. 26).

Jesus said: "I said therefore unto you, that ye shall die in your sins; for if ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins" (John viii. 24). And, as I said before, the gospel of the kingdom of God and the things concerning the Lord Jesus Christ go together for belief after the day of Pentecost, but not before. We have a case in Acts x. Cornelius sent for Peter, and Peter went to his house and "opened his mouth and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him. The word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ (he is Lord of all), that word, I say, ye know, which was published throughout all Judea, and began from Galilee after the baptism which John preached." Now the things which Peter did not need to say anything about were just the things which I have been telling you about, as they were already known to his little audience; and the remainder of his discourse is upon the things concerning the Lord Jesus Christ. Again, we read—"Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him, preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him" (Acts xxviii. 30). "But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women" (Acts viii. 12). Further evidence that these two go together for belief after the day of Pentecost is not required.

Now, my dear friends, I would have you to examine the Scriptures, every passage which I have quoted, and see for yourselves whether I have spoken according thereto. It is a question of very great importance indeed, even a question of life and death. The gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation, to them who believe, and belief, in the Bible sense, is not merely an operation of the mind, or a simple assent to certain truths stated, it must go further. "For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation" (Rom. x. 10). When the truth enters your heart it will produce fruit; first, obedience in being baptized into Christ and putting on Christ in the way appointed by God; then a consistent life, devoting yourself to the service of God in your every day life; living for him whose blood was shed for the remission of sin.

May God open your heart to receive and believe the truth, is the prayer of the writer.—R. Camron, in Messenger.

For the Scattered Children of God, also for the Lost Sheep of the House of Israel.

As Brother Underwood in his letter to me March 7, 1893 concluded by saying—write again, I do hereby gladly avail myself with the privilege conferred upon me. Truly I have much to say in honor of our dear Lord, so I will try and tell of his love and extol his holy name. for he has been watching over me for sixty-seven years and mercifully leading me by a way which I knew not—leading amidst storm and tempest—amidst sickness and pain and amidst all the disappointments of my pilgrim journey; but my pen cannot write one-thousandth part of the praise and honor and glory which is due to our Father and to his Son our ever blessed Lord. Can I honor him with my pen and my one talent by writing some humble thoughts on paper? Can I advance a word of comfort to one of my fellow men or women whose heart is bowed down under affliction's rod, who like myself have had to wade through deep waters until in anguish of heart and mind, I have been constrained to cry out of the deep emotions of my heart—tired so tired. Cloud upon cloud is gathering around me and loud the thunders roll. Father take my hand and through the gloom lead up to light thy child. I have felt the iron hand of poverty grip, I have known what it is to have and abound. I have been led as it were through the valley of the shadow of death, yet fearing no evil—His rod and his staff did comfort me. Ah then do I gladly write, for I know my Lord will say, inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my little ones—Ye did it unto me—enter into the joy of thy Lord. Yes, Lord and I will wait for the full fruition of that joy, for when Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory. If I can write such words of hope that may catch the eyes and touch the heart of one who all his life time has been living without hope and without God in the world, and should my feeble efforts be blessed to such an one—leading him to flee for refuge to our blessed Lord, and to lay hold on the hope set before him in the Gospel of the kingdom. Then, yes then, will my soul be elated to know that I have brought one more soul to Jesus and one more snatched as a brand from the burning, one more jewel to my crown of rejoicing, one more benighted child of darkness brought into the light, one more to testify to the honored name of Jesus, one more mother with a gladdened heart, one father more with stronger faith, shouting in ecstasy of joy. cxvi. Psa. 1-2. I love the Lord because he hath heard my voice. Because he hath inclined his ear unto me, one more home made brighter, one more jubilant song in heaven over another trophy won for the Lord, and I ventured to say the fruits will follow, for when one is born of God he will seek to impart his joy to others. God grant that the fruit may be a facsimile of the tree of life, producing fruit every month and sending forth its foliage for the healing of the nations.

When I sat down to write these lines my heart was very sad, my way very dark, my needs very many, my resources meagre, my outer man trying to dominate over my new nature, to claim supremacy of government. Oh, what a warfare—troubled on every side—without fightings within fears. Demon foemen standing in battle array well armed and well equipped for the conflict; but blessed be God I have here before me upon my table the good old book that tells me of the armor of God, so I put it on and take the sword of the spirit. "And the victory is mine through Christ Jesus my Lord, O the depth of the riches both of wisdom and knowledge of God how unsearchable are his judgments and his ways past finding out."

"Now child of God awake—and put the armor
And take the shield of faith—for your enemies are strong
And get your feet well shod—with the Gospel—sound and true
And bear your breast in righteousness—and God will lead you through.

Put on your head the helmet of salvation tried and strong,
And then test well your armor—let the whole of it be on
When tried—go forth to battle—and sweep your foes away,
For one can chase a hundred—and two a thousand slay.

You know friends—your God's Israel—though captives for a while,
You wandered in the wilderness—and bitter was your trial,
The Lord did bring you back again—from perils so forlorn,
He proved you in the wilderness—through trials made you strong.

Only a little longer wait—at most a few more years
Only a few more sighs to heave, only a few more tears,
Only a little longer toil and the strife will soon be done
Only to be in readiness—and then the battle's won."

"Be ye also ready for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."

Samuel Freeland.

Report of Meeting.

Editor Restitution:

For the first time we write to you, sending you a report of a meeting held in our city, by Bro. John Foore, of Parsons, Kansas.

The meetings begun Saturday, evening, March 25, and continued over two Sundays.

The weather was the best that could be expected all through the meetings, and the moon being near its fullness gave us plenty of light by night.

Although the number of people present was small, the best of attention was given, and we think that good will be the result of our efforts in securing Bro. Foore to preach for us. This was the first for a long time, that the restitution-age has been preached in this city. The meetings were given out by our parents, Mr. Lehman, and Mr. Allen. Bro. Foore preached Saturday night and Sunday, and as the meetings were not very well attended, we had some notices printed and handed out to the people, and in this way it became extensively advertized, and the result was that a few more came out to hear the Word, but prejudice was so great that the house was not filled at any one time.

The subjects selected, were ably handled, and truly by a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth.

The following subjects were selected and well discussed.

Saturday evening, March, 25, "Come let us reason together." That we should upon any given subject reason together with one unbroken link all the way through.

Sunday forenoon, "Rightly dividing the Word of Truth." That upon any given subject we should see to it, that the Word is harmoniously divided.

Sunday evening. "The Restitution;" bringing back and restoring earth and man to its original state.

The Church thought best to have Bible Class, which they started on Wednesday forenoon. It proved to be very interesting and instructive.

Monday evening's subject, "Wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel? Acts i. 6." That the literal Kingdom of Israel was the Kingdom of God, that it is now in ruins and when we pray "Thy Kingdom come." It is the Kingdom of Israel restored under Jesus the King.

Tuesday evening's subject, "Good news or Glad Tidings, Mark i. 14 15; Gal. i. 6."

Wednesday Bible class was changed from morning to three o'clock in the afternoon.

Wednesday evening, St. John xiv. 20. The commencing at Jerusalem of the apostles to preach after being endowed with the Holy Spirit. God's order was that the apostles should first commence at Jerusalem, and there swing out to all others. So when the kingdom is set up, it will commence at Jerusalem and swing out or increase to all nations, like the stone cut out of the mountain without hand and become a great mountain and fill the whole world. The Bible class Thursday afternoon was very interesting. The subject for Thursday night, "The Nature of Man, Gen. ii. 7." Proving that man was entirely mortal, that he does die, and that when dead, he is laid away in the gave, and were it not for a resurrection he would never have a future life, and that Jesus is the [illegible] Life, and that he arose triumphantly, and bursted the bars of the tomb, such as he was, will the harvest be. The Bible class Friday afternoon was interesting and instructive.

Friday evening, "The Seed of the Woman, Gen. iii. 15; Gal. iii. 16." It should bruise or crush the serpent's head, that Christ and the saints would become masters of the situation, and bless the obedient nations.

The Bible class for Saturday was postponed on account of preparing for the communion which took place at the residence of one of the members on Saturday evening in commemoration of their dying Lord. They surrounded the table, leaving a vacant chair for their absent Lord, who died and shed his blood, for the remission of sins. When through they sang a hymn and went out.

The subject for Saturday evening was, "If a man die shall he live again?" Proving most successfully that it is the man that dies, that shall live again. Good proof was given to sustain both sides.

Sunday forenoon, the subject was "The blessing of all nations. Gen. xii. 18, xviii. 18."

Bro. Foore said he was always glad to get hold of this subject and liked to preach on it because it was all good from beginning to end. It was well handled, and the only objection was that the house was not crowded with people.

Sunday afternoon we again met for Bible class. The Subject was "The Kingdom of God." The way in which Bro. Foore leads a Bible class is something new and affords great satisfaction. Sunday evening the meetings were closed by preaching on the "Signs of the Times." Matt. xxiv. 1-12, xxix. 42."

It was good to be there. History and the Bible was brought forward to teach us where we are, and what we may expect. The teaching has awakened in us a desire to be on the Lord's side, and we are counting the cost. Will it pay? Besides we want to fully understand the whole Gospel.

Submitted in love to the brethren, and for the cause of Truth.

Miss Zora Z. Moyer.

Editor Restitution:

As requested I send you a short report of trip to Hopeville, Ia. to baptize Bro. Tillman's boys.

We had a good meeting. The first one was held in the "New Light Church." This was said to be a "union" house, and although Bro. Tillman had the consent of the trustees for the use of the house during our meetings, yet after the first sermon on "What did Jesus preach?" we were kindly told that "the members objected to a further use of the house." The "Christian Church" then invited us to preach in their house, which we occupied during our stay. We spoke here five times, making six sermons in all on the Gospel, The coming of Christ, The Kingdom, and The Restitution.

On Sunday afternoon, Ira W. Tillman, and Karie B. Tillman were baptized in Grand River. They are young men of promise and are firm in the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ.

The meetings aroused an interest and we look for much good from the seed sown. With many earnest invitations to come again the people manifested their interest in the Truth.

There was a large attendance throughout the meeting which began April 6, and closed April 10.

Bro. Tillman then took me to Thayer, the nearest R. R. Station, whence I returned home. I shall long remember the happy hours spent with Bro. and Sr. Tillman and family, in singing and talking of the stirring events connected with our Lord's return. Expenses $9.20. Yours in the hope.

A. J. Eychaner.

Contingent Fund.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to THE RESTITUTI- ceipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

Editor Restitution:

The words of the wise are as goads and as nails fastened by the masters of assemblies, which are given from one Shepherd.

And further by these my Son, be admonished; of making many books there is no end; and much study is a weariness to the flesh.

Dear brothers and sisters, as the rain keeps us from attending church or Sunday school to-day I thought I would sit down and talk to you a little through THE RESTITUTION, that is if Bro. Underwood sees fit to publish this poor little letter.

While reading the above quotation, and thinking upon the words of the wise man, although written so long ago, yet they seem to be a prophecy of these days. Every mail brings in a goodly supply of literature, good, bad and indifferent. We can truly say, of making many books there is no end. And if we should read one half of them, truly it would be a weariness to the flesh. But as I have often heard Bro. Prosser say, "We should be as wise as the fowls, pick out the wheat and leave the chaff."

There are so many issues abroad in our land. One that is not well versed in the Bible scarcely knows what to believe, so much is written on all kinds of subjects and so promiscuously scattered, and every writer seems to think his own little hobby the one to ride. Instead of getting behind the cross, and ever holding it up in front of self they seem to forget to say "In the cross of Christ I glory." Christians this ought not to be with us, but I feel that is too true with some of us. And it is for this reason that some are led to let the whole matter go, and as some have said to me, when I have undertaken to talk to them on the subject of eternal life through Christ, "We scarcely know what to believe, so many differ on the same subject. What is the use, if I live a good moral life I am tempted to believe I shall come out all right." I think they have some excuse for their conduct; they can see that the would be teachers do not come to a unity of faith. Yet they seem to have forgotten the words of our Savior, "He that is not with me is against me, and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." These persons would not want to own that they were against the Lord and Savior, because they do believe in Him not by an experimental, but by an intellectual knowledge. Yet if they are not with the Christ they are against Him, so He says and his words are truth. This kind of people are not striving for an incorruptible crown, but for a corruptible one that will vanish away. It may be very alluring, so much so that they will tax their uttermost strength to attain it. Conscience itself may be sacrificed in obtaining or trying to obtain that which is very uncertain and often unsatisfactory after it has been obtained. Let us dear brothers and sisters, strive for the incorruptible crown, and never feel that we are safe unless we are using all our energy to obtain this crown of righteousness that Paul said awaited him, and not him only but all those that loved the appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

We should be able to say with Paul, "and herein do I exercise myself to have always a conscience void of offense toward God and man." His crown is not like the corruptible crown that is perishing but it is lasting as heaven itself, and can be obtained by all if they will run the race, not with an uncertain step, but with a certainty of winning at last. "Blessed is that man that endureth temptation, for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life which the Lord hath promised to all those that love him." "Cast not away then your confidence of which hath great recompense of reward. For in a little while, and He will come and will not tarry. But let us be up and doing, while the day lasts, for the night cometh when no man can work. Now in conclusion let us hear what the wisest man said, "Fear God and his commandments keep asking for his aid." Then your whole duty you have done and your crown you have won.

ALMIRA BROOKS.

Two Ways.

Dear friend, just where you now stand on your way through this world, two ways branch out—one leads to life and immortality, the other leads to death and destruction. As you cannot travel on both ways, and time does not permit you to stand still to consider but moves you onward with great speed, you must decide quickly on which way you will travel the remaining days of your life.

"Thou, O Christ, art all I want;
All I need, in Thee I find.
Raise the fallen, cheer the faint,
Heal the sick, and lead the blind,
Thou of life the fountain art!
Freely let us take of Thee:
Spring thou up within my heart,
Rise to all eternity."

Remember you cannot serve two masters. You cannot be full of the fire of God's love and be cold or lukewarm. You cannot go on the royal road to life and immortality, and pursue the pleasures of this world. You cannot be filled with the power of the Holy Ghost and with the pride and lusts of this world and the flesh. You cannot run for the high calling in Christ Jesus and for honors and riches of this world. You cannot sit in the counsel of the "Most High" and walk in the ways of evil doers. You cannot eat and drink the bread and water of life and be a glutton of this world. You cannot overcome the world with its lust and follow your own interest. You cannot love God and hate your enemy. You cannot wear the white robes of righteousness and true holiness and the garments of sin.

"Take the raiment soiled away,
That I wear with shame to-day;
Beautiful with holiness
Let me wear the white robes here
E'en on earth, my Father dear!
Holding fast thy hand, and so
Through the world unspotted go."

Remember that the spirit of life cannot quicken your mortal body as long as you entertain the spirit that works death.

Your body cannot be a temple of the Holy Ghost as long as the members of sin occupy it. You cannot be a fruit-bearing branch on the true vine Jesus Christ and bring forth the fruits of the spirit as long as the fleshly mind reigns in you. You cannot enter the kingdom of God without self denials crucifixion of the old Adamic nature. You cannot trust your own convictions and good feeling as a guarantee that you are saved from sin and alive in Christ Jesus.

"My hope is built on nothing less
Than Jesus blood and righteousness;
I dare not trust the sweetest frame,
But wholly lean on Jesus name.
His oath, His covenant and His blood
Support me in the whelming flood
When all around my soul gives way
He then is all my hope and stay."

Dear reader, the way to life and death is open before you without any obstruction to hinder you. Naturally you are on the broad way to destruction and it is only by becoming obedient to the Gospel of Jesus Christ that you can enter the way that leads to life. If you are not among the saved company, then make haste, time is fleeting and will soon be no more, and you can make no excuse before the judgment seat of Jesus. Make your calling and election sure while it is called to-day.

"Open now the crystal fountain,
Whence the healing streams do flow;
Let the fiery, cloudy pillar,
Lead me all my journey through:
Strong Deliverer,
Be thou still my strength and shield,
As I near the time of trouble
Bid my faith in thee increase;
While the thousands round are falling,
Keep me, keep in perfect peace:
Refuge! Fortress
Thou hast set thy love on me."

J. Z. SCHUMAN.

The sea is salt by reason of the earth washings which are poured into it. It has different densities because of the influence of rainfalls, evaporation, etc., and would become stagnant but for the working of the great ocean arteries—the currents.

Conference Notice.

The annual conference of the churches of God of the Abrahamic faith in Iowa, will meet at Clarkesville, Butler Co. Iowa, June the 2nd, 1893, and continue over two Sundays. The large audience tent and a half dozen or more small or living tents will be ready to accommodate those who come. And as the preaching brethren are always ready to make any sacrifice to be present, and labor for the interest of the meeting and the good of all, we hope and earnestly entreat all who have an interest in the cause of the Master and are looking for his soon coming to make a sacrifice also if necessary to be at this meeting, for we are persuaded that while all mean to be steadfast, yet there is an ominous tendency to falling away among all Christian societies that will proceed his coming. Then let us, as many as can possibly do so, go to this meeting, determined to make it a means of filling our lamps with that oil that will throw light along the way of the bridegroom's approach, so that if we slumber and sleep before his arrival we will be ready when the final cry is sounded to go out to meet him, and go in with him to the wedding, and not have the door shut upon us while we go to seek for light. He may be nearer than we think.

LIBBIE PALMER, Sec.

The standard of proper giving is the same to-day as in the days of the apostolic church: "Every man according to his ability." Not every man according to his mood and fancy, but every man according to his ability. Not every man according to other people's giving, or other people's ability, but every man according to his ability. —H. C. Trumbull D. D.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

A Discourse.

Delivered at the house of a neighbor, at Scotland, Ct., with some additions.

I refer you to-day to Jude 3 "Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and to exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints."

It will be my purpose to enquire, what is the faith which Jude has in view in this exhortation? If a man that you have confidence in should make you a promise, you have faith in the promise because you have confidence in the man. So when God makes a promise, we we have faith in that promise, because we have confidence in God.

Now we want to enquire, had God made a promise to any of the saints of olden time that had not been fulfilled in Jude's day, so that it was still a matter of faith and hope?

The Apostle Paul, in Acts xiv. 22, exhorts the disciples to "continue in the faith." Also in Col. i. 23, Paul says, "If ye continue in the faith, grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the Gospel." Also in 2 Cor. xiii. 5, "Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith." Also in 2 Tim. iv. 7, he says "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." Now what faith is Paul talking about?

In examining the subject of the Gospel faith, we want to stick very closely to the Scriptures. Whatever God has promised, he is certain to fulfil, so as to make that promise good. He is not a man to forget his promises, nor to change his purpose. He saw the end from the beginning, and laid his plans accordingly, and dealt with mankind with especial reference to that end.

Let us go back to the creation, so that we may get a right starting point. Turn to Gen. i. 31, "And God saw everything that he had made, and behold it was very good." Not a note of discord could be found; but harmony prevailed throughout all his works. 26th verse. And God said, "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth."

Here was a universal dominion of earth given to Adam as its first king. But this dominion and government was predicated upon condition of obedience to God's law. Adam had no character for loyalty nor disloyalty to God until he could develop a character. So God placed him on trial: "Of every tree of the garden mayest thou freely eat of it. But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it." But Adam disobeyed, and was therefore a rebel against God, and for his rebellion, the dominion of earth passed out of his hands, and has been in the hands of the adversary near six thousand years. God has permitted the great rebellion to continue on, and on, down through the weary years of man's pilgrimage journey, in order to develop a class of men and women who shall have been tried through adverse surroundings and who shall develop a character for loyalty to God, into whose hands the government of earth may be safely committed.

In developing character for loyalty to God and of obedience to his will and requirements, it seems to have been, and still is, God's purpose to place his creatures in adverse surroundings, so that it requires a sacrifice on their part to do his will. Even Jesus, God's well beloved Son, had to be tempted and tried before his heavenly Father could trust the government of earth in his hands. The trials and cruel mockings and painful deaths of the martyrs bear witness to this thought. God's plan appears to be, "The cross before the crown."

When Adam proved himself unworthy to hold the reins of government, God drove him forth from Eden to gain his bread by the sweat of his face. "Cursed is the ground for thy sake, in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life." This has been realized by all of Adam's posterity by painful experience. But the curse that was pronounced upon the earth, and the enemies of man's best interests are all to be taken away. A complete restitution is to be effected. To this end God has been conducting the whole scheme of redemption. The death of Christ and the preaching of the gospel point to the restitution of earth as their ultimatum. But how shall this be done and who shall do it? These are important questions, and they are fully answered in God's Word.

As already intimated, Jesus the Christ, the Son of David and also the Son of God, and as the seed of the woman, has been tempted and tried and found faithful, as Paul says—"He was tempted in all points, like as we are, yet without sin." for "he loved righteousness and hated iniquity, therefore God even thy God hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows."

God evidently foreordained this earth to be a vast monarchy, to be governed by one who should represent the mind and will of its creator. And as Adam, by giving heed to the seductions of the serpent, failed to represent the mind and will of God, he was therefore removed, and the promise was left on record, that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head. This evidently means that the seed of the woman should destroy the serpent and all his progeny. This promise evidently points to Christ who was to be manifested to destroy the works of the devil. 1 John iii. 8. Christ, then, is to take the dominion of earth as the second Adam, and cleanse the earth from the least and last effects of the fall, and this only can be done by his having power to compel obedience to his laws. And this is brought to view in Rev. xix. 19, "And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army." "And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet," etc. The beast and false prophet here are evidently not individuals, but ecclesiastical powers: probably the Catholic and Mohammedan churches.

In Ex. xix., God made a promise unto the children of Israel: he said unto them, "If ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people." "And ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests," etc. It seems to have been God's design in his dealings with mankind; both under the law and in the gospel; to have a priesthood or days-man between himself and the people. So he chose the Hebrew nation and promised them that if they would obey his voice, he would make them a kingdom of priests, or a nation between himself and other nations. This they agreed to do, but failed to perform, and like Adam, they rebelled against God. The Savior, therefore, in delineating the parable of the vineyard, teaches the Jews that the vineyard should be taken from them and given to others; evidently showing that the Jewish nation should be rejected from being this kingdom of priests, and an offer of a counselorship with the Messiah in his kingdom should be given to the Gentiles, and "Jerusalem should be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles should be fulfilled." This offer, therefore, has been made to the Gentiles, as James says, in Acts xv. 14, and the time alloted for the offer to be accepted is called "Gentile times" and commenced when Peter preached the gospel at the house of Cornelius, and will continue until the second coming of Christ. And we may know, therefore, that the coming of Christ is near at hand, for Jerusalem is beginning to arise and is shaking herself from the dust of ages.

When Gentile times are accomplished, Christ will come again to earth, set up the kingdom of God, for he is appointed as the second Adam to take the dominion which the first Adam lost by transgression, and replenish the earth, and subdue it by putting down the great rebellion and take the reins of government into his own hands, and give a stable government to earth, and so restore peace and harmony among mankind.

Now let us turn to Micah. iv. 8, for a thought in regard to restitution. "And thou, O Tower of the flock, the stronghold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion, the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem." Here we see that the dominion that was given to Adam is to be restored, and is the kingdom that is brought to view in the Lord's prayer. "Thy kingdom come." This is the restitution that Peter speaks of in Acts iii. 21. This is the faith that Jude exhorts his brethren to contend earnestly for, and yet this faith or gospel platform contains several planks, or subdivisions of faith, which all go to make up the faith that Jude contemplates.

One of the articles or subdivisions of this faith is the inheritance of the saints. In Acts xx. 32, Paul says, "And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them that are sanctified." In Gal. iii. 18, he says, "For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more by promise; but God gave it to Abraham by promise."

Now let us go back and ascertain what the inheritance was that was promised to Abraham. See Gen. xiii. 14. Here we learn that the inheritance promised Abraham was land, "All the land that thou seest," real tera firma. This promise also was confirmed to Abraham by an oath-bound covenant. Now we enquire, Did Abraham receive his promised inheritance in his life time? Stephen in Acts vii. 2, says —"And he gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on; yet he promised to give it to him for a possession and to his seed after him, yet an inheritance in that land he never obtained. The promise, therefore, stands good, and will be realized by Abraham and his seed in the resurrection. But who are the seed of Abraham? Paul in Gal. iii. 29, says, "And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Heirs to what? Heirs to the same inheritance that was promised to Abraham.

Again in Gal. iii. 16, Paul says, "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many: but as of one, and to thy seed which is Christ." Christ, then, is the seed to whom the inheritance was promised and he has promised to share the inheritance with the meek of the earth, for he says, "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth." Again he says,—Rev. ii. 26, "He that overcometh and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations; and shall rule them with a rod of iron."

See also Rev. v. 9, 10. "And they sung a new song. . . . for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth." This is the promised reward to the righteous of all ages.

Now friends, what does this mean? We believe that the gospel promises are founded upon common sense principles. You can use common sense in your business, why not use common sense in understanding the gospel? Mankind is in rebellion against God, and the earth is under the curse. Will God permit this state of things to continue indefinitely? Will he permit his laws to be trampled upon by the creatures that he has made? Does he delight in war, murder and crime of all kinds? He has declared in his Word that he will send Jesus Christ in the times of restitution: and so, this earth must be restored and brought back to its allegiance to God and to his laws, for he says—"Behold I create new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. And to this end God has been conducting the whole scheme of salvation from Adam down to the present time. But to teach as orthodoxy does, that the righteous are to go to heaven to be rewarded; is to teach nonsense. Paul never taught anything of the kind, and he says—"I kept back nothing that was profitable."

Again, allow me to ask, what can be your object in going to heaven? Will your presence there add in the least degree to the glory of God? We want to study this subject on common sense principles. Are there any nations in heaven that are in rebellion, and need to be ruled with a rod of iron? Can't you put two ideas together, and ascertain the sum of them? The promise of reward must have full scope for its fulfilment, otherwise the promise would be worthless. In order that the saints may rule the nations; there must be nations to be ruled. We cannot admit that there are nations in heaven that need to be ruled with a rod of iron, but there are nations on earth that are in rebellion against God, and it is the plan of salvation that this rebellion must be defeated and overturned. The whole plan of salvation is predicted upon restitution. Earth must be restored back to the position that it occupied before it was marred by sin; and the Lord Jesus Christ is appointed to do this great work. By man came sin into the world, and death by sin, so, by man must come the redemption and restoration, and to this end the gospel call has been sent out to take out a people for this very purpose, a people who shall be constituted righteous in Christ, and who shall assist the great work of restitution. Christ shows clearly by the promises that he has made to the faithful, that he will want officers to publish and execute his will and laws in all the earth, and so to bring all mankind into entire obedience to law and order. He has promised the overcomers, that they shal rule the nations with a rod of iron: for Satan will not give up the supremacy of earth without a desperate struggle, but will marshall his forces and set the battle in array against the King of kings and Lord of lords, as is brought to view in Lev. xix.

Again, the second Psalm brings this opposition to Christ to view— "Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing? The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together against the Lord and against his anointed," etc. "Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion." Isa. lxvi 18, 19, after speaking of a time of trouble and many slain in that day, says "For I know their works and their thoughts: it shall come that I will gather all nations and tongues and they shall come and see my glory. And I will set a sign among them, and I will send those that escape of them unto the nations, etc., and they shall declare my glory among the Gentiles." This is evidently after Christ has set up and established his kingdom, for his glory will then be seen. This evidently is a great missionary enterprise in which those engaged in it will carry the gospel of peace to the ends of the earth and will not have to spend years in studying the languages, before they can teach the people, for they will be under the Spirit's power, and can speak to all nations in their own tongues the wonderful works of God.

DANIEL HOWARD.

Thoughts on the Second Psalm.

The Psalm opens with asking, "Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing?"

The word heathen in other places is translated Gentiles and nations. The word people here may mean the Jews. An answer to the question asked, is found in Acts iv. 27,—"For of a truth against thy holy Child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together, for to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done." They thought a vain thing. Their design was to put an end to the contention that had arisen about the royalty of Jesus, and to quiet his claim to the throne and kingdom of Israel, as the legal heir of David, by putting him to death. When the proprietor of the vineyard sent his son to receive the rental due to him, "the husbandmen when they saw the son, said among themselves. This is the heir; come, let us kill him, and let us seize on his inheritance. And they caught him, and cast him out of the vineyard, and slew him." Matt. xxi. 38, 39. That was their hour, and the power of darkness, (see Luke xxii. 52.) but it was his hour of suffering and death on our behalf. John xii. 27. The rage and plots of his enemies, however, were futile: they could not alter or frustrate the purposes of Jehovah. He ridicules their vain attempts to thwart his designs, God raises his Son from the dead, and exalts him to the right hand of power, until his enemies are made a footstool for his feet. Then he will place Jesus, whom he has anointed, as his King upon Zion, the hill of his holiness. The decree will then be known that he is the Son of the living God, to whom he has given the heathen or nations for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession.

This prophecy has had only a partial fulfillment. There will be another attempt on the part of the kings and rulers of the earth to frustrate the purposes of Jehovah. Not that they mean it to be so; but following out their own designs, if not foreseen, and prevented, would lead to that result. So in the first instance, when they conspired to kill Jesus, their wicked purposes only fulfilled God's plan for the ultimate blessing of the nations. The apostle Peter, speaking to the Jews about the killing of the Prince of Life, said, "And now, brethren, I know that through ignorance ye did it, as did also your rulers." Acts iii. 17: and Paul said that they were ignorant of God's hidden wisdom, which is revealed in the Gospel, "which none of the princes of this world knew: for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory." 1 Cor. ii. 8. The Spirit of prophecy which dictated this Psalm looked beyond the time of the first advent of the Messiah: it embraced the period of his second appearing in power and glory as King on Mount Zion. As that time approaches great and important changes may be expected in the political and religious affairs of the world. Jerusalem, the land of Palestine, and returning Jews to colonize their fatherland, will be the immediate disturbing elements which will cause the nations to rage, and the people to imagine a vain thing. Probably they will think it a wise policy to crush the rising power of the Jews, and once more to drive them out of the land. That something of this kind of spirit will animate them will be seen by consulting the following prophecies, which foretell the gathering of kings and armies against Jerusalem and her people; in this Psalm said to be, against Jehovah and his anointed.

The prophets who speak of this gathering of nations, represent it to be of the Lord; and undoubtedly in the course of his providence, he will accomplish all these things. For when these armies are come up against Jerusalem, they will say, "let her be defiled, and let our eye look upon Zion. But they know not the thoughts of the Lord, neither understand they his counsel: for he shall gather them as the sheaves into the floor." Micah iv. 11, 12. In Joel iii. 2, when the Lord will bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem, he says, "I will also gather all nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, and will plead with them there for my people and my heritage Israel, whom they have scattered among the nations, and parted my land." Read from verse 8-16, and there notice the call for the nations to come up to Jerusalem prepared for war, and there be judged in the valley of decision, when the Lord and his mighty ones come down for judgment. See 2 Thess. i. 7-10. It will be then that Jehovah "will be jealous for his land, and pity his people." Joel ii. 18. Zech. viii. 2. The Lord also declared through the prophet Zephaniah, "my determination is to gather the nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger." chap. iii. 8. During the pouring out of the sixth vial of wrath, John the revelator, sees another cause for the gathering of the nations. He says, "And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are spirits of demons, working miracles, going forth to the kings of the whole habitable, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty." The inspiring cause is evil, and for an evil purpose, but the Lord will overrule for the accomplishment of his own designs. He will make the wrath of man to praise him; and the remainder of wrath he will restrain; and this will be when God shall arise to judgment, to save all the meek of the earth. Psa. lxxvi. 9, 10. This gathering of the nations to Armageddon for battle, is at the time when Jesus announces, "Behold, I come as a thief." Rev. xvi. 13-16.

This confederacy of kings, rulers, and people, that the Psalmist foresaw, gathered against the Lord, and against his Christ, will be a failure, and come to nought Isaiah says, "Associate yourselves, O ye people, and ye shall be broken in pieces; and give ear, all ye of far countries; gird yourselves, and ye shall be broken in pieces. Take counsel together, and it shall come to nought: speak the word, and it shall not stand: for God is with us." Isa. viii. 9, 10. The fate of this coalition of kings is found in Rev. xvii. 12-14; xix, 11-21. The ten kings of the Roman habitable "will make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them; for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings". "And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army. And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him. * * * * These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone. And the remnant were slain," etc. This victory of Christ and his saints over these armies of confederated kings will be followed by the binding of the dragon for one thousand years. The possession of the nations and the uttermost parts of the earth having now become the inheritance of the Messiah, it will only be the part of wisdom of the kings and the judges of the earth to "serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling;" to submit, and make terms of peace with God's Son, "lest he be angry, and they perish in the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little." The binding of the dragon will be accomplished in the restraint of sin in all its manifold forms, and the introduction of everlasting righteousness, by the establishment of the throne and kingdom of the Messiah, over Israel and the nations. For a more detailed account of the way in which the dragon or sin-power, will be restrained, see what David says in Psa. xviii. of his victory over his enemies, and no doubt prophetically of the Christ, his Son, and Lord (in verse 39 he says,—"Thou hast girded me with strength unto the battle; thou hast subdued under me those that rose up against me." Verse 43-44. "Thou hast made me the head of the nations; a people whom I have not known shall serve me. As soon as they hear of me, they shall obey me; the strangers shall submit themselves unto me." Read also Psa. cxlix. "Blessed are all they that put their trust in him."

The Name of London.

The old name for the City of London was Lynden or Llnyden, meaning "the city by the lake." An old tradition gives us to understand that London was founded by Brute, a descendant of Æneas, and that it was first called New Troy or Troynovant. In the time of Lud it was surrounded by a wall, and was then known as Lud's Town, or Caer-Lud. This latter is probably the correct version of the origin of the name of London, if for no other reason, because it is such an easy matter to detect a similarity between the expressions London and Lud's Town. It is claimed by some writers that there was a city on the present site of London in the year 1107 B. C., and it is known that the Romans founded a city there and called it Londinium in the year 61 A. D.

The growth of the Argentine Republic in the last thirty-five years has been remarkable. According to recent statistics the population is now 4,000,000, as against 1,350,000 in 1861.

Patience strengthens the spirit, sweetens the temper, stifles anger, extinguishes envy, subdues pride; it bridles the tongue, restrains the hand, and tramples upon temptations.

The Temple of Diana at Ephesus was 425 feet long, 225 broad, and with statues and columns innumerable. Of this magnificent structure not a trace remains even of the foundations.

THE population of London, England is said to increase at the enormous rate of 200 per day, or 73000 per year; quite a city of itself. •

WE all differ in some respects. Circumstances beyond our control have made us different from one another, but our Father takes this into account: and these very differences often fit us for different work, and so all can be workers together with God. •

IT makes no difference, brother, or sister, whether you have one or two or five or ten talents, the account in proportion will have to be made by and by. Don't forget it. The reckoning time is sure to come. The award to every one will be according to his works. Only living faith produces works. •

A SINGLE plant of purslane has been known to produce 388,800 seeds, the thistle 95,300, and the plantain 42,200 seeds in a single season. This is a part of Moses' writings that has been literally fulfilled, whatever the scientists and higher critics may say. They yield bountiful harvests without any assistance from man; but the bread question keeps him busy—he still eats bread in the sweat of his face; the spontaneous crops bring him sorrow still; and he still returns to the ground he was taken from. Honest skeptics would wrestle with these facts,—dishonest ones evade them. •

IF the light of the glorious gospel has shone into one's heart, it has not been for himself alone. He is expected to lumine others. "Ye are the light of the world" includes every one, who has been enlightened. Reader, how does this affect you? Where do you stand? Are you doing your share of the Master's business? If not, who is doing it? If any one else is doing it, there is one thing that such an one will not be able to do for you: he will not be able to render an account for you. But what folly to talk of some one else doing your duty; the duty of every one will keep him busy. Personal responsibility is the lesson we are trying to teach. It is a very important one. •

THE labor troubles in the little kingdom of Belgium, are assuming vast proportions. France on one side and Germany on the other are watching eagerly to see how matters are likely to turn. It is thought that Germany will lend its powerful support to Belgium rather than let its government be overthrown, and thus enthuse the disaffected in all the countries in Europe. The king seems to [illegible] in favor with the people, because he is willing to largely extend the suffrage; but the parliament, which represents only 130,000 voters in a population of 6,000,000 refuses to grant it; and the result is thousands of clamorous voters in Mans, Liege, Brussels and Antwerp, and desperate street fights between the mobs and mounted police. •

Pentecost Repeated.

The subject announced for Sunday evening last, at a church one block from us, was "Pentecost repeated;" and in addition to this was the announcement that the "Pentecostal service would last ten days." Many years had elapsed since we had witnessed the methods employed to manufacture converts without any gospel, and we concluded to go and see the workings of the modern Gentile systems. Well, stirring singing was in progress as we entered. This was followed by a few remarks from the pastor and assistant, and then another song was announced, the words of which showed that the singers had had all their sins put away. Those whose sins were pardoned were to rise and sing. About all except ourselves and next neighbor arose and sang lustily; and we remarked that there was a poor chance for making converts there. After singing there was prayer, then reading and expounding or confounding, rather, of 1 John iv.; In the course of which we were astonished to hear that the coming of Christ in the flesh did not mean that he was born at Bethlehem, that he had come to reside in each brother and sister's heart. After this, testimonies were in order. Camp meeting incidents and revival meetings were spoken of as the times when and places where they found peace; all efforts being unavailing till they went forward to the altar or knelt on the straw. One old man wanted to know if all converts were expected to be perfectly holy? Why yes: but not all at once, not when first born, they could, however, very soon pass over into that land. Some were sure they had got it, because they felt it, and were not afraid of being killed by the cars, and were not afraid to die, any way, one even rejoiced when his mother died, and so was confident that he had it. The "Testimonies" being over, a call for penitents was made, and just one young man stood up. He was called up to kneel at the altar,—the preacher stroked him on the head and called all the believers who wanted their hearts cleansed to come and kneel with him. Then all the pray-ers were to gather up around the young man at once, for "the Lord could do this business in a very short time." By this time we were so full of disgust at the heathenish practices and pity for the poor deluded young man, that we walked out. Not one word of Gospel from beginning to end; nothing about faith in the covenants of promise, nothing about repentance toward God, not even a hint about the law of pardon, but "come and be baptized with the Holy Ghost;" and yet we would be surprised if that young man was not turned out as a full-fledged Christian before he went home.

Oh, we praise and magnify our Father that the things hidden from the wise and the prudent have been revealed unto babes, and that we are among them. We see no improvement in 25 years; and how could there be without even the first principles of God's saving power—the Gospel. •

Stephen's Dying Request.

As no one has answered a correspondent's request for an explanation of Stephen's dying prayer, we offer the following suggestions to aid the correspondent to investigate it for himself.

First, as the correctness of his faith will not be doubted,—look carefully at the 7th of Acts where he gives a grand outline of the faith once for all given to the saints. Secondly, his faith being sound, his hope would be a good one, because he could have no hope save the hope of what God had promised as the basis, or subject matter of faith. Third, note the impossibility of his hoping to go to heaven, as sought to be taught by his dying request, when his expectations were based on the promise to Abraham, and he knew that Abraham himself had never yet received what God promised, Heb. ii. 30, and besides that, the promised inheritance is here, Heb. ii. 8, and why should he want to go away? If his faith was right, his hope was right, and the realization will meet his expectation both as to its nature, time and place. And, as Abraham was still waiting for it in the death state, the promise included a resurrection to a future life; and that includes all who have the faith of Abraham. He was suffering intensely at the time, no doubt, and the end was sure to be death, sooner or later; the quicker it came the better for him; for he would sleep in Jesus, and rest from his labors, and his works would follow by and by. This, briefly, is the truth regarding the situation of Stephen the first martyr after the crucifixion. We have all that Moses, the apostles, and Jesus said to guide us to a correct understanding of Stephen's prayer; and no one is worth teaching who will not employ the Bible to explain itself because it is conclusive proof of a settled opinion he does not want shaken by any such course. Fifth, the Bible view of man's state in death annihilates the idea pressed into the prayer of Stephen. The Bible time of reward and punishments also destroy it, so that it only remains to explain the terms of the prayer in harmony with what the Bible elsewhere abundantly teaches. The interest centers in the Word spirit. What was it Stephen prayed the Lord to receive? It was not himself; but something he possessed. It was not an immortal soul, because that is a human concept, and finds no place in the Scriptures. The primary meaning of the word is breath or wind, and is so used by James (chap. ii. 26) where he says, "The body without the spirit is dead;" margin, breath. Consult, Gen. ii. 7; Gen. vii. 22; Eccl. iii. 19; Num. xvi. 22. In Rev. xiii. 15 the margin substitutes breath for life. Sixth, whatever the spirit of Stephen was, it is the man who offered the prayer we want,—and he fell asleep. There is only one Stephen, and this settles it, he sleeps in Jesus,—he did not go to Jesus in heaven. Seventh, "Devout men carried Stephen to his burial," and this shows that he was dead. We are aware of the imprudent assumption that that only referred to his body; but the fact that nothing else was worth mentioning, tells the whole story. This is all about Stephen, that like his Master was faithful unto death; but prayed that the spirit of the breath of lives that made him conscious of pain might be taken away, then his thoughts would perish. Ps. cxlvi. 4. •

The Woman's Seed. No. 7.

In writing upon this great theme we only write what we believe with our whole heart to be God's truth in the premises, and which, therefore it will be to his glory to make known. We are inspired with the hope that others may rejoice with us in a truth which helps us to understand the scheme of redemption better than any other single truth. We want our readers to understand that we write about the Woman's Seed, not about some other person. We do not write covertly under this title of some one else; and we think it would trouble any one to show that we had. We do not force our views upon any one. We tell what we believe in what we conceive to be a common sense way, presuming that we are writing to an honest, truth-loving, and truth-seeking people. And, as those who have come out of both the religious and secular world in obedience to the voice of truth, we expect all exceptions to be taken from a Bible standpoint. We presume, too, that we are writing for those who want to grow in God's favor, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ;—not to those who think they have reached the topmost round of the Divine truth, as well as the depths of its riches.

Our aim has been, and is, to show that the purpose of God, in Christ, is such that the renderings of a few passages of Scripture by those who were ignorant of that purpose, and who, therefore, were not therefore called according to that purpose, and did not have the Key of truth on one essential point, could not prove the pre-existence of the Christ who was made of a woman, and we know of no other. We have no learning to boast of, and therefore depend upon Scripture, the only source of instruction upon this subject. Our attention was first attracted to this theme by a protracted discussion in the Prophetic Expositor in 1854, between Joseph Marsh, of Rochester New York, and Henry Grew, of Philadelphia, Pa. In many respects, we think the truth as it is in Jesus was more clearly demonstrated by Marsh in that discussion than by anything written since, in England or America. Ten years later we became acquainted with the writings of Dr. Thomas, who had written and was still writing about the same as Marsh on the subject of the Pre-existence of the Christ. After these explanatory remarks we turn again to our text-book:—

Those who wish to know the truth, will be glad to be reminded that in the economy of God it was necessary for sin to be condemned in the flesh,—human flesh. This in all the four thousand years which had passed had never been done, but must be done, or man could not be redeemed. God, who made man, and knew his frame, and remembered he was dust,—knew that like begets like, saw the end from the beginning, and provided against it by the wonderful promise that the Woman's Seed, without the concurrence of man, should crush the Serpent's head. We see from Heb. ii, 14, 15 that he who had the power of death could only be destroyed through death; and only through death could he "deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage." If the full import of this Scripture were understood, we do not think there would be so much said about the pre-existence of the Christ of God. If there be only one Christ and he existed before he was born of the Virgin, then his pre-existence was a divine or angelic existence, and could not fulfill the mission assigned to Jesus Christ, of condemning sin in the flesh, and through death destroy him who had the power of death. A pre-existent Christ could not die. Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; 1 Cor. xv. 3, therefore his nature was not divine; and if he died according to the Scriptures, it is absolute proof that the Scripture did not predict a deathless Christ. Besides, if he did not die, according to the Scriptures, he was not raised again according to the Scriptures, 1 Cor. xv. 4. And if not raised again for our justification, we are not justified. So that a pre-existent Christ—cannot be harmonized with the scheme of Redemption. How refreshing to turn from the clumsy theories of men to the revealed will of God and read that the Woman's Seed, should crush the head of the Serpent, that he was to condemn sin in the flesh, by not sinning, and destroy him who had the power of death BY DEATH.

But how did he deliver from the fear of death those through life subject to its bondage? The answer to this question is found in 1 Peter i. 3. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope, (or a hope of life, Diaglott.) BY the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." But why did the resurrection of Jesus Christ beget hope of life in Peter and his brethren for themselves? The answer is found in John xiv. 19. Jesus had just told his loved circle, (v. 6) that he was the way, the truth, and the life, and this is emphasized and illustrated in the 19th verse by these gracious words, "Because I live, ye shall live also." He spake here of future life; he had told them in the tenth chapter that he was going to lay down the life he then had, for his sheep they were his sheep. Having done that he would be dead. But in his death for them there was no future life for them. He would live again,—live by God, Rom. vi. 10, and that would be a life over which death would have no dominion. Rom. vi. 9. 9. He said he was the life; and those who believed in him should have everlasting life. So that we see, when he lived again he was himself possessed of the life he had promised them;—see that the life they will have because he lives, will be his life, divine, everlasting life, for we read in Col. iii. 3 that "your life is hid with Christ in God," out of whom are all things. We solemnly believe that only the thinkings of the flesh can cause men to believe in the Pre-existence of the Christ made of a woman, and who died for our sins. But we by no means impugn their motives or question their honesty. Indeed we sympathize with them, knowing well, how difficult it is to rid ourselves of pre-conceived ideas. And we trust our readers will observantly review this whole subject, and submit what we say to the touch-stone of Divine Truth.

The next Scripture to which attention is called is Rom. v. 19. "For as by one man's *dis*obedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous." The 15th verse shows that one obedient one to be one man, not one God, or one angel, it was the Christ Jesus. If Christ had pre-existed as a person would he have been liable to *dis*obedience? If not, would not the obedience by which many shall be made righteous be a travesty of obedience? If the law of God was only honored by one who *could not dis*honor it, was it honored? Would it be true to say of such an one that he was tried in all points like as we are, yet without sin? Would it be true to say of such that he was obedient unto death? Does not the Word itself forbid its use in that sense? But the Spirit employed other terms to teach the same truth, in the 17th verse. "For if by one man's offense death reigned by one; much more they which receive abundance of grace and of the gift of righteousness, shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ; therefore as by the offense of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation, even so, by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." Was the righteousness of Christ through which we may reign in life, real righteousness? Not if he existed as a spirit before born into the world. God is a spirit, and he maketh his angels, spirits; and we know spirits cannot die; we know that he does not impart a perfect undying nature of existence to those of imperfect character; and we know that those made perfect are perfect; they could not sin, so we see at once both the truthfulness and the reasonableness of the Scripture which says Christ was made lower than the angels, for the suffering of death.

Now, when we consider the obedience of Christ through all his trials till he resisted unto blood—and that he learned obedience by the things which he suffered, and that he pleased not himself (Rom. xv. 3) nor insisted upon his own will, Mark xiv. 36, and that his suffering and obedience are held up as examples for us, and that his obedience caused him to grow in God's favor till by an audible voice God announced that he was well pleased with him, are we not warranted in concluding that his righteousness was EARNED by obedience? Was not this the very thing no one else could do? Was not this what he came to do? How else could he become to us wisdom, and righteousness, sanctification and redemption; what else could make him a fit object of faith for us? Oh, beloved, it is because he was perfectly obedient, and we cannot be perfectly obedient, that our faith in him and all his offices and work, are reckoned to us for righteousness. Thanks be to God for the gift of his Son; as he was of our race, having suffered the penalty of death which came by sin, although sinless himself. Peter tells us it was not possible for death to hold him (Acts ii. 24.) May we know why it was not possible? He had been obedient unto death and did not die for his own sin. He was approved of God while living; and a thousand years before, God had not only called him holy, but said he would not suffer him to see corruption. God would not say this of an incorruptible holy one. Of course God being just, He would not suffer death to hold one against whom there was no just claim. He appeared to put away sin by the SACRIFICE OF HIMSELF. It was not a pre-existent person who sacrificed himself; it was the Woman's Seed. •

WE have received a copy of the new book just published by S. C. Griggs & Co. for the author, Mrs. Elizabeth A. Reed. The title is "Persian Literature; Ancient and Modern." This is the companion book to the one issued a few years ago by Mrs. Reed, called "Hindu Literature, or the Ancient books of India." We cannot now attempt a review of this work, which has caused the author a vast deal of labor and study. Her ability as a writer is well known, and a guarantee that the book is worthy of careful study. It contains 420 pages, handsomely bound and printed. The following from the Item, Philadelphia, concerning this work comes to our notice.

"It needs but a single perusal to convince the least discriminating that whatever Persia may be at present, she was in the past, as Mrs. Reed very aptly terms her, the Italy of the Asiatic Continent, the land of music and song. The student of literature will find in this volume much to delight and instruct him. The author has chosen to conduct her readers along a path but little known and less appreciated. She has, however, rendered the way so pleasant and so instructive, so illustrative of the genius, romance, and history of a once powerful and always interesting nation, that we are compelled to close her book with a well defined regret that there should not be more of it."

The price is $2.50, and may be ordered of the author at 41 Seeley Ave., Chicago, Ill.,—or we will fill all orders sent to us at this office.

DIED

Near Lapaz, Marshall Co. Ind. April 21, 1893, Austin C. McChesney, aged 17 years, four months and 15 days.

Austin C. McChesney was born in Marshall Co. Dec. 6, 1875, and was the youngest son of Brother and Sister Robert McChesney. The mother, three brothers, and two sisters precede him to the silence of the tomb, while his father, three brothers and three sisters are left to mourn. He was quite delicate in health, and a great sufferer for some years. The funeral service was held in the United Brethren Church, four miles north of this place, by Elder N. H Geiselman, on Sunday afternoon, April 23, and the interment was in the cemetery opposite the church. The large company present attest to the esteem the friends had for the young man and his sorrowing relatives.

Feb. 20, 1893, at his home in Millbrook, Mich. of dropsy, Brother Richard S. Decker, aged 67 years.

Bro. Decker was one of the first settlers in this township about 33 years ago. Soon after he believed and obeyed the gospel, and was one of the leading members of the body here. He lived to see each of his six children become obedient to the faith and settled in life, and as they stood near his dying bed he gave them the assurance that "all was well" with him.

Our Sister goes her household ways,
And meekly bows in prayer,
And humbly asks our Father's aid,
Her heavy loss to bear.

Words of comfort and hope by Elder John Bower. Text St. John viii. 51. Theme eternal life.

A. C. WEST.

At the residence of J. B. Jones, in Oakesdale, Washington, March 7th, 1893, Mary Alice Kenworthy, daughter of O. D. and Anna Kenworthy, aged 2 years 11 months and 1 day.

Verily the enemy is stalking abroad in the land, and is no respecter of persons, taking our little ones that is most dear to us. Words of comfort was spoken by Rev. Spaulding of the M. E. Church, the writer dictating the line of thought, pointing to the resurrection of the dead as the hope of the Christian. So sorrow not dear friends as for those we have no hope. For we shall sleep but not forever. How very consoling it is to know that little Alice is sleeping in Jesus and that such will God bring with him. Then be faithful, be hopeful, be joyful till then and a crown of bright glory we'll wear.

G. W. DICKINSON.

At Elberon, Iowa, April 11, 1893, of cancer, Mrs. Catharine Van-Horne, in the 59th year of her age.

She was born Sep. 20, 1834, in Guernsey County, Ohio. Her maiden name was Catharine Edgar. She married A. J. VanHorne in Ill., in 1850. They came to Traer Iowa in 1876. In 1883 moved to Marshalltown, Iowa. Within two years Mr. Van Horne and a son and two daughters and a granddaughter died. A daughter living at Elberon shortly afterwards died, and now the mother too sleeps beside them. There is only one son and a grandson remaining of the family to mourn their dead. Truly we are among the dead now but we wait the time when there shall be no more death. A funeral discourse was delivered at Irving, Ia. April 16 by the writer from Psa. lxxxix. 48, in which the following points were presented to a large congregation of sympathizing friends.

1. The certainty of death.
2. What is it that dies?
3. What is death?
4. Is death final?
5. Our duties are to the living.

Facts Tersely Told.

Trains on the Nickel Plate Road now arrive at and depart from the new passenger depot, corner Clark and Twelfth Streets, Chicago. The Chicago Ticket Office is at No. 109 Clark Street, in the heart of the business portion of the city. On and after April 25th, agents of the Nickel Plate Road will sell excursion tickets to the World's Fair at very low rates, good returning to November 5th, inclusive. The shortest, best, and cheapest route to the Fair is the Nickel Plate.

Eye Service.

Upon going into an office, I saw two boys at work addressing envelopes—or rather, one was at work, while the other, with his pen in his hand, was looking out of the window.

Their employer was seated near by, and when he caught my eye he smiled. "Which of those two boys is the better workman and of most value, do you think?" he asked in low voice.

"The one at work, I suppose," I rejoined.

"No sir: that lad who is looking from the window now does so because he thinks there is no harm in it—does it, you see, under my eyes. On the other hand, while my eye is on them, the other boy is the most industrious, but I find in my absence he does nothing. So you see he adds deceit to his fault. I would not trust him out of my sight."

"It seems to me that neither of them is worth very much."

"To be sure," came the immediate answer, "a boy who attended to his duties at all times would be best; but a boy who renders eye-service merely, who cannot be trusted to work without watching, is not to be tolerated."

The man who said this had seen much of the world; he knew whereof he spoke, and perhaps some of our young readers will profit by his words.

A Good Secret Society.

There are all sorts of opinions concerning secret societies. That there is a difference in them cannot be doubted. Some of them are much more secret than others. Of the whole long list there is only one that we dare recommend. There is one. It is the oldest of all, and so different from all the rest. Its signs and grips cannot be counterfeited. Its password is always the same. Christian, thinking of joining some secret society, let me invite you to examine this one. Read the following paragraph and you will find which it is:

"The prophet Micah, writing of men who are energetic in doing evil, says they do it 'with both hands earnestly.' Would not this be an admirable motto for such as are striving to oppose the evil? Should there not be as much zeal shown in doing good? Alas! many who claim to be on the side of good, work not at all; and many more are working with but one hand. The other hand they keep lazily in their pocket, or apply it to things which pertain not at all to the kingdom of heaven. Some there are who serve with both hands, who pray as well as pay, who are Christians in the counting-room or the mill as well as in the class-room or meeting; and these, of course, are an immense improvement on the preceding. But how few there are who do it 'earnestly,' taking off their coats and rolling up their sleeves in God's cause as if they really meant business, as if the Master were indeed at the door, and as if the success of his work depended on their faithfulness. These are they after God's own heart, who belong to the 'Secret Society of the Holy Ghost,' for 'the secret of the Lord' is theirs."

In 1645 the first public schools were established by Massachusetts.

Through sleeping cars between Chicago and Boston, New York, Philadelphia. The best and shortest route to the World's Fair. Agents will sell excursion tickets to Chicago beginning April 25th and good to return until November 5th, inclusive.

How to Secure the Life to Come.

The substance of a discourse delivered before the Church at Chicago, Ill., by the writer.

"Without faith it is impossible to please him." Heb. vi. 11.

Without faith there is not the least possibility of rendering pleasing service to our Divine Master, although we may have observed the entire moral code. We often hear of infidels like Ingersol, being called moral men, and their disciples hold them up to professed Christians as example of goodness. But as far as obtaining the life to come is concerned, it is of no avail whatever, being separated from faith. The Lord's unutterable decree is: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." Mark xvi. 16.

It is aptly put by an eminent writer: "Faith is a subtle chain which binds us to the Infinite. Faith spans the gulf of death with the bridge of eternal life. ("The Word of faith which we preach.") Faith is the key which opens the door and admits us into the presence-chamber of the King of glory. Faith is the pencil which pictures good things to come."

"Being justified by faith we have peace with God." Rom. v. 1. 2. Hence without faith there can be neither justification or peace.

What then is justifying faith? See Gal. iii. 8: "The Scripture foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying: in thee shall all nations be blessed."

Hence we observe that justifying faith is found in the ancient gospel preached to Abraham. This being the case, the all-important question is: How does faith come?

See Rom. x. 17: "So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God." If you would learn how much of the Word is required to produce justifying faith, please read verse 8: "The Word is nigh thee even in thy mouth and in thy heart, that is the Word of faith which we preach."

Hence faith comes by hearing "the word of faith" preached by the apostles. Now it is important to enquire. What is the word of faith preached by the Apostles? Peter being one of them, we will let him answer. 1 Peter i. 25: "But the Word of the Lord endureth forever, and this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you." Then to preach "the Word of Faith" which justifies and gives peace, and to preach the gospel, is the same thing. Now I wish to introduce an important witness who received his instruction from the Lord himself, after his ascension to heaven, and that is the Apostle Paul, he says. "I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." Gal. i. 11, 12. Listen to his testimony and you will find that he accords with the other Apostles in teaching that justifying faith is, "the word of the gospel." Acts xv. 7: "Men and brethren ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the Word of the Gospel and believe." Again, see Phil. i. 27: "That ye stand fast in one spirit, with one mind, striving together for the faith of the gospel." Col. i. 23: "Continue in the faith grounded and settled and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel." In Heb. iv. 1, 2, he tells us that to preach the Word and to preach the gospel is just the same thing. "Let us therefore fear, lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any one of you should seem to come short of it. For unto us was the gospel preached as well as unto them: but the Word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it." This text teaches that the gospel preached to the Israelites in the wilderness, and the gospel preached to us, is the same gospel, but "the Word" preached to the Israelites, did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it." Hence the faith which justifies and gives peace, is faith in that gospel which was preached to the Israelites and to Abraham. It is called The Hope of Israel. Paul, a prisoner, bound in chains for the above hope, calls for the Jews, and says to them, in Acts xxviii. 20: "For this cause I have called for you, to see you, and to speak with you: because for the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain."

In verse 22, the Jews replied. "We desire to hear of thee what thou thinkest." In verse 23, we read "And when they had appointed him a day, there came many to him into his lodging: to whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening." You will observe that it was an all day discourse, and his subject was the kingdom of God, and the things concerning Jesus. As a result of his discourse, "Some believed the things which were spoken and some believed not." verse 24. Paul then applied to them the words of the prophet Isaiah: "their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed: lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and should be converted and I should heal them." Verse 27. You will observe that in Paul's proclamation of the message concerning the kingdom of God and Jesus, when understood, is God's converting and healing power. In verse 28, he calls this message "the salvation of God," and on account of the Jews refusing to believe it he says: "Be it known therefore unto you, that the salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles that they will hear it." ver. 28. He then hired a house and preached "the salvation of God," to all that would hear him. Verses 30, 31, tells what he preached in that house he had rented in which he might have the privilege of preaching the gospel to them that are at Rome also. See Rom. i. 15, 16. "And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him, preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ." In Rom. i. 16, he says this gospel which he preached at Rome, "is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." This is justifying faith, and "without (this) faith it is impossible to please him." Heb. vi. 11.

Before Paul reached Rome, he was placed in bonds, and tried before King Agrippa. And in his noble defence he declared to the king: "And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers: unto which promise our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night hope to come; for which hope's sake King Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews." This "hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers," is the gospel which was preached to Abraham. Gal. iii. 8. The Jews expected to receive the blessings contained in the promises on account of their being children of Abraham according to the flesh. "They answered and said unto him (Jesus) Abraham is our father. Jesus saith unto them, If ye were Abraham's children, ye would do the works of Abraham." John viii. 39. Who then are the true children of Abraham? See Gal. iii. 7, 9. "Know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham. * * * So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham. See also Rom. ix. 7, 8: "Neither because they are the seed of Abraham are they all children: but, in Isaac shall thy seed be called. That is, they which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God: but the children of the promise are counted for the seed." But to return to Paul's defence before Agrippa, we have already learned that it was on account of the hope held out in the promises made of God unto the fathers that he was placed in bonds. His masterly and eloquent reasoning from the prophets concerning the promises stirred the king upon his throne and caused him to exclaim: "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." Acts xxvi. 28. He had perceived from Paul's teaching that the way to become a Christian was in a belief and obedience of those promises which constituted the gospel preached to Abraham. If this word would make Agrippa a Christian, the very same truths are required to make Christians now. There has been no change. All who are strangers to those sublime truths are positively without hope. See Eph. ii. 11, 12: "Wherefore remember, that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, * * * that at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world." But having entered into covenant relationship with God, through the covenants of promise "now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God." ver. 19. Do you wish to know how to become a fellow-citizen, and an heir according to the promise?

Then read Gal. iii. 16, 26, 27, 29: "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to his seeds, as of many: but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ. For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ. And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." All true believers are children of Abraham, and none but the children of Abraham can be heirs to the estate of Abraham. See Gal. iii. 7-9: "Know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham. So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham." in a joint-heirship to the Abrahamic estate. Ver. 29.

We are living at the close of this age, it is therefore of vital importance that we be faithful in the proclamation of the true gospel which was preached before to our father Abraham.

W. H. Wilson

The State of Christendom.

There is a general attempt to stand on common religious ground and say or do nothing that would offend Jew, Gentile, or any denomination of the church. It is the fashion to be "on the fence," and very neutral as to doctrine; and such union revival efforts as those of Mills and Chapman necessitate this. No controverted point can be touched: and what is there left to preach? Well, there are anecdotes, death-bed scenes, and dead relatives in the skies. There is fine singing, and a crowd; and an emotional effect. And other preachers seeking "success" follow the fashion. There is much machinery, but little gospel—of any kind: now it is not, "Believe the gospel;—they are not quite certain themselves about the gospel; but just raise your hand and they will pray for you. Prayer is excellent in its own place; but salvation does not come through the prayers of priest or preacher. Has Luther preached "Justification by Faith" in vain? Or is Peter's Pentecostal preaching improved upon?

Let me introduce the following quotation from Mrs. Geo. C. Needham's pamphlet on "The Antichrist," pp. 24, 25, to show whither all this is tending: if so be some may realize the true character of this wonderfully kind policy of "no controversy," which is advocated even by some professing to be looking for the Lord's coming.

"Look what this principle of neutrality is doing among professed Protestants. Old paths are not hedged up—that would be too positive innovation—but new ways are being opened; eternal salvation may be secured through Universalism, Unitarianism, Calvinism, or any other ism that one's fancy dictates. The Bible is not specifically denied: that would be too extreme a measure; but other ancient books are brought to the forefront and elevated to equality with the volume of Inspiration. Liberal thought suggests the reasonableness of progressive revelation. So is the whole structure of divine religion based on the Atonement being secretly honeycombed; and the professing church, all unaware, is just ready to crush through into open infidelity, and lay her allegiance at the feet of such a Leader as the false Messiah shall prove himself to be."

This is only too true. Not minor doctrines only, but the nature of God, and Christ, and the Holy Spirit, and inspiration, and salvation, and the way of it, are actually held as open questions, by those sitting as chief teachers of the church. This is of the devil, who can take the guise of an angel of light, or even a reverend divine overflowing with love and prudence. Pray God to give us hold of the definite faith, and that we may be obedient to it: for "faith" is obedience as well as confidence, Rom. i. 5: xvi. 26. The position of the Christian is not, "no controversy," but "no compromise" of God's truth with Satan's lie: for there are only these two things in the realm of statement. To man it may be only error, mistake: but it has a father, Satan, who palms it upon them. "Buy the truth, and sell it not"—especially now when the world is ripe for antichrist.

"Ex Ians."

Dear Restitution:

I see at the request of brethren, that there is a "Contingent Fund" being created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons who being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

Now there is a radius around each one of us within which we can certainly work without the necessity of such a fund, and in which there need be but little expenditure of money or time, and in which we can make some sacrifice and imitate that noble example of Paul the Apostle of the Gentiles, to make the Gospel of Christ without charge. I suggest to all who esteem it their privilege to set forth the one faith in Jesus The Anointed One, and the Gospel of His Kingdom, to let the facts be known through The Restitution and other papers friendly to our cause in a notice something like this:

I will speak to congregations or isolated brethren as often as other duties will permit in twenty-five miles, and will go at the request of candidates or their friends to administer baptism in fifty miles from my address, McCune, Crawford Co. Kan.

We believe some can be reached in this way that would not be otherwise. I am here alone, so far as I know, presenting the Truth as best I can, and I am one that is willing to make this sacrifice. Are there any other brethren that are willing to make this sacrifice? If so, and The Restitution will give us space, let us make known what we will try to do in the good work.

Yours for the spread of the Truth.

Frank Fowler.

Editor Restitution:

In reading Bro. Wagoner's article on the Fourth Empire, he says, that the four beasts were kings and as the three first were individual kings, then asks how kings, popes, etc., be an individual king? Nebuchadnezzar was an individual king but Babylon was an Empire with a number of rulers a long time before Nebuchadnezzar appeared as the first of the four kings. Now the second King Cyrus, Media, and Persia had been nations with numerous rulers before he arose, and the same with the third King Alexander and the Grecian nation. Now let us take the fourth King he will be an individual King as Prince of Rome. Now like the first three Kings his kingdom has been in existence a long time and has had numerous rulers, and in God's appointed time the fourth individual king will be on the earth to do the work that God has appointed him to do. In Dan. ix. 26, 27 after speaking of the death of Christ it speaks of the destruction of the city and sanctuary, which was fulfilled by Titus son of Vespasian, Emperor of Rome, and Titus himself became Emperor. He led the Roman armies against Jerusalem and destroyed it and the sanctuary, and Daniel says, "that a prince of the people that destroyed the city and sanctuary shall come and make seven years covenant with the Jews." Therefore he will be a Roman prince. Now let us wait patiently God's time and the fourth individual king a prince of the Roman people will make the seven years covenant, and as God says that the Jews shall return from the north country, Jer. iii., we see that the time is short before the covenant will be made, as the Jews are going home to Palestine in great numbers from the north from Russia. In Dan. viii.—Daniel saw a ram which had two horns but one was higher than the other and the higher one came up last.

Now as it was the higher one that Daniel's attention was called to as the second king, so John's attention was called to the seventh head and not the sixth. The sixth head fell when Francis II. abdicated the title of Emperor of Rome. In 1806 Napoleon's son was called by his father, "King of Rome," but God did not allow him to be crowned or reign, as that would have been a revival of the first head. When Napoleon was crowned King of Italy, it made him the seventh head, and the title is still continued as no eighth has appeared yet. Napoleon continued only a short space and was then wounded to death with the sword at Waterloo. Now I am waiting till that wound is healed, and he himself ascends from the abyss the same as Jesus did. Rom. x. 7. Then all the world will wonder (and well they may) except those whose names are written in the Book of Life, and then he will fulfill the prophecy of the fourth king by having all the power of Satan given him to do the mighty works that he has to do. In speaking of the temple that he will sit in as God, to be worshipped as God, Solomon built the first, Ezra and Nehemiah built the second, which Herod pulled down and built the third temple, and the Seed of David, Jesus the Christ will build the temple mentioned in Ezek. xl. when he comes. But as the Jews will offer sacrifices the first half of the seven years, I think they will cleanse, purify and alter the Mosque of Omar or pull it down and build one, as Jesus will not come till the end of the seven years to build Ezekiel's, making five temples.

To the Brethren in Kansas:

It does my heart good to see the ready responses for the Kansas Evangelist fund, but will not some of the brethren move forward and get matters in shape so as to receive and make use of the means already subscribed and receive others that are waiting; for things to take on a business shape? I am so isolated, and destitute of means that the most that I can do is to urge the brethren to take hold as one man. Then the work would surely go forward.

I subscribed $5.00 and it is now in the bank waiting orders. I shall try to further assist as I am able. Brethren have we not slept long enough? Yours in hope,

R. J. Richards.

Clarksville is so far to one side of the state, and from those who have attended these meetings, that it will be more expensive and require more effort to attend, but brothers and sisters, do not let this hinder you, for these meetings are designed to bring together the scattered members, that they may come to know each other, and together work for the advancement of the Master's cause, and we hope and trust that the brethren and sisters of the south and west part of the state will be sure to be at this meeting and not leave those who have never attended to hear the disappointment of not meeting you. Surely the time is short, but let us work while it is day, and be found at our post of duty. Earthly things will soon pass away.

The Baptism of Love.

Among all the baptisms that people desire, there are none more needed than this. We may receive the baptism of water and yet remain unkind, unlike Jesus. We may possess a wonderful zeal and seem to have a power that exceeds those around us, and cause others to say, "What a baptism that person has," and they may covet it in some instances, and yet their words fall with unpleasantness upon the ears of nearly all, for a want of love. Too many seek to make up in positiveness what they lack in love. I knew one man, who took part in my meetings quite frequently, who would roar like a lion in prayer or testimony, whose words were unwelcome to all. Sometimes he would almost cry to think he could say nothing to benefit any one, but evidently his zeal was not according to knowledge, he was void of love.

There are others who are very logical, instructive, plain in their statements, but their utterances are void of life. They do not seem to feel what they say. They need the baptism of love. But some will try to excuse themselves by saying, "My temperament is different from yours." If this is all that makes the difference, then it is all of nature. The grace of God or the love of God in humanity is designed to change humanity, so that rough, burly man by nature, will become tender hearted and loving. It is God's power in humanity that is needed to-day. And if God can change such uncouth ones, can he not fill those who would be his with his love, so that they may show to others that the Spirit abides with them?—L. F. Baker.

Almost any map of the United States shows the location of Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Louisville, and other large cities. From each of the three cities named draw a straight line to Chicago. The line drawn from Pittsburgh will touch at Salem, Alliance, Canton, Massillon, Wooster, Mansfield, Crestline, Bucyrus, Lima and Van Wert, Ohio; Ft. Wayne, Columbia City, Warsaw, Plymouth and Valparaiso, Ind. That from Cincinnati will traverse a thickly settled portion of the southwestern part of Ohio and run the entire length of Indiana from southeast to northwest, touching at Hamilton and Eaton, Ohio; Richmond, Hagerstown, New Castle, Anderson, Elwood, Kokomo, Logansport, Winamac, Crown Point, Ind. The line from Louisville will pass through the entire length of the Hoosier State and in its course would touch Columbus, Franklin, Indianapolis and Logansport. A line drawn from Pittsburgh through Columbus, Ohio, to Chicago would incline slightly to the southward and would pass through Steubenville, Coshocton, Newark, Urbana and Piqua, Ohio; Union City, Hartford, Marion, and Logansport, Ind., and run direct from those points to the World's Fair site. A line from Madison, Ind., would also pass through Indianapolis and Logansport in its direct course to Chicago.

Such lines on the map would indicate the routes to the World's Fair described by the Pennsylvania Lines, which traverse the populous portions of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana, leading direct from Pittsburgh, the natural gateway from the East, and in a straight course from Cincinnati and Louisville, the natural gateways of the South, to the World's Fair City.

Beginning with April 25th, World's Fair Excursion tickets to Chicago will be sold from all ticket stations on the Pennsylvania Lines. The going coupon will be valid from the day of purchase until October 30th, and the return coupon will be good for return passage up to and including November 5th. The sale of these tickets will continue daily until October 30th, and will be governed by consistent reductions in fare. Both the going and the return coupons will be valid for continuous passage only. No stop-over allowed. Any ticket agent of the Pennsylvania Lines will cheerfully furnish detailed information regarding rates, time of trains, etc.

The recent extensive improvements on the Pennsylvania Lines, for the event in question, make them the desirable thoroughfares to Chicago from the territory traversed by them. The through time from every station is exceptionally fast and the first-class train service affords every desired convenience for an enjoyable trip.

New Depot in Chicago.

On and after April 20th, passenger trains on the Nickel Plate Road will run into the company's new depot at Chicago, corner Twelfth and Clark Streets. Every convenience for the road's patrons will be found there.

[illegible] Sweetest Lives.

The sweetest lives are those to duty wed
Whose deeds, both great and small,
Are close-knit strands of an unbroken [illegible]d,
Where love ennobles all,
The world may sound no trumpets, ring no bells,
The book of life the shining record tells.

Thy love shall chant its own beatitudes
After its own life working. A child's [illegible]
Set on thy sighing lips shall make thee glad;
A poor man served by thee shall make thee rich;
A rich man helped by thee shall make thee strong.
Thou shalt be served thyself by every sense
Of service which thou renderest.

Future Glory.

"Behold a king shall reign in righteousness and princes shall reign in judgement." Isa. xxxii. 1.

This divine scheme regulating the affairs of this world is the long looked for Golden Age of universal peace and prosperity, and which will finally result in the abolition of death itself. And O, that princes and statesmen could see, that there never will be lasting peace until that takes place. God who is the source of all true wisdom foresaw the end from the beginning. It was his divine purpose from the beginning of the ages to establish a visible theocracy on earth in order to root out sin and its results, and for this reason the "Seed of the woman" was made manifest that he might destroy the works of the devil. This seed promised is none other than our Savior, as will be seen by turning to Luke i. 30, 31.

The angel said unto Mary, "Fear not, for thou hast found favor with God, and behold thou shalt bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of His father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

Now this Son or Seed came at the appointed time, was tempted and tried in all points as we are, yet he sinned not, he came off conqueror by keeping his Father's word or law inviolate, and for this reason, God has promised to make his Son King of the universe. The first promise that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head, was made with our first parents shortly after they were driven from Paradise, and as the ages roll on and we come down to the days of Abraham we again find a promise made with him in these words, "In thee (Abraham) and in thy seed (which the Apostle Paul says is Christ) shall all the families of the earth be blessed, and these same promises were renewed unto Isaac and Jacob, and we find that Christ alone of all of Adam's posterity has been found worthy to be entrusted with, and to carry out Jehovah's plans.

It is his eternal purpose to fill this earth with a race of pure and holy beings, and the way in which he will accomplish this is by blessing the nations with a pure and righteous Government over them, called the Kingdom of Heaven. This is that kingdom our Lord taught his disciples to pray for and when it comes to earth then will God's will be done on earth as it is now done in heaven. These things [illegible] all made plain to us in the scriptures if we will take the pains to search them out. While our Lord is to be chief Governor among or over the nations he is to have an helpmeet in the affairs of governing this world. He said unto his disciples, ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations and I appoint unto you a kingdom as my Father hath appointed unto me, that ye may eat and drink at my table, in my kingdom, and sit on thrones ruling the twelve tribes of Israel. . . . . Also fear not little flock for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom. The apostle James says, "hearken my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith and heirs of the Kingdom which he hath prepared for them that love him." Yes, thank God, although we may not be able to cross the ocean, nor to preach like Paul, yet we may by a belief of this glorious Gospel become an heir to the kingdom, and reign with Christ on the earth. Know ye not that the saints shall judge (rule) the world? While we hear some who are boasting of the great achievements to be brought about by man through the political parties, methinks I hear a still, small voice which seems to say, "Ye blind guides can ye not discern the Signs of the Times? nor read the hand-writing on the wall?" Mene, mene, Tekel Upharsin. These words loom up before us on the walls of every earthly government. God has for six thousand years been proving man, and he is still found wanting. he is unequal to the emergencies which exist at this present time, and the kingdoms of the world are about to be given to those for whom they were prepared. Short-sighted indeed, must those be who cannot discern the movements of the divine hand among the nations of earth. History repeats itself. What a revolution of changes God's kingdom has undergone. How true our Savior's words, "the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force." Ever since God's kingdom was overturned under Zedekiah the last of Judah's kings, it was to be no more (God's kingdom) until he come whose right it is (Christ) and I will give it him, and although the sceptre did not depart from Judah, nor a law-giver from under his feet until Shiloh came, yet he did not wield the sceptre at his first advent, nor will he until he comes in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. Even so, "Come Lord Jesus, and reign from sea to sea, and from the rivers unto the ends of the earth."

DIED

S. S. Gibbs, aged 60 years, near Dunnegan, Yolo Co., Cal., April 2nd, 1893, at 12:30 p. m.

His son, Fred L. Gibbs, sent me this notice with an invitation to the funeral. The letter was not received until some ten days after, as I was from home. I became acquainted with Bro. Gibbs some 18 or 19 years ago; and at his request visited him several times, and held meetings in his neighborhood. Was present during the sickness and death of his second wife, and spoke at her funeral. I think this was in 1879, since which time my acquaintance with Bro. Gibbs has been quite limited. As far as I know he held on to the faith to the last. The following items are given by his son.

My father was born in Franklin Co., N. Y., in 1832, and came to Ill. when 18 years old. He came to Cal. 1863. He became a member of the church of the Abrahamic Faith when he was about 22 years of age, and was a consistent member to the close of his life.

Contingent Fund.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to The Restitution office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of accounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

Conference Notice.

The annual conference of the churches of God of the Abrahamic faith in Iowa, will meet at Clarkesville, Butler Co. Iowa, June the 2nd, 1893, and continue over two Sundays. The large audience tent and a half dozen or more small or living tents will be ready to accommodate those who come. And as the preaching brethren are always ready to make any sacrifice to be present, and labor for the interest of the meeting and the good of all, we hope and earnestly entreat all who have an interest in the cause of the Master and are looking for his soon coming to make a sacrifice also if necessary to be at this meeting, for we are persuaded that while all mean to be steadfast yet there is an enormous tendency to falling away among all Christian societies that will prove [illegible]ing. Then let us, as many as can possibly do so, go to this meeting determined to make it a means of filling our lamps with that oil that will throw light across the way of the bridegroom's approach. [illegible] if we slumber and sleep before his arrival we will be ready when the final cry is sounded to go out to meet him, and go in with him to the wedding, and not have the door shut upon us while we go to seek for light. He may be nearer than we think.

Is not this the Carpenter?

Lord, might I be but as a saw,
A plane, a chisel, in Thy hand!
No, Lord! I take it back in awe—
Such prayer for me is far too grand.

I pray, O Master, let me lie
As on Thy bench the favored wood;
Thy saw, Thy plane, Thy chisel ply,
And work me into something good.

Original.

A Discourse. No. 2.

Delivered at the house of a neighbor, in Scotland, Ct., with some additions.

Now, dear friends allow me to ask in view of the coming struggle for the superemacy of the earth: is not selfishness the foundation of your desires to go to heaven? The Lord Jesus Christ wants soldiers, tried, faithful and true; to push his conquests into all the earth; but you in your selfishness are willing to leave the work to others, and go off to heaven where you hope to take your ease and enjoy yourselves.

You are very much like certain ones, who, during the late war, went to Canada to escape duty in conquering the rebellion in the South. But such ones were called traitors to their country, and you fill out the pattern completely, that was set by those traitors. But when we look at the Scriptural view of the objective point of the gospel, it looms up with magnificence and splendor, for the Lord says—Psa. cxiii. 5, "From the rising of the sun unto the going down of the same, the Lord's name is to be praised." And Mal. i. 11, says —"For from the rising of the sun, even unto the going down of the same, my name shall be great among the Gentiles; and in every place incense shall be offered unto my name, and a pure offering: for my name shall be great among the heathen, saith the Lord of hosts." Also in Num. xiv. 21, the Lord says, "But as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." The Lord also says—Ezek. xxx. 22, "Therefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God; I do not do this for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for mine holy name's sake." We see by this, that the great plan of salvation was not devised, nor did Christ die that we, as individuals, might enjoy ourselves, but for his name's sake: that the earth may be filled with his glory. The Revelator had a vision of the future glory of God. He says—Rev. v. 13, that he heard every creature every where giving glory to God. But this does not prove universal salvation as some tell us, because this does not take place until all God's enemies are destroyed and become as though they had not been; then those that are left, will cheerfully give glory to God.

O, what glories are revealed in restitution: It is not strange that the saints of all ages have waited with longing desire and expectation for the second coming of Christ, for then they will be immortal and be made kings and priests and reign over the nations. Shall compel them to submit to wise and just laws, and so the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea. But the doctrine of the second coming of Christ is a stench in the nostrils of orthodoxy. They treat it with scorn and contempt, and consider it infidelity.

I will here relate a little incident that occurred while I lived in the State of Delaware. I was at a Methodist Class-meeting and took occasion to speak of the second coming of Christ, as the consummation of my hope—an event greatly to be desired, and when I sat down, the leader remarked, (evidently for my edification,) that the doctrine of the second coming of Christ leads to infidelity. I then took occasion to read for his edification, 2 Pet. iii. 3, 4. "Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days, scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, where is the promise of his coming? And after the meeting closed, Elder Wilson, the presiding elder came to me and said, "Mr. Howard, don't you come to our meetings any more, unless you can hold your tongue." I thought I was very much in the same situation as Peter and John, Acts iii., "They were commanded not to speak at all in the name of Jesus." But I can only rejoice that I am counted worthy to suffer shame in the cause of Christ. But why does orthodoxy scorn the doctrine of the second coming of Christ, and treat it with such contempt? The reason is obvious. They have been taught by Babylon the mother of harlots; and as daughters of their mother they surely believe that the righteous go immediately to heaven from a death-bed, and that is good enough. They have no use for the second coming of Christ. They are like a Catholic lady that I was talking with and quoting Scripture to prove the doctrine I so much love; when she replied, "You need not quote Scripture to me, I do not go by the Scripture, I go by what my priest tells me, I have no use for the Scripture." So, orthodoxy has no use for the plans declarations and promises of Christ, they go by what their priests tell them. Is it infidelity to believe Christ when he says—"If I go away I will come again and receive you unto myself? Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh." etc., etc. I believe these precious, these glorious promises, and because I do, I am branded an infidel. But you deny them, simply because your priests tell you to. Our glorious King will have no use for those who cannot believe his promises: but, instead, believe and trust in promises that have been invented by the church of Rome. Christ has even appointed to his twelve apostles to reign over, or judge the twelve tribes of Israel. The parable of the talents, also, teaches the same truth. He says to one, "Be thou over ten cities," and to another, "Be thou also over five cities." God wants no idlers in his vineyard. He has no use for drones. It is work, work, both in the mortal and immortal state. He wants his servants to learn in this life, the business that he has for them in the life to come.

If a person is expecting to go to heaven and spend his time in singing, and shouting, he is not prepared to reign over the nations. It would be a great mistake for a man to employ an ordinary farmer to build a steamer or a flouring mill. He is not prepared for such work. This life is given us to prepare for the life to come, not only in point of moral, but of intellectual character in regard to what we are expected to do in the immortal state. The Savior has repeatedly described the business of his servants in the life to come, so that a man is culpable, who does not see and understand what he has for his saints to do. Men are called honest, and no doubt are sincere in believing they are going to heaven, but the Savior said—"If the blind lead the blind, shall they not both fall into the ditch?"

Our glorious King wants his servants to "reign over the nations," and compel them to "beat their swords into plough-shares," etc., and learn the art of war no more. He wants his prohibitory laws executed; not against the sale and use of rum alone; but against all manner of sin and iniquity every where.

I have often thought what a delight it would be to go through the streets of Willimantic or some other city and say to those that keep those hells of vice and iniquity; gentlemen and ladies this business must be stopped; and then have the power from the King of kings to enforce the proclamation. This, I understand will be the business of the saints in the coming dispensation. See the cxlix. Psa. "Let the saints be joyful in glory: let them sing aloud upon their beds. Let the high praises of God be in their mouth, and a two edged sword in their hand; to execute vengeance upon the heathen, and punishments upon the people. To bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron. To execute upon them the judgment written: this honor have all, the saints. Praise ye the Lord." This is in regard to the saints in glory.

Dear friends, I look upon these Scriptures as having a literal fulfilment in the future. Why not? Orthodoxy points with pride and exultation to those few prophecies relating to the birth, the life and death of Jesus of Nazareth; as having come to pass literally, but when we refer them to those voluminous utterances of the prophets and Jesus himself and the apostles respecting the second coming and reign of the Christ on the throne of his father David, and the subjugation of the nations to his will and law, and a prohibition of all manner of sin: "O that is quite another thing. That must be understood in a typical sense. That is not literal at all." Isa. ix. 6, "came to pass literally and was filled out by Jesus of Nazareth; but the seventh verse must be understood figuratively." O consistency, thou art a jewel! Infidelity fattens on such contemptible handling of the Scripture as this. When will the world become converted with such preaching and teaching? Better turn your attention to the church, and "cast out the beam" of infidelity that is in the church.

When Paul was brought before King Agrippa he said: "And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers: Unto which promise our twelve tribes constantly serving God day and night, hope to come. For which hope's sake king Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews." When Paul arrived at Rome, he called the chief of the Jews together, and told them, that "for the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain." We see by these statements that Paul's hope and preaching were identical with the hope of Israel. Then why did the Jews persecute him? Simply because he preached that the hope of Israel would be realized through Jesus of Nazareth, while the Jews rejected Jesus as their Messiah, and were still looking for their Messiah to come, and materialize their hopes. This was the only difference between Saul of Tarsus, and Paul the Apostle. But what was the "hope of Israel?" What were they expecting and looking for? Read the rejoicings of Mary the mother of Jesus, Luke i. 54, 55, Zechariah also, 68 to 80. Simeon and Anna showed plainly what was the hope of Israel, and spake of Jesus to all those that looked for redemption in Jerusalem. The two disciples when they were going to Emmaus after the crucifixion said—"we trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel," but now since their expectant king was dead, their hearts were sad. But when he arose from the dead, their drooping hearts revived. He certainly will fulfil those predictions of the prophets. So when they were come together, they asked to know the time when Israel's hope should be realized. They still believed that this was the mission of Christ into the world. Jesus was born in Bethlehem, and the prophet Micah had said that the governor that should rule Israel should be born there. Therefore, Christ was certainly that governor. But what was Christ's answer to their question of time? He simply told them that they were not to know the time. This was really an endorsement of their views of his mission.

It is a well known fact, that about the time of Christ, the Jews were looking for a great deliverer who should restore again the kingdom of Israel.

Neander, a Jewish historian, says —The Jews expected a Messiah, who should be armed with miraculous power in their behalf, free them from civil bondage, execute a severe retribution upon the enemies of the theocratic people, and make them masters of the world, in a universal empire.

Schaff, one of the committee for the late revision of the Bible, says —The Jews conceived of the Messianic kingdom as a glorious restoration of the throne of David.

We tell you plainly that Christ is coming again to earth, and that when he comes, he will restore again the kingdom of Israel. But you spurn the message, and treat it as an idle tale, and not worthy a notice, because it does not come from a great and a learned man, with a Rev. at one end of his name, and a D. D. at the other. But Paul says —"Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called." The Savior also says—"I thank thee O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes." Even the doctrine of the second coming of Christ is purposely shaded by the great architect, so that those who would believe it are beset with adverse surroundings. It would appear that God raised up Wm. Miller to publish the second coming of Christ in 1844, by which the whole Christian world was aroused and took their lamps and went out to meet the bridegroom. But the time passed and the bridegroom did not come. The Christian Church then sunk into a state of slumber and said by their actions, "you can't fool me again." And so, the Christian world has resolved that there is no promise of his coming, and the way of those who believe it is beset with thorns. Their names are cast out as evil, they are called infidel. They find they must take up a pretty heavy cross if they would follow Jesus, but he wants none others. Even Jesus our blessed Savior was born of an humble parentage, and brought up in the mean city of Nazareth, so that his brow might be shaded with odium. If the Christ had come from one of the Rev.'s or one of the D. D.'s of his time, the Jewish nation would have received him as their Messiah, but this would not fulfil the prophets, and so Christ could not come in 1844 as Miller predicted, for then the great and the noble were adventists, but it is the "poor in this world, rich in faith, that are heirs of the kingdom." It is those that can believe the promises although they have to stem the tide to do so. The promises of Christ must be fulfilled, yet an orthodox church can see no proof worthy of notice that Christ will ever come again to our earth; but on the other hand, a reference to that glorious event is called infidelity. But well and truly may such persons dread to see the second coming of Christ. Evidently they anticipate unconsciously the doom of the "citizens" in the parable of the nobleman who went into a far country to receive a kingdom and to return. The "citizens" said, "we will not have this man to reign over us." And so orthodoxy says —We do not believe in a literal kingdom, but in a spiritual: A kingdom in our hearts. But there is nothing brought to view throughout the entire Scriptures more clearly and unmistakably than that the nationality of Israel is yet to be restored, and the throne of David is yet to be occupied by Jesus the Son of David, and heir apparent to his throne.

Moreover, the Jews are already returning to that land, and are building houses, planting vineyards and raising up the desolations of many generations, just as God said they should in the latter days. And yet orthodoxy can see nothing in the passing events of the day to prove them that God meant what he said in his promises to restore Israel to their land and raise up the throne of David that has been so long in ruins. Orthodoxy appears to be completely intoxicated with the hope of going to heaven: a hope that has no foundation in God's word.

We repeat, (and it is worthy of repetition a thousand times,) the plan of salvation has reference to earth and man upon the earth, and this alone. God has never invited men to prepare to go to heaven. He has no use for earth's inhabitants in heaven. Heaven is perfect without man, but earth is in rebellion against his government and laws. War, murder, and crime of all kinds are the order of the day among mankind, while famines, pestilence, cyclones, etc., are ready to sweep off the human family by the thousand. All that is wrong in the earth, and in opposition to man's peace and happiness, are a direct result of believing the serpent's lie. These all, together with the curse that was pronounced upon the earth for man's sake must be removed, and it is the great promise in the gospel to remove them, and cleanse the earth from sin in all its forms, and is the direct result of the death of Christ, and faith in their removal is the faith that Jude exhorts his brethren to earnestly contend for. The restitution of earth is the foundation of the whole plan of salvation, Jesus the Christ himself being the chief corner stone in the great superstructure.

The great rebellion that was inaugurated in Eden may well be compared to the rebellion of the Confederacy in the South against the Union. In order to put down that rebellion, our president sent out a call for volunteers to fight the battles of the government, and the call was answered by those who were to do their share of the work for the honor of the country. But when the conscription call was sent out, many went to Canada, and snaped their figners at Uncle Sam, rather than take their places in the ranks and meet the foe. And these were called traitors to their country. And so, our glorious King wants soldiers, tried and true, to fight his battles, and push the victories of salvation to the uttermost parts of the earth. And so, he has sent out a call for volunteers to assist in the great work of subjugating the rebellion. But you say no! we will go to heaven where we can engage in a more important work; where we can clap our hands and shout glory and enjoy ourselves. Nothing that one can imagine could evince greater selfishness, nor greater contempt for the promises of the gospel, than your determination to reject the positions that are held up to view in the gospel, where you are wanted, and go to heaven where you are not wanted. And now dear friends, in conclusion, let me entreat you to study this subject in the light of inspiration, in the light of your own best interests, in the light of common sense; for if you delay to believe these truths until the Master of the house hath risen up and shut the door, and you begin to stand without and knock, saying, Lord, Lord open unto us, he will answer, "Depart from me ye workers of iniquity, I know you not." Submitted in love to all those who are honest in their belief.

Peter's Second Epistle.
Chap. 2.

1. Moreover there came to be false-prophets indeed among the royal-people, as there will also be false-teachers among you, who will covertly lead in heresies (divisions) of loss, denying even the Sole Lord (despot) who hath bought (lit. given in exchange for) them, and bringing upon themselves swift loss.

2. And many will have followed out their extravagancies, on account of whom the way of the truth will have been blasphemed.

3. And in cupidity will they make commerce of you with plastic words, whose verdict of long ago is not slow in coming, and whose loss doth not slumber.

4. For if God did not spare angels who sinned, but delivered them up to bonds of gloom, when he had hurled them down to Tartarus to watch to keep them cut off until a judicial-trial;

5. And spared not an ancient (or primeval) cosmos, but watched to guard Noe an eighth person, a herald of righteousness, when he brought a flood on a cosmos of irreverent ones;

6. And condemned cities of Sodoma and Gomorra to catastrophe, burning them down to ashes, and making (of them) an example for those who were destined to act irreverently;

7. And delivered Lot a justified one, who was being worn out by the extravagant conduct of the lawless;

8. For the justified one was putting his justified soul to the extreme test, dwelling in their midst in sight and hearing of their lawless acts day after day.

9. The Lord knoweth how to deliver truly-reverent ones from temptation (or trial) and to watch to keep unjust ones cut off unto a day of judicial-trial;

10. Especially those moreover who are going their way after flesh in inordinate desires of polution and despising lordship; rash adventurers who do not tremble when they blaspheme glories;

11. Where angels who are greater in strength and ability do not bring unto the Lord blasphemous criticism against them;

12. While these like irrational animals begotten by nature (or physically) for capture and corruption, blaspheming things in respect to which they are ignorant, will perish in their own corruption.

13. Suffering wrong as the wages of wrong; accounting a pleasure of sense their daily delight; spots and blemishes, delighting in their deceptive practices, feasting along with you,

14. Having eyes full of adultery and insatiate for sin, enticing unstedfast souls, having a heart exercised in cupidity, offspring of a curse;

15. Who have forsaken a straightforward way and have been led astray, having followed out the way of Balaam the Son of Boer who loved the wages of iniquity;

16. And was convicted of his evasion, when a dumb ass had spoken with a human voice and prevented the folly of the prophet.

17. These are fountains without water, misty clouds driven by a wind-flaw for whom the gloom of the darkness hath been watched to be kept.

18. For uttering ponderous words of inutility they entice unto inordinate desires of the flesh to acts of extravagance those who are really escaping the people whose conduct is in error.

19. Promising freedom to them while they themselves are bond-servants of corruption. For to whatever one yeilds subjection, to that he becomes a bond-servant.

20. For if when they have escaped the miasmas of the cosmos in an acquaintance with our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, they become ensnared again and yield to them, their last experiences become worse than their first.

21. For it were better for them not to have apprehended the way of righteousness, than having apprehended it to have turned back from the sacred commandment delivered to them.

22. The realization of the true parable (teaching) hath been theirs, namely, a dog that hath returned to its own vomit, and a sow that hath been washed to wallowing in the mire.

COMMENT.

"Heresies of loss" instead of "destructive heresies" R. V. or "Sects of perdition" margin.

"Master" here is too ambiguous a term, "Despot" or "Sole Lord" is less so. The person meant here is elsewhere designated as "The Lord God Omnipotent." The term δεσποτης is never applied to the Lord Christ in Scripture.

"Extravagancies" instead of "lasciviousness" C. V. & R. V. This term too specific to interprat the Greek word here, which covers the ground of any excess or extravagant action in any direction and not in carnal desires merely.

"Tartarus" instead of "Hell" R. V.—a very dark place; but the original gives no idea of heat or fire in this place.

"To keep them cut off" instead of "reserved" R. V.

"A primeval cosmos" instead of "an ancient world" R. V.

"Lot, a justified one" instead of "righteous Lot" R. V. The ground of righteousness then was just the same as now. Lot was a "pardoned sinner" and was trying to do the best he could in this state of justification.

"Glories" instead of "dignities" R. V. There is another word in Greek for "dignities."

"Deceptive-practices" instead of "love-feasts." R. V.

"For to whatever" etc. instead of "to whom" R. V.

"Sacred" instead of "holy" R. V.

"Hath been washed" instead of "had washed" R. V. a difference of mode and tense, that is all.

Dear Restitution:

Jesus was the greatest factor in the history of his time. It is not too much to say that He has shaped the destiny of all nations and people since the time when he was a babe in Bethlehem's manger.

No matter what we may think of revelation, history compels all well informed persons to admit that no man or set of men have so wrought upon the nations and people of the world as our Lord and Master.

Nebuchadnezzar, Alexander the Great and Julius Ceasar each in his day ruled the world, but the influence of each died with him. There is not so much as a single pulsation reaching down to the present time, from the acts of any of them. How is it with the Savior of the world? When a babe in his mother's arms he caused the great Herod to tremble on his throne. When he laid down the Golden Rule to govern the actions of men he thereby ruined the hopes and future prospects of all tyrants. There is no selfishness, no self aggrandizement and no tyranny in that good old rule of "do unto others as you would have them do unto you." There is no room for selfish ambition there. How far reaching it is! It kills off the critic and the bigot, and builds up advocates of free speech and honest expression of opinion. It fosters and encourages free and full investigation for the truth's sake, and breaks down dogmatism. It changes enmity to friendship, hatred to love, and egotism, or love of self, to love of our fellows.

May our heavenly Father help us to keep this, the best law ever given for the government of the human family.

IT is of no use for the natural man to try to conquer himself. What is the use of pitting the old man against the old man? •

WHEN we read the revised version of Isaiah viii. 20, we thought it worth the two dollars we paid for the book. This is the way it reads: "To the law and the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, surely there is no morning for them." •

A DESPATCH from Berlin on the 2nd says the Czar, now at the Livadia Palace, in the Crimea is said to have found an exquisitely painted egg on his table Easter morning. It contained a small silver dagger, two ivory death's heads and a slip of paper bearing the words: "Christ has risen, we, also, shall rise again." •

THE correspondent who took exceptions to our saying that Adam stamped himself with mortality, is informed that he misunderstood the expression. As the maker of an instrument may be allowed to explain it, it was this: By disobedience he put immortality out of his own reach. Yes: Adam was of the earth, earthly. No; eating "did not change his nature; it only changed his relationship to God and his law." •

As food is requisite to supply the daily wear and tear and waste of the body, so also the mind must be fed to renew it day by day. Our provident Father has furnished a rich, varied, and tempting bill of fare, and we are highly culpable if we do not partake freely. If we abstain from the injurious food that sustains the worldling, we will have a keen appetite and powerful digestion for spiritual food:—will hunger and thirst after righteousness, but always with the assurance of an inexhaustible supply to fill us. •

A DESPATCH from London dated 22nd inst says the discovery of the so-called Gospel of Peter is arousing intense interest, exceeding even the finding of an ancient copy of the Gospels at Mount Sinai. The manuscript was found in the tomb of an Egyptian monk. The recital of the passion, death and resurrection of Christ, though differing in some details from the canonical books, approaches that of St. Mark. According to the best exegetical scholars in Paris, the Gospel is copied from a Greek MS. At the crucifixion, according to this version only the hands were nailed. Joseph of Arimathea, it states, was an influential friend of Pilate, who prevailed upon the Roman prefect to obtain Herod's consent to the delivery of the body of Jesus. The soldiers and elders witnessed the resurrection. The latter were afraid of being stoned by the Jews. They therefore sent a deputation to Pilate to ask him to forbid the soldiers to divulge the miracle. •

"FOR ye are dead," was true of the Colossians, or it would never have been said. We, too, are dead in the same sense, if we are in Christ. It is equally true that we have been raised with him if we are in him, because he is risen. The natural mind will not understand this: it will be foolishness to him, to talk of being dead and yet raised from the dead. So it must be; there is no spiritual discernment in the natural man because he is natural. The proof that a man has died with Christ and been raised with him is very simple--he seeks "those things which are above." He "minds not earthly things." Beloved, we want to call special attention to the statement of Paul in 1 Cor. xv. 31 where the Apostle says he dies daily. No less than others did he die with Christ when he was buried with him by baptism into death; but after all, it would seem to be a continual process. "I die daily." And the counterpart of this daily dying is found in 2 Cor. iv. 16; the renewing is daily--the renewing is a continual process also. The inward man is renewed day by day. The grave question is, are these processes in full operation? •

The Woman's Seed. No. 8.

Thus far in discussing this subject we think we have done what sailors were obliged to do before they had charts and compasses to steer by—they hugged the shore, in nautical phraseology, not daring to trust themselves out of sight of land. We have aimed throughout to speak as the oracles of God speak, and strain no parts to make points; and the further we go the more we are convinced that we have given the unvarnished truth of God. To us the simple truths brought out seem to be beautifully harmonious, seem so to dovetail into each other as to preclude the possibility of their being offset by another series from the same author. We appreciate the tender solicitude of those who urge carefulness. This is not only eminently proper on the part of those who essay to speak for God on the subject but on all subjects it becomes a bounden duty. It is doubtless comparatively easy to frame objections to our views; but when we ask those who do not agree with us to harmonize their views with the redemptive scheme revealed to God, they will not find it an easy task.

In order to show the awful importance of believing the things concerning the name of Jesus Christ, as well as those of the kingdom of God, we quote the words of John in his first epistle, 4th chapter, and 2nd and 3rd verses. "Hereby know ye the spirit of God; every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God; and every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God: and this is that spirit of antichrist whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world." The momentous question with us is, can one believe in the pre-existence of Jesus Christ, and at the same time believe that he came in flesh? We ask this, fully realizing that we will have to give an account of our stewardship. Have we not the word of Jesus for it that "that which is born of the flesh is flesh?" We certainly have. Was not the speaker he of the stable and manger? Was he not born at Bethlehem? Was he not the son of the Mary who found favor with God? Was Jesus Christ he who was made of a woman? If made of a woman he was not made of a pre-existent person. If made of a woman, and born of a woman he was flesh; and how dare mortal man to say he pre-existed when Jesus said "that which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the spirit is spirit. God is spirit: and over and over have we proven that no spirit being could be the redeemer of men: and need we add, no spirit could be born of a woman as the words of Jesus prove. For our part we will not allow the pall of mystery to obscure God's plain truth on the subject, however deftly or piously thrown. What was a great mystery for ages the apostles have unravelled.

We were led to make these remarks by reading what the talented and popular author of "Millennial Dawn" says about the resurrection of Christ, to illustrate what he styles the the "Invisible phase of the Kingdom." In vol. 2. p. 122, he says the Lord at his second coming could assume the human form as he did to his disciples after his resurrection; but such manifestation would be out of harmony with God's plan." We think he should have said MY plan. On page 126 he says "he had power to appear in a variety of ways, but no one of these bodies was his spiritual body, though the fact of his resurrection was proved by them." Think of it! The resurrection of our Lord was proved by bodies which had never died, and never buried; proved by bodies made to deceive them; made for the occasion. He then adds that "Christ was a spirit being really invisible to human sight." Indeed! How then does he know what a spirit being is? We shall show that he does not know, presently. But imagine Thomas handling a body that looked and felt like that of his Lord who had been wounded for our transgressions, and told that it was HE: that he was really alive again, while all the time it was a body made for the occasion! Did they ever discover the fraud? or, was its discovery reserved as a laurel for this talented author of the 19th century after the events?

On page 127 it says the human body of flesh and bone and its clothing which appeared suddenly while the doors were shut, did not go out of the door, but simply disappeared, or dissolved into the same elements from which he had created them a few minutes before." There, that's just the way it was. He knows all about it! He must have been an eye-witness: and yet he adds: "doubtless;" as if not quite so sure: "Doubtless he was still with them invisibly." But what religious foolishness this appears to be when we read on p. 178, vol. 1. "what a spiritual body is, we do not know." If that be so, we hold that he does not know but our Lord appeared to them in a spiritual body every time; and it is out of all character for him to tell us what a spirit could, or could not do. If he does not know what a spirit body is he cannot be authority as to its capabilities.

On p. 125 he says: "Some Christians absurdly conclude that the assumed bodies were his spirit body, and seem to disregard the statement of our Lord that this was not a spirit body." "Assumed bodies;" where in all the book of God do we read about "the assumed bodies of our Lord?" Where do we read the statement of our Lord that this was not a spirit body that he appeared to them in? In Matt. xiv. 26. and Mark vi. 49. we find that when the disciples saw Jesus walking on the water, they were troubled and thought they saw a phantom: that is, an apparition, a spectre or a ghost. Bear in mind Jesus had not died at this time, and they thought it was a spirit or apparition; showing how ignorant and superstitious they were. How did he quiet them down? By saying, "Be of good cheer. It is I, be not afraid." Coming to Luke xxiv. 37 after his death. Jesus stood suddenly in their midst, and were terrified, and supposed they had seen a spirit." The disciples thought they had seen a spirit, but our author says a spirit being is invisible to human sight. They appear to have considered phantasma and pneuma as synonymous terms. And a foot note in the Diaglott says that Griesbach, has phantasma, in the margin, which agrees with Mark vi. 49. Griesbach devoted his whole life to New Testament criticism, and Dr. Marsh says he is the most consummate critic that ever undertook an edition of the New Testament. Let us look at it; how does our Lord calm their fears? Just as he did on the water. "Why are ye troubled? And why do thoughts arise in your hearts?" They were ignorant, superstitious and imaginative. It was their thoughts that troubled them. They had mistaken notions or he would not have addressed them thus, as if he had said to them you are thinking about what is not real, but imaginative. "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I, MYSELF." Was that true? If so, Prof. Griesbach was right in putting phantasma instead of pneuma. "It is I, myself." There is no deception about me, whatever; I am as real as ever I was, handle ME, not an assumed body. It was I that died for your sins: and I am before you to prove I have been raised for your justification. Handle me, for a phantom hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have. Plainly they believed in ghosts. The matter is now narrowed down to a question of knowledge or veracity. Our author says this was not Christ himself. Christ says it was himself, and we believe him every time.

Again our author says, "Many suppose that our Lord's glorious body is the same body that was crucified; that is a great mistake, for it would show that it was not perfect, but scarred and disfigured." What an idea of a perfect body! Are the redeemed hosts with him on this when they sing, "Thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood?" Where would the blood have come from if he is not the same? We want to know if our author be true or if this song of the redeemed be true, or if this be a re-enaction of the resurrection fraud?

He continues "If the glorious body is not the body that was crucified, it would prove that our redemption price was taken back, for he says, "it was his life as a man that was sacrificed for our redemption." We find it impossible to believe that our author is so simple as this makes him appear. We are compelled to believe that he is throwing dust in our eyes! If Jesus had lived a blood life again after he shed it on our behalf there would be a show of reason in what he says; but as he lived by God (Rom. vi. 10) there is absolutely none.

But worse and worse!!! He now says: "Our Lord's human body was however supernaturally removed from the tomb: we know nothing about what became of it, except that it did not decay or corrupt. Whether it was dissolved into gases, or whether it is still preserved somewhere as a grand memorial of God's love of Christ's obedience, no one knows, nor is such knowledge necessary. It will not surprise us if in the kingdom God shall show to the world the ransom given on their behalf the body of flesh crucified for us."

We submit that the man who discovered that the Christ that was crucified was supernaturally removed to make the disciples believe he was risen and then secreted somewhere, ought to be compelled to find out what became of him. We have our opinion of one who had facilities for learning so much, and yet neglected to find out all about it and so was obliged to form his theories after all. Let us examine this bold statement a moment. Our Lord had a body he could very well dispense with. It was not Himself, and no part of Him, and never will be. It was removed from the tomb to make-believe that the real Christ had risen, when in fact he had never died, never was buried: so that the real Christ never gave himself as Paul in Titus ii. 14, says he did. And then, observe, that which really died never lived again. He who is alive never died. But; who is it that says: "I am He that liveth and was dead?" Is this true or false? We allow no quibbling nor twisting or turning; we demand a square answer? If true our author's theory is FALSE! Is there any room for that theory in Rom. xiv. 9, "For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and the living." We tell our author seriously and sorrowfully, he does not believe this Scripture. He does not believe Christ came in the flesh, and the word of the spirit for it, this is that spirit of antichrist which is not of God; 1 John iv. 3. The Christ that went away and is coming again never died; and this suggests his preservation somewhere, somehow; and after all this presumption the wonder is, that he did not suggest alcohol as the preservative. He may talk about the resurrection of Christ, but he does not believe it. We read distinctly, that He showed HIMSELF alive after his passion Acts i. 3. He had been dead. It was not a wretched farce! Has our author any Savior? If so, who is he, and where? Will he say the Lord Jesus who is in heaven is he? That cannot be: he has been dead and is alive again. Will he say it was he who was nailed to the cross and made a curse for us? How can that be he when he was not even awarded life again for himself? How can our author be saved by his life when he has no life himself? He needs to find the Jesus Christ who said "I lay down my life for the sheep; and who said "I have power to take it again;" and who said "Because I live ye shall live also;" this cannot he do while he holds these truth nullifying theories; but thank God we have no trouble to find him. Blessed Jesus, "Measures, not men," is our motto. What we have briefly reviewed is public property. Our object was twofold, 1st to warn our readers of one of the most deadly, soul destroying errors of the adversary; and 2ndly, to show the doctrine of the pre-existence of Christ gone to seed. Happily there are very many who do not go to such lengths; and we implore them by all the love of God and of Christ to believe the record that God has given of his Son; not to do this is to make him a liar. To believe the record is to honor the Son even as they honor the Father. •

Appointments.

Brother J. F. Wagoner will be at Antioch, in Marshall Co. Ind. on the third Sunday in May, 1893. Services at 10-30 in the morning. There will also be services in the evening.

While the Day Lasts.

The following from the Crisis, of some months since, to our mind, contains "meat in due season. that will afford good food for many. We are convinced that much time and talent is wasted, thrown away absolutely, that could be made to reap a vast harvest if used in the profitable manner suggested in the following:

In this "eleventh hour," this time of the end, this "quickly," this very last fragment of probationary time, the "children of the light" should be doing one thing—only one thing: not bickering: not disputing: not discussing intricate and unessential matters: not chasing rainbows of newly imagined light: not inventing and pushing novel theories: not disturbing confidence in well settled biblical truths for the eclat of readjusting them: not plunging into hairsplitting disquisitions.

The "eleventh hour" of vineyard work is rather late for a new philosophy on the exact nature and intricacies of vegetable life. It is unseemly to be analyzing the law of gravitation amidst the premonitory thunders of the final judgment: or striving to erect temples for philosophic and theologic acumen when the fires of the last day are bursting out beneath our feet.

The time for this kind of thing is far past. The minds and hearts of the masses of our people are sufficiently concentrated in the fundamentals of "the faith." There is no occasion for attempting to tear up the rock bottom of our scriptural belief as to the personality and infinity of God: the nature and destiny of man: immortality through Christ alone: the extreme imminence of the end; the hope and fact of the resurrection of the dead: the power of the Spirit, etc., etc.

Our burning, crying need, as a people, is not new subtleties of argument along lines of strange interpretations. We are not threatened with decadence in numbers and power for lack of truth and light. We need, rather, more vital confidence in the truths we hold and teach; profounder faith in God and Christ and the Holy Spirit. And, especially and imperatively, we need the spirit of work, earnest, ample, persistent and untiring work in spreading the truth into the dark places; in warning unsaved men of coming doom; in plucking sinners as brands from the burning; in strengthening the things that are ready to die; in pointing bewildered souls to the Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world; in gathering sheaves for the mighty harvest so soon to come. The thing to address ourselves to now, is preaching the gospel of the kingdom at hand, in its palpable features which the people can understand; the signs and plain evidences of redemption near; the warnings and appeals of God's Word, along with consistent, earnest efforts to induce the unsaved to prepare to meet their God.

It is altogether too late to be squandering time and talent upon metaphysical argumentation to the subversion of unsophisticated people, and the distraction of the body of Christ. No people can be spiritually or doctrinally strong who are kept in the sieve of perplexing disputation. O, let us have the gospel—the gospel of the coming and kingdom: the gospel of preparation; the gospel of redemption; the gospel in its simplicity, in its saving, comforting power. It is time that self were out of sight and Christ and his words were at the front. •

Remember that the Master's eleventh hour command is, "Go ye into the vineyard and work."

CHAS. BOARDMAN.

A circular directing all the Governors of central Russia to carry out within four months the imperial ukase for the removal of the Jews to the territory set apart for their habitation has just been issued by the Russian Minister for the Interior.

Selected.

Gleanings by the Wayside.

In the wonderful prayer of Jesus, just before the culmination of his sufferings for us, are these words: "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me have I given them: that they may be one, even as we are one: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one." This is Christian unity or oneness—one as Christ and the Father are one: not in person, but in mind, heart and purpose: no division between them, but perfect confidence and love. Only a little while before he had said to them, "These things I command you, that ye love one another, as I have loved you." Self-denying love that continued to the end, through the denial of Peter, and all the sufferings of that time when all the disciples forsook him and fled.

Paul brings this thought of oneness out more plainly under the figure of a body and its different members the eye, the ear, the hand and the foot, with Christ as the living Head. He says we are all members of the body of Christ, and that there should be no division in the body, but that if one member suffers all the other members suffer with it.

How would it seem to see the hands of the natural body taking every opportunity they could get to stick pins in the other members, or throw dirt in the eyes, or close up the ears? What if the mouth should bite the hands, and every member refuse to do anything that could help or give pleasure or comfort to the others? In the natural body pain in any member is felt in the head, and directly orders go out for the others to do all possible for the relief of the suffering members. In the figure does not the pain felt by the weakest members affect the Head, Christ? and what must he think of his people when they disregard his commands to help or comfort the others and spend their time sticking pins, planting thorns, or throwing dust on the sensitive members?

Do we realize that every unkind word spoken to one "of the least of these" is spoken to him? How the little thorns irritate the sensitive flesh! and how the memory of the sharp pins of sarcasm and unkind words linger in the mind! We have read in a certain paper, long ago, that all who believed as we do should be destroyed. The name of the writer, any good things he may have written, where he lived, are all forgotten, but the sharp words remain. They have lost their power to hurt, but are not lost themselves.

Can you imagine for one moment—had Jesus and his father had a difference of opinion on any subject—hearing unkind words from his lips? And yet, we are here "in Christ's stead," to treat others as he would do: to receive the treatment from others that they would give him. Do we realize it? I fear not; yet he said, "He that receiveth you, receiveth me; and he that rejecteth you, rejecteth me." But you say, "That person is not the right one. I do not think people who believe as he does will be saved. I cannot receive him into fellowship." Take heed what you do, for the Word says, "He that receiveth whomsoever I send receiveth me"—not he that receiveth the ones that believe as he does. Do we not forget his express command sometimes when writing—"Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them"—and write things about other's ideas we should not like them to write about our utterances? Is not the rule as binding when we write, as at any other time?

Let us think of this more and take heed to ourselves, lest, having preached to others, we ourselves should be cast away at last.—Jane E. Cor.

Mount Vernon took its name from Admiral Vernon, of the English navy, with whom Lawrence Washington served.

Christ judges them to be the men of worth who are men of work.

The Energy of Love.

The fire does not wait and ask if it is to shine and warm, but it is at once about it, as a very part and parcel of its nature and business, something it cannot help doing because it is fire. So the life of unselfish ministry is loving, and serving, and self-denying, because it cannot help it.

The heart tuned to life's meaning and harmony, by the Christ-touch and Christ-indwelling, is often heard to say, "I must speak; I suppose I shall have to go to the place of prayer." It is seldom heard asking what it can do; but, like pent up waters, it is doing and serving from the very energy of love that burns and throbs in the soul.

The wee face was flushed with the red glow of fever, the tongue white and dry, the hand listless, and the brow unconscious in its delirium of fever. Day by day, night by night, the mother watched and cared for the little sufferer; food and sleep she scarcely thought of. No one, however, heard her utter a word about hardship or care or self denial. The mother love made her forgetful of all that.

And so it is in the real life, the life brought by the indwelling Christ; we work and serve with boundless delight, forgetful of self, unmindful of human applause, because it is the very nature of the new and blessed work inwrought by the mighty hand of God.—Contributor.

Perpetuity of the Bible.

The Empire of Cæsar is gone; the legions of Rome are mouldering in the dust: the avalanches that Napoleon hurled upon Europe have melted away; the pride of the Pharaohs is fallen; the Pyramids they raised to be their tombs are sinking every day in the desert sands; Tyre is a rock for bleaching fishermen's nets; Sidon has scarcely left a rock behind, but the word of God still survives. All things that threatened to extinguish it have only aided it; and it proves every day how transient is the noblest monument that man can build, how enduring is the least word that God has spoken. Tradition has dug for it a grave, intolerance has lighted for it many a faggot; many a Judas has betrayed it with a kiss; many a Peter has denied it with an oath; many a Demas has forsaken it, but the word of God still endures.—Dr. John Cumming.

Exodus of Tartars.

Another exodus of the Crim Tartars from the Crimea has lately set in, and there is every indication it will continue until, in a very short time, the Crimea will be entirely depopulated of its Tartar inhabitants. When the Crimea was first incorporated with Russia in 1783 300,000 of the Tartar population emigrated to Turkish territory. At the close of the Crimean war there was another migration, when 185,000 Tartars passed over to Turkey. The present exodus is consequent upon the passage of a law making the Tartars amenable to the Russian military conscription. Hitherto they have been specially excepted from the conscription. The emigrants are seeking homes in Asiatic Turkey.

Life is for the most part made up of trifles. Shut up to an ever-recurring round of duties that centre in you, and are neither so delightful nor so easy as men would make out, the bloom is stolen from Mary Jane's cheeks, and lines are written about the eyes you once called "the sweetest in the world," by your small faults, John Thomas.

Nickel Plate Improvements.

Through sleeping cars between Chicago and New York, and Boston: superb dining cars between Chicago and Buffalo; three trains in each direction daily; a new Passenger Depot at Chicago, corner of Clark and Twelfth streets; a new Ticket Office at Chicago No. 100 Clark Street, the heart of the city—these are some of the Improvements that the popular Nickel Plate Road is making or has made in its facilities for serving the public. The new train service will go into operation early in May. By the way, the Nickel Plate Road is now selling tickets to the World's Fair, good returning until November 5th, at low rates.

Poetry.

After Death.

At first, when my face shall be changed, and I go
To dwell in silence that cannot be broken,
A few whom I love will lament me, those
And eyes will be dim, when my name shall be spoken.

If any have blamed me, their censure will cease,
For when the full light of eternity flashes,
There's nothing to do but to whisper of peace,
And no one can war with a handful of ashes.

But O, to be gone from the home that was mine,
With no more a share in its joy or its sorrow;
My part in its plans to forever resign,
No thought of to-day and no care for to-morrow.

All this is beyond me. How strange it will be
To go on a journey that has no returning,
With year after year speeding on, without me
To gladden or grieve when the sunsets are burning!

The children will lean their light weight on the stone,
To spell out my name and to question and wonder
What 'tis to lie there in the darkness alone
Through moonlight and starlight and rolling of thunder.

But then in a moment some butterfly gay
Will hover above them and chide their delaying,
With beautiful wings it will lure them away,
And they will forget all the stone has been saying.

But I shall lie patiently there in my place,
The slumber a part of my life and my story:
Till some time the morning will flash in my face,
And I shall awake to its gladness and glory.

Whose Son are You?

"Know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham." Gal. iii. 7.

The Jews made great boast about their being children of Abraham. On account of their fleshly relationship, they expected to participate in the blessing contained in the promises made to "Abraham and his seed." "They answered (Jesus) and said unto him Abraham is our Father. Jesus saith unto them, "If ye were Abraham's children ye would do the works of Abraham." It is impossible for any one to "do the works of Abraham," unless in the first place they have the faith of Abraham. Works are sure to be a natural result of those possessing the faith of Abraham. If you find in your life that no works follow your faith, you may be assured that you have not the Abrahamic faith, and if you have not the faith of Abraham, you are not a child of Abraham, and if not children of Abraham, we have no right to the estate of Abraham, for none but his children can be heirs to his inheritance. "So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham." Gal. iii. 9. And verse 7, says, "the same are the children of Abraham." "Neither, because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children: but in Isaac shall thy seed be called. That is they which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God: but children of the promise are counted for the seed," and not children of the flesh. "And if children, then heirs; heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ." Heirship necessitates being children first.

Notice, it is "the children of the promise," which are "counted for the seed," in other words the children begotten through the promises made to Abraham and his seed. "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust." 2 Pet. i. 4.

Abraham's faith which was so pleasing to God consisted in an implicit confidence in the promises he had made to him concerning an eternal inheritance in the land of Canaan "which covenant he made with Abraham, and his oath unto Isaac; and confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant: saying, unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, the lot of your inheritance. Psa. cv. 8-11. This faith in God's oath-confirmed promises concerning the land, and the consequent blessing of the nations has ever been the faith that has been well-pleasing unto God. Zacharias prophesied, saying, "Blessed be the God of Israel; for he hath visited and redeemed his people, and hath raised up an horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David; * * * To perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and to remember his holy covenant; the oath which he sware to our father Abraham." Luke i. 67-73.

There was absolutely no shaking of the faith of Abraham and his associates in these promises. When called upon to meet death, their faith was still firm." These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth." This necessitated a resurrection to life eternal, and illustrates how we are to come into possession of the "divine nature," through these "exceeding great and precious promises," spoken of by Peter. An eternal life is required in order that we possess an eternal inheritance. "And we desire that every one of you do show the same diligence to the full assurance of hope unto the end: that ye be not slothful, but followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises." Heb. vi. 11. 12. How are the promises to be inherited? "Through faith and patience." What faith? "Walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham." Rom. iv. 12. No other will answer. It must be the genuine Abrahamic faith, then Abraham becomes our father, and we his children, and hence legal heirs to his estate. Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed; not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham; who is the father of us all." Rom. iv. 16.

Those who are strangers to the Abrahamic covenants of promise are still unsaved. "Wherefore remember, that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh. * * * that at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world." Eph. ii. 11. 12. Now the only possible way to become "Abraham's seed" is to embrace the Abrahamic faith, and then unite yourself to Christ. "And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Gal. iii. 29. "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ," (ver. 27) and none others have "put on Christ," and are still outside of the ark of safety.

Come to Christ.

No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him: and I will raise him up at the last day. John vi. 44.

Here we have the Savior's own words for the above statement. No man can come to me.

Let us read Romans i. 15-16. "So as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the Gospel to you that are at Rome also."

16th, verse. "For I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek."

What is the power that draws the cars on our railroads? Well, you say it is the engine with the steam up that draws the cars. That is right. Well, what draws our wagons, buggies and carriages? You say horses. That is right. Now what is the power that draws men to Christ? You say the Gospel of Christ. What is the Gospel of Christ? It is Good News or Glad Tidings of a coming kingdom. The same Gospel preached for three and one-half years by Christ while here upon the earth.

Matt. iv. 23. "And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people."

Read Matt. ix. 35: xxiv. 14. What kingdom did Jesus have reference to? The kingdom of Great Britain, France, or Spain? No, the kingdom of God. Read Mark i. 14. "Now after that John was put into prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom of God. So this settles the question with every thinking person what the Gospel of Christ is, that is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. It is the Gospel of the Kingdom of God.

What is the Gospel of the kingdom to be preached for? For a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come. Matt. xxiv. 14. Jesus selected twelve men to go and preach this Gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be condemned. Not chosen. Mark xvi. 15, 16. But first before Christ went away, he selected these twelve men and gave them power to remit sin or to retain sin, as you find in Matt. xvi. 18-20. In verse 18 we read, "Upon this Rock I will build my church." Verse 19. "Whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven." John xiv. 26. "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Spirit whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." Unto who? You twelve whom I have chosen. What about these twelve chosen men? See John xx. 19. to end of the chapter, especially 21 23. "Whose sins ye remit, they are remitted. Whosoever sins ye retain, they are retained." Next we read Acts i. 6 11. They did not have this power as yet, but they should receive power, 8th verse.

We will go to Luke xxiv. 45. "Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures." They have not that power as yet. 47th verse. "And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. When will they get this power? 49th verse.

"And behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endowed with power from on high." Keep this one thing in view. Whosoever sins ye remit they are remitted unto them. Whosoever sins ye retain they are retained. Well now we imagine ourselves at Jerusalem, all in one place waiting for the promise. The Holy Spirit. Here it has come. Acts ii. 22, to the end, especially 22 to the 39. Verse 22. "Ye men of Israel, hear these words; Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs, which he did by him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know." Read on till you come to the 37th verse. "Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and the rest of the Apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Now what did Peter tell them to do? Did Peter say, brethren, now select a hymn and we will open the door of the church, and if there is one soul here that wants to join the church, while they sing let him come forward and we will take them into the church? Now what did Christ say in our text? "No man can come to me except the Father which hath sent me draw him, and I will raise him up at the last day." Who draws him to the Father? How draw him? By preaching the Gospel of Christ. I find that a lively hymn sometimes draws men and women to the beautiful songs sung, and to the one that sings them instead of by the Gospel of Christ. I know that it has been the case with me. I sang too many into the water and they did not know what they were baptized for.

Well to come back to Pentecost. We now have a starting point. Let us keep in line, not add to, or take from, for remember that there is only the one Gospel that saves, and that is the one preached by Jesus Christ and his twelve chosen ones all others are a fraud, so let us not add to or take from. Next there is salvation in no other name.

Verse 38. "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." How is that? The Gospel was preached, and it is the power of God. They wanted to know what to do. Peter tells them in order that their sins might be remitted. Now what do we know about the pentecost sermon? Only what we can read in the 2nd chapter of the Acts of the apostles. How many joined the church on that day? 41st verse. "The same day there were added about three thousand souls. We go to Samaria as repentence and remission of sins should be preached among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. Acts viii. 5-22. Verse 12. "But when they believed Phillip, preaching the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ they were baptized both men and women. In what name only were they baptized? In the name Lord Jesus. Now turn to Acts iv. 12. "Neither is there salvation in any other. For there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved. Now we will go to the house of Cornelius, Acts xi. 14. who shall tell thee words whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved. Acts x. 34. Read on to the 38th verse. The same word of the kingdom preached by Christ. Verse 47. "Can any man forbid water?" 48. "And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus." Now let us go to Ephesus. Paul preached to them, Acts xix. 1 to 7. 5th verse. "When they heard this they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. Now we can see how those chosen men conducted their meetings let us try to follow in their steps. Let us educate men as we should. Let us teach them the things concerning the kingdom, as well as the name, and that the promise is to Abraham and his seed, which is Christ. Gal. iii. 16. That God is visiting the Gentiles to take out of them a bride. So all that hear the Gospel and believe and are baptized into Christ, become Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise. In accepting this one Gospel, we need not to open the doors of the church, as Christ has opened it and no man shutteth. Christ is the door. He is also the way and the truth. If this does not find its way into the waste basket, I will write again and show what God designs to do with Christ's Bride in the ages to come. It is high time for the Bride to make herself ready, for the Lord will come soon, and those that are ready will go into the marriage supper of the Lamb. Pray for me that I may escape those things that are coming upon the earth.

Dear Restitution:

I am now at Desoto, Jefferson Co. Mo. I left home the 4th of April. My first stop was at my daughter's near Crawfordsville, Ind. Mrs. J. A. Zachary's. Had a good visit but had no meetings. The 6th of April I went to Paris, Ill. Five miles southwest of Paris is where my daughter Azorah M. Scroggs live. There I intended to have a two weeks meeting, but the first night I became overheated. The house was quite full, and the night was very hot. I took cold, which settled in my throat, and by Sunday afternoon I got so bad that I could only speak in a whisper, and that continued until Tuesday, but I was not able to preach until the next Sunday, and I am still hoarse, but am improving some.

From Paris I went to Ingraham, (or near there) and commenced meeting in the neighborhood of Brethren Rogers, Woods, and Chambers. Commenced meeting on Friday night. The house was large, and we had a good turnout all the time, and on Sunday night the house was as full as could be seated, and at the close of this meeting I gave an invitation, and two came forward, mother, and daughter, who confessed that they believed the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ. On Monday morning we went to the water and I buried mother and daughter in baptism, when the oldest son came and demanded baptism. So there was three that obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine delivered. This meeting was short, but it was one of rejoicing. Brother Woods said to me, "I got more out of this meeting than I expected, wife, daughter, son." The little band there are determined. They meet nearly every Sunday for meeting of some kind. I will write again when through here.

The business relative to the next Annual Conference, and tent work requires the attendance of all the brethren. The signs that foretell "His glorious appearing" are fast culminating. That day may be nearer than we think. "Therefore, beloved, seeing ye look for such things, be ye diligent, that ye may be found of him in peace without spot and blameless."

Conference Report.

The Church of God, assembled in conference, at Otto, Cowley Co. Kansas.

Brother Oliver spoke to a small but attentive audience on Friday night. On Saturday afternoon we had a business meeting.

Bro. Henry Barnard was chosen treasurer of the Evangelistic Fund of Kansas, but the choice of evangelist was left over until the next conference, a notice of which will be given in due time.

Brother Oliver was the only speaker present. He reports his labors for the last quarter as follows: Visited the Church near Oxford, three times and delivered twelve discourses and received $10.00, expenses, $6.73.

Visited Bitter Creek three times, delivered ten discourses, and received $37.00, expenses $3.04.

Visited Argonia three times, delivered nine discourses, received $4.50, expenses $3.00.

Delivered twelve discourses in and near Attica.

We had a good meeting all through. The Brethren are alive in the cause of the Master. We hope to meet them all again, if not in this world, in the kingdom to come.

Editor Restitution:

I am still trying to walk in newness of life in that straight and narrow way, and though my feet have not been made fast in the stocks as was Paul and Silas yet I have been called a soul-sleeper and a man with an outlandish belief because I teach that we do not go to heaven at death, nor get our reward until the resurrection. It seems to me if there ever was a man that was prepared to go to heaven at death it was Hezekiah, king of Judah, who walked before the Lord in truth, and with a perfect heart, and done that which was good in his sight, and yet he turned his face to the wall and wept sore, not at the thought of going to heaven, but because he would not see the Lord in the land of the living, nor behold man no more with the inhabitants of the world but would go down to the gates of the grave. The grave cannot praise thee, for the dead know not anything, nor any that go down in silence, their love and their hatred and their envy. Yea, and even their thoughts are perished. But the Lord saw his tears, heard his prayer and added to his days fifteen years. Hear what he says now. Thou hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption. Quite a different place from heaven I think. I conclude therefore that like David he has not yet ascended into the heavens. I read in Psalm xxii. 29, where that none can keep alive his own soul. Now if the soul is immortal and cannot die, then it should read none can kill his own soul. David says in Psalm cxvi. 8, for thou hast delivered my soul from death which could not be the case if it were immortal.

Acts iii. 22, 23, Moses truly said unto the fathers, a prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me: him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you, and it shall come to pass that every soul which will not hear that prophet shall be destroyed from among the people, and the first chapter of Second Thess. tells the nature of that destruction, the time when executed and the cause, and it was because they obeyed not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, and received not the love of the truth that they might be saved. James v. 20, tells us how a soul is saved from death. When the sinner is converted from the error of his ways, he will put off the old man with his deeds, and put on the new man which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him, he will then be a son by adoption and an heir with Abraham of the same promise, and if he walks in newness of life, and endures unto the end, he will be saved, and Christ will raise him up at the last day, and he will have part in the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power. Let us give thanks unto God, and wait for his Son from heaven. But if we fall asleep before he comes may we awake in his likeness is my prayer.

The John Bull Train.

We acknowledge an invitation given by the Pennsylvania Rail Road Company to accompany the party of road officials and press men who were with the John Bull train which passed through Plymouth April 22. The old engine and coaches make a genuine curiosity, but the accompanying modern locomotive and cars, show the advancement in invention of the past fifty years, and constitutes a far greater curiosity to our mind.

The train was inspected by thousands of people along the line, stops being made to enable all to see. We give a part of the history of this historic train, which was run under its own steam, the entire distance.

The original John Bull locomotive and two fifty-seven-year-old passenger coaches of the old Camden and Amboy Railroad left the East April 17, for Chicago, where the train will form a conspicuous part of the Pennsylvania Railroad's great exhibit.

The history of the locomotive dates back to a period when locomotion by steam was in the earliest age of experimentalism. For several years previous to 1830 experiments attended with more or less success had been made in England with locomotives to be propelled by steam. In 1830 the "Planet," constructed by George Stephenson, was the best example of a machine of this character, and after witnessing a trial of its powers in 1830, Mr. Robert L. Stevens, the founder of the Camden and Amboy Railroad, placed an order with Stephenson to build an engine on the same lines for shipment to this country. This engine, christened "John Bull" after its arrival in America, was completed in May 1831, and shipped to Philadelphia, where it arrived in August of the same year.

Between 1831 and 1836 the John Bull underwent considerable modification, as changes suggested themselves to the watchful eyes of the American mechanics, and in the latter year the engine was in active service on the Camden and Amboy road just as she appears today. During the more than half century of life the sturdy old machine suffered many vicissitudes of fortune. After years of admirable service, the modern machinist succeeded in producing improvements which relegated the old engine to the side track, and it was stored away in Bordentown for a number of years. In 1876 it was rescued from the oblivion which was enveloping it in the quiet Jersey town and exhibited at the Philadelphia Centennial, where it attracted much attention. Its next public appearance was at the Chicago Exposition of Railway Appliances, in 1883, and, then being presented to the United States Government by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, it has since been a notable feature of the world of curiosities collected in the National Museum at Washington. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company through Mr. Theo. N. Ely, Chief of Motive Power, who has charge of the company's exhibit, has borrowed it from its present owners to place on exhibition at the company's building at the World's Columbian Exposition.

The John Bull weighs twenty-two thousand pounds, exclusive of the tender, and thirty-two thousand two hundred including the tender. The ordinary standard passenger locomotive in use on the Pennsylvania Railroad at the present time weighs one hundred and seventy-six thousand pounds, or more than five times as much as its original predecessor.

Hardly less unique than the locomotive itself are the passenger coaches of this historical train. Some twenty-five years ago a farmer near South Amboy bought one of the discarded coaches of the old Camden and Amboy Railroad. He removed it from its trucks, and, planted it on posts in the ground, converted it into a chicken coop. It served in this capacity until a few months ago, when a representative of the Pennsylvania Railroad, looking for relics, happened upon it, and entered into negotiations for its purchase. The thrifty farmer, realizing that lapse of time had endowed his hennery with increased value, demanded a price which represented compound interest on the original purchase-money, but the matter was adjusted, and the passenger coach of fifty years ago transformed into a chicken coop is once more fixed upon its trucks and will go to Chicago as a part of the John Bull train. After its recovery the coach was refitted and reupholstered, so that it appears now in all the prestine glory of its palmy days. The history of the other coach is not quite so romantic. It was found some years ago in a lumber yard in a New Jersey town among a mass of rubbish, and quietly tucked away in the Meadows shops by a farsighted official of the company, who foresaw that such an occasion as this would bring it into requisition some day.

Trains on the Nickel Plate Road now arrive at and depart from the new passenger depot, corner Clark and Twelfth Streets, Chicago. The Chicago Ticket Office is at No. 199 Clark Street, in the heart of the business portion of the city. On and after April 25th, agents of the Nickel Plate Road will sell excursion tickets to the World's Fair at very low rates, good returning to November 5th, inclusive. The shortest, best, and cheapest route to the Fair is the Nickel Plate.

Death.

What an event is death, and how reluctant we are to meet it. It is very difficult for us to become so reconciled to it that we can sing, "Ah, lovely appearance of death!" It is one of the most dreaded foes, and the Bible talks of it as an enemy, in exact accord with the facts of nature. Poets who not only seem licensed to break the laws of language, but sometimes give a strange coloring to the truth, may playfully treat the subject with smiles, and call death a friend, and says he wears a lovely appearance, but when his footsteps are heard on the threshold of their own door, or he enters their own family, bearing away some almost idolized member, it is then no "lovely appearance," but "grim monster." The facts and poetical theory do not correspond, but the Bible and facts harmonize.

The Bible says, "Death came by sin," thus intimating that if there had been no sin there would have been no death. What a cruel monster sin is, bringing death to our race, sorrow and degradation to our world! Death is a conquered foe. Our Lord triumphed over him. The struggle was fierce, but short. Three days and nights man's Redeemer lay in his embrace, but he could hold him no longer. The Savior of the world triumphed and death was conquered. His ultimate destruction is now determined, and he only waits the hour of execution. What a day of triumphant joy that will be to the church of Christ, when death, the last enemy, is destroyed. How exultingly will they then sing, "O death where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" All tears will then be wiped away, and pain and sorrow will be no more.

Saint of God take courage, thy long-dreaded foe is soon to end his reign of terror, and his blighting work of sorrow be forever wiped away. No more can he then lay his icy hand upon thee or plunge his deadly dagger into thine heart. A stronger than he will then hold sway, and the world will be ever bright with life and joy. Cheer up, the day is at hand.—Cross.

Keep Your Own Field.

What wonderful power is possessed by a man who has in his hands seed with which to sow a waiting field. His act seems little, indeed, a mere swinging forth of his hand with loosened grasp, that the kernels of grain may scatter through between his fingers and fall. But there is a waiting and ministering earth beneath the seed to receive and nourish it. There are sunshine and air and clouds above to minister to it. There is a providence and a power of God enlisted for its growth and maturity, and the result is that the field becomes golden with a precious harvest. It is simple, human sowing which paints the brown field golden, and fills the granaries and spreads the tables of the people. But it is human service joined on to divine service and employing divinely furnished instrumentalities.

Every husbandman is a worker with God. But there are more important fields to sow than these, and more important seed to cast abroad. "The seed is the Word of God." Human minds and hearts are the soil in which it is to be sown. Alas, that any such soil should be hardened by the constant tramp of worldliness and selfishness, giving to Satan all the seed of truth. Alas, that any should be stony, so shallow of earth as to give only a lying promise of harvest.

The Thief on the Cross.

This is the title of a tract that needs no introduction, having been printed in this paper substantially as it appears in the tract. Written by M. Joblin. The design has been to issue this work as cheaply as possible, and sell it as near cost as can be. It makes 16 pages, and the price is placed at one cent each in quantities, the buyer to pay postage. The postage and wrapper on 100 cost about 20 cents, so that $1.20 pays for 100 postpaid. Single copy 5 cents, 25 copies 30 cents, 50 copies 60 cents. For any quantity above 25, at rate of 1 cent each with an additional charge of 20 cents per hundred for postage.

Conference Call.

"Rally once again." The time for another "Grand Army" reunion has almost reached us again. "Occupy until I come" is the grand motto and it should be emblazoned upon the escutcheon of every volunteer in the ranks. Can we meet this watchword with the echoing answer, "Here am I, use me for the Master's service." If so rally one and all, at this yearly conference to be held at the old post, in Dutton, Kent Co. Michigan. Beginning Thursday evening, June 1st, and lasting over Sunday.

The army of occupation until the King shall come, is not as full as it ought to be, and at this yearly gathering we hope to see many volunteers added to its ranks.

The Captain of our salvation has not yet called for a draft to be made, but he has called for willing workers to hurry to the front and work. Work until he comes. Who will be here to help sound out the clarion notes of the coming King Immanuel, and who of the already enlisted will hurry to the reserve in songs of praise, in words of comforting exhortation, sympathy, love, who will come who loves the cause of truth more than popularity or dress, or gaiety, or pleasure? They are the ones who will help gain recruits for the Kingdom. Come, come to work for that object.

Dutton is on the M. C. R. R. ten miles southeast of Grand Rapids. Trains reach here from Grand Rapids at 1 40 P. M. 5 40 P. M. and 11 30 evening. From the south they reach here at 5 45 A. M. 9 30 A. M. 12 50 P. M. and 9 30 P. M.

M. A. Woodward, Sec'y.

Conference Notice.

The annual conference of the churches of God of the Abrahamic faith in Iowa, will meet at Clarkesville, Butler Co. Iowa, June the 2nd, 1893, and continue over two Sundays. The large audience tent and a half dozen or more small or living tents will be ready to accommodate those who come. And as the preaching brethren are always ready to make any sacrifice to be present, and labor for the interest of the meeting and the good of all, we hope and earnestly entreat all who have an interest in the cause of the Master and are looking for his soon coming to make a sacrifice also if necessary to be at this meeting, for we are persuaded that while all mean to be steadfast, yet there is an ominous tendency to falling away among all Christian societies that will precede his coming. Then let us, as many as can possibly do so, go to this meeting, determined to make it a means of filling our lamps with that oil that will throw light along the way of the bridegroom's approach, so that if we slumber and sleep before his arrival we will be ready when the final cry is sounded to go out to meet him, and go in with him to the wedding, and not have the door shut upon us while we go to seek for light. He may be nearer than we think.

Lodie Palmer, Sec.

A man may go through all the institutions of learning in the world to prepare for the work of soul saving, but unless he goes through God's college, his work won't stand in the judgment day.

Contingent Fund.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to The Restitution office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

Chicago City Ticket Office of the Nickel Plate Road.

The management of the Nickel Plate Road announce from April 1st, their City Ticket Office in Chicago is located at No. 199 Clark Street, which is between Adams Street and Monroe Street and situated on the east side of Clark Street, less than a block north of the Post Office, where patrons of the Nickel Plate Road who visit Chicago during the World's Fair are cordially invited to have their mail addressed to them in care of the City Ticket Agent of the Nickel Plate. As this location is in the heart of the business portion of Chicago and very convenient to the principal hotels, public buildings and places of amusement, this invitation will doubtless be appreciated by the public. Look out for our reduced rate announcements and other facts of interest to those expecting to visit the World's Columbian Exposition.

Almost any map of the United States shows the location of Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Louisville, and other large cities. From each of the three cities named draw a straight line to Chicago. The line drawn from Pittsburgh will touch at Salem, Alliance, Canton, Massillon, Wooster, Mansfield, Crestline, Bucyrus, Lima and Van Wert, Ohio: Ft. Wayne, Columbia City, Warsaw, Plymouth and Valparaiso, Ind. That from Cincinnati will traverse a [illegible] portion of the southwestern part of Ohio and run the [illegible] length of Indiana from southeast to northwest, touching at [illegible] and Eaton, Ohio; Richmond, Hagerstown, New Castle, Anderson, Elwood, Kokomo, Logansport, Winamac, Crown Point, Ind. The line from Louisville will pass through the entire length of the [illegible] State and in its course would touch Columbus, Franklin, Indianapolis and Logansport. A line drawn from Pittsburgh through Columbus, Ohio, to Chicago would incline slightly to the southward and would pass through Steubenville, Coshocton, Newark, Urbana and Piqua, Ohio; Union City, Hartford, Marion, and Logansport, Ind., and run direct from those points to the World's Fair site. A line from Madison, Ind., would also pass through Indianapolis and Logansport in its direct course to Chicago.

Such lines on the map would indicate the routes to the World's Fair described by the Pennsylvania Lines, which traverse the populous portions of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana, leading direct from Pittsburgh, the natural gateway from the East, and in a straight course from Cincinnati and Louisville, the natural gateways of the South, to the World's Fair City.

Beginning with April 25th, World's Fair Excursion tickets to Chicago will be sold from all ticket stations on the Pennsylvania Lines. The going coupon will be valid from the day of purchase until October 30th, and the return coupon will be good for return passage up to and including November 5th. The sale of these tickets will continue daily until October 30th, and will be governed by consistent reductions in fare. Both the going and the return coupons will be valid for continuous passage only. No stopover allowed. Any ticket agent of the Pennsylvania Lines will cheerfully furnish detailed information regarding rates, time of trains, etc.

The recent extensive improvements on the Pennsylvania Lines, for the event in question, make them the desirable thoroughfares to Chicago from the territory traversed by them. The through time from every station is exceptionally fast and the first-class train service affords every desired convenience for an enjoyable trip.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.

VOL. XLII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAY 10, 1893. NO. 18.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Tomorrow.

A shining isle in a stormy sea,
We seek it ever with smiles and sighs;
To-day is sad. In the island To-be [illegible] Tomorrow lies.

We mocked [illegible] ful yesterday;
[illegible]
[illegible] far away,
It [illegible] that we called to-day.

"With gifts of fate we cannot tire gain.
Life is a failure." Be still, my heart!
To-day—the [illegible] trouble, the pain;
Tomorrow—fruition, the perfect part.

Time [illegible] from our eyes with tender touch
[illegible] the backs of gold;
It [illegible] away the tints of youth,
Till we say, "Tomorrow we shall be old."

We think of the countries far and fair,
All free forever from blight and frost;
Where [illegible] on to the holy air,
We [illegible] again the youth we had lost.

I will still go on [illegible] the beloved task,
That [illegible] from thy weary hand,—
Thy crown for Another? "Why?" you ask,
Thou'lt wake to-morrow and understand.

Nothing is finished. [illegible] to the [illegible]
[illegible] life's dear brief day
Is a little fragment, that is all,
Of [illegible] that waits in the far away.

Why are we sorry, we shall divine
When the life that is perfect holds its sway
When [illegible] thine, and mine,
And Tomorrow melts in a God's Today.

Current Events and Sundry Thoughts.

It is hardly possible in the present condition of things for all men to see and think alike, and yet why should they differ on plainly written statements as found in the Bible is doubtless a mystery to many. I suppose men's doctrinal differences may in some cases be attributed to the same causes, as their facial differences. It is not however a very great mystery when we have given the matter due thought. Sometimes I think I am believing less, and doubting more continually. I do not mean that I am losing confidence in the revealed word, but rather experiencing disappointment in what men have said, and still say the word teaches. I suppose all Bible-students have their troubles. It is a great trial to be under the necessity of reconciling an unreasonable theological dogma with the Scriptures, when I am unable to reconcile my own judgment. It is hard to persuade one's self to believe what his own reason positively refuses to entertain.

A translation of 1 Pet. ii. 2, as given by Professor Gardner will illustrate my idea, "As unborn infants desire the rational milk of the word," etc. Now this translation gets me into trouble, for I cannot comprehend how an unborn infant can desire anything. Sucklings desire milk, but the unborn are in no sense sucklings. In nature birth precedes nourishment and growth by milk. If Peter employs the natural to illustrate the Spiritual, it baffles my reason to see how he could use the word unborn. I can see how the new born, and the unweaned babe thrives on milk. I confess my inability to apprehend how the apostle could use words out of harmony with, yea contradictory of nature's law, and yet make use of that law to illustrate the law of spiritual growth, as if one resembled the other in its operation. Here is my trouble. I do not see that it helps the matter, to carry the birth forward to the resurrection,—the burden is still unremoved.

Translators often help us out of trouble and Prof. Gardner's not the least, but in this instance it seems to me he discourages with darkness, where light even is too strongly fortified in the context to be dislodged. I make no attempt at criticism. It would not be becoming in me to criticise one acknowledged to be an expert and a teacher of Greek. I can only judge his work in the light of reason. I have read his versions with pleasure but in the above text he burdens my faith with more than it is able to bear.

Next the expositor claims my attention for he gets me into deeper waters of trouble than does the translator. I quote from a little tract as follows, "Before Adam and his family could be released from the death sentence by a resurrection, the life of another man not under the sentence had to be paid as its corresponding price, that God might be just and justifying and accepting back to harmony and life all who believe in Jesus and born unto God in his name."

The foregoing quotation suggests a few thoughts. 1. How could the other man not under sentence of death die? Did Jehovah kill him? Is it any less a crime for God to murder than for man? I put it in this way in order to call the reader's attention to the idea that a good man not under sentence of death had to be killed in order to save the guilty. Now how can you reconcile such an idea with your own reason and judgment. If I felt compelled to believe that a good man had to die instead of a bad one, that is in order to save the guilty from death, I should feel that the orthodox hell of mental torture, was here in very deed.

The Father kills Jesus a harmless and undefiled man, in order to raise from the dead worthless sinners. Moreover this he had to do in order to be just. I confess my inability to see any thing like the shadow of justice in killing the innocent to save the guilty.

Is it any wonder that men, intelligent men, are turning away from religion and the Bible in disgust? What would you think of a parent who, provoked by a disobedient child, metes out justice by chastising his obedient son? Such a man would not be tolerated in any civilized community. But we are asked to believe that God commits an act of injustice in order to be just. In order to be just to the guilty, and to justify sinners he visits the penalty of transgressed law upon the innocent. Believe it ye who can, nay I will not say believe, for no man in his right mind can seriously believe that God is unjust.

Again if Jesus was not under sentence of death how could he die —in fact why should he die at all? We would conclude that if any man could be exempt from death it is one who not under its sentence, was in addition thereto fortified by a perfect obedience under trial.

Now Jesus was holy, harmless and undefiled. Why then did he die? This is the real—the all-important question to answer regardless of any speculative theory as to the resurrection of the Adamic family. This question must be answered intelligently and Scripturally, before any theory as to resurrection can be formulated with certainty. It will not do to reason from false premises. If Jesus in the days of his flesh was not under sentence of death, then he never died, and never rose from the dead, and so all theories as to the resurrection comes to naught. O yes, says one "he died the just for the unjust." There you are again killing a good man, in the place of one who deserves death. You make God kill a man who is entitled to live, in order to save one who has by transgression forfeited all right to life. If that is your idea of justice and goodness, it is certainly one you would not practice yourself, nor tolerate in your neighbor.

If Adam had not transgressed, he would not have come under the sentence of death. No, very well, then he never would have died. So long as Adam was free from the death sentence he was exempt from death. Even so with Jesus if he had not been under sentence of death, he had never tasted the bitter cup.

But how says one did Jesus come under that sentence? I answer by virtue of his heritage in Adam. Adam could not transmit other than a condemned nature, seeing that all were in his loins when he sinned. Mary the mother of Jesus was a daughter of Adam, and under the Edenic sentence of sin and death. Jesus as the Son of Mary inherited her nature, and therefore came under the same sentence. How then I ask could he die as a substitute for others? He could not, and did not. Paul says "God sent forth his Son made of a woman, made under the law." Hence as he says in another place he appeared in the likeness of sin's flesh." That is in a nature like that that had sinned. Again he says "that inasmuch as the children were partakers of flesh and blood he also partook of the same, or laid hold of the same."

The Scriptures are plain, and explicit as to the nature of Jesus. It is to my mind almost unaccountable to see how men can conclude that Jesus was not under the Adamic sentence of sin. Then he must have been a sinner says one. No, not in character, for his obedience was perfect or made perfect through suffering. His nature was the Adamic flesh of sin, but his character was free from sin and its condemnation.

He was obedient unto death and therefore death could not hold him a prisoner. Appearing in a condemned nature he necessarily had to die, not for but on account of the unjust. Himself worthy of life, nevertheless had to die, not on account of his own transgression, but on the account of Adam's transgression. In laying hold of our nature he tasted death for us all because our nature was his nature, and when that nature was nailed to the cross, he bore our nature, and hence our sins to the tree.

The sin of the world was not metaphorically placed upon or transferred to Jesus and he was put to death in our stead as a sacrifice to appease the wrath of God against the guilty, but on the contrary he laid hold of our nature, and condemned sin in the flesh, not by dying but by the righteousness of obedience to his Father's will. Being under condemnation on account of the disobedience of one he had to die, in order to be made free from that condemnation. In working out his own salvation, he made a way of escape for all that are in him. Death came by the disobedience of Adam; but resurrection from the dead, or out from among the dead came by the obedience of the second man, the Lord Jesus. Adam the unjust, is the head of a death stricken world, but Jesus is the resurrected and living head and creator of the world to come. "It is Jesus that died, yea rather that is risen again" says Paul. He that is dead is free from sin, and in that Jesus died, he died on account of sin once, but death could not hold him, seeing that his obedience entitled him to life, therefore God raised him out of the death state to die no more. Jesus in dying on account of us, also died for himself, that is for the joy or life that was set before him "he endured the cross despising the shame."

The blood of Jesus is efficacious only to those who become partakers in his death, and his righteousness as well. His blood cleanseth from all sin because the cleansed ones lay hold of his righteousness. He at first laid hold of us, we in turn must lay hold of him. It will not do to form a conclusion and then build your premise to suit it. Lay the foundation first according to the Scriptures, and then your building will not be out of all proportion to your foundation. Reason forward, not backward. All in Adam die, even so all in Christ are made alive,—not simply made alive, but immortalized, being in him they are partakers of his nature. Every body however is not in Christ, that is they are not partakers of his righteousness and will not therefore taste the blessing of eternal life.

Mankind are in Adam by birth and to get into Christ they must be born again. And not only so but they must abide in him if they desire to experience the joy of resurrection from among the dead.

Again Paul says Jesus partook or laid hold of Adamic flesh and blood, that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil." Here we are in the deep waters of trouble again. How was it possible for Jesus in dying to destroy an immortal devil? In a work entitled "Facts and theories concerning a future life," the author boldly assumes that the devil is a fallen angel whose rebellion in heaven antedates the days of Adam's sojourn in Eden. It makes one's head swim to think of it. The idea that Deity shared existence with one who is destined to be an everlasting enemy to his government, and the cause of eternal discord.

Did Paul have the orthodox conception of the devil? If so how could they imagine that a man of flesh and blood could defeat and destroy him? He has, moreover, the power of death, and can slay right and left, whomsoever he will. He must have killed Jesus, because he has the power of death. In fact he must do all the killing. Shall we return to polytheism and acknowledge that the universe is divided and governed by two rival gods, ever at war with each other, but neither is strong enough to destroy the other. O when will men get rid of the relics of paganism? How long in the presence of an open Bible until the human intellect shall be free from the distressing shadow of superstition? How long? Not until the end of Gentilism. It is refreshing to know the end will come.

GEO. MOYER.

The Called and the Sent.

"He whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God."—John iii. 34.

The design I have in view in writing upon this subject is to call the reader's attention to the importance of hearing the word of the Lord, as revealed through his authorized messengers. There are now, and have been in all past ages, men who have run before they were sent, and who have spoken or prophesied in the name of the Lord, by whom he sent no message. Such persons have incurred his displeasure, and are severely denounced by him. He says of them "I have not sent these prophets, yet they ran; I have not spoken to them, yet they prophesied. But if they had stood in my counsel, and had caused my people to hear my words, then they should have turned them from their evil way, and from the evil of their doings." Jer. xxiii. 21, 22. These words were spoken through Jeremiah to a class of men who claimed to be prophets speaking the Lord's words to Israel. It was a prophesy directly addressed to those who told lies in the name of the Lord. "Behold, I am against the prophets, saith the Lord, that use their tongues, and say He saith. Behold, I am against them that prophesy false dreams saith the Lord, and do tell them, and cause my people to err by their lies, and by their lightness; yet I sent them not, nor commanded them: therefore they shall not profit this people at all, saith the Lord," verses 31, 32. They spoke their own words, and acted without authority. The people were deceived by them, and caused to err, because they "perverted the words of the living God."

As it was then, when Israel dwelt in their own land, so is it now in these days, "Many false prophets are gone out into the world," 1 John iv. 1; and the apostle recommends the believers to test these "spirits whether they are of God." He gives us two very plain rules by which to try them.

1. These false prophets, he says, "are of the world; therefore speak they of the world, and the world heareth them."

2. Of the apostles, or sent ones, he says, "We are of God; he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us. Hereby know we the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error." verses 5, 6.

Jehovah has always made known his will through authorized agents. In former times it was by prophets, in the last days through his Son; and then by those who heard him. Heb. i. 1; ii. 3, 4. All of his agents were called and sent by him; and were also qualified to prove their authority and mission to those to whom they were sent. When Moses was sent unto the children of Israel and Pharaoh, he was qualified to perform miracles to prove that Jehovah had sent him; and when Moses and Aaron had gathered together the elders of Israel, and spoken the words of the Lord, confirmed by the signs, in the presence of the people, they believed, bowed their heads and worshipped. Exod. iv. The Lord through Moses gave a test by which the people might know a true prophet. "The prophet which shall presume to speak a word in my name which I have not commanded him to speak, or shall presume to speak in the name of other gods, even that prophet shall die. And if thou shalt say in thine heart, how shall we know the word which the Lord hath not spoken?

When a prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord, if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the Lord hath not spoken, but the prophet hath spoken it presumptuously: thou shalt not be afraid of him." Deut. xviii. 20-22. In order to see how strict and jealous Jehovah is of his word, read the whole of Jeremiah xxviii, where the reader will see a remarkable illustration of this test given by Moses. Jeremiah had prophesied that the whole land should be a desolation, and its inhabitants serve the king of Babylon for seventy years. Hananiah, spoke to Jeremiah in the name of the Lord, in the presence of the priests and people, that within two years, the yoke of the king of Babylon should be broken, that Jeconiah, king of Judah, with all the captives of Judah, and all the vessels of the Lord's house, would be brought back again to Jerusalem. But Jehovah sent Jeremiah to Hananiah to say "The Lord hath not sent thee; but thou makest this people to trust in a lie. * * * This year thou shalt die, because thou hast taught rebellion against the Lord. So Hananiah the prophet died the same year in the seventh month." Not only Jeremiah, but Isaiah, Ezekiel, Micah, Zephaniah, etc., were sent to them by the Lord God, "but they mocked the messengers of God, and misused his prophets, until the wrath of the Lord arose against his people, till there was no remedy." 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16; Neh. ix. 30.

Jesus well illustrated the attitude of the sons of Israel towards their God and his servants, by the parable of the vineyard in Matt. xxi. 33 to the end of the chapter. When the time of fruit drew near, and the householder expected to obtain some benefit from his vineyard, he sent his servants that they might receive the fruits. But they beat, stoned, and killed them; and the second lot of servants were treated in like manner. Then he sent his son, saying, they will reverence my son. But here see the culmination of wickedness in the conspiracy of the husbandmen, to kill the heir, and appropriate the vineyard. The Jews were these wicked men who killed the heir. God sent his Son to them with a message of peace, and the offer of salvation. He spoke the words of God, and performed the works of his Father in their midst. Never before were such loving words spoken, or such wonderful works of mercy and love done. "The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached unto them. And blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in me." Matt. xi. 5, 6. Yet notwithstanding all this, they filled up the measure of their fathers, "who killed both the Lord Jesus, and their own prophets, and persecuted us, (the apostles,) and they please not God, and are contrary to all men: forbidding us to speak unto the Gentiles that they might be saved, to fill up their sins alway: for the wrath is come upon them to the uttermost." 1 Thess. ii. 15, 16. This was fulfilled in that generation, by the destruction of Jerusalem, and the temple, and the dispersion of the nation. Matt. xxiii. 34-39.

The Son of God was his apostle, or sent one. He was fully qualified to prove his mission. And he did prove it by his works. He said, "If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin: but now they have no excuse for their sin." John xv. 22. Again, "if I had not done among them the works which none other man did, they had not had sin." Verse 24. The words he spoke were about the kingdom of God, for he was sent to preach it. Luke iv. 43. That was the burden of his message, for he was anointed to preach the gospel. Luke iv. 18. "And he went throughout every city and village, preaching and showing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God." Luke viii. 1. He invited the poor, the weary, the heavy laden, to come to him to rest. "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls." Matt. xi. 29. He promised the kingdom to the poor in spirit, and those who are persecuted for righteousness sake; and the inheritance of the earth to the meek. Matt. v. 3, 5, 10. And he exhorted his hearers to seek the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, in preference to earthly things, vi. 33. He also offered future life by a resurrection from the dead to all his disciples. John vi. 39, 40; 27, 28.

Jesus called to him twelve disciples, whom he named apostles, and gave them a commission to preach, and power to heal. Then he sent them forth to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, with this message "as ye go preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out demons; freely ye have received, freely give." Matt. x. 1-8; Luke ix. 1-6. These twelve disciples were the called and sent, of that time, to preach the gospel and heal the sick. Afterwards seventy more disciples were called and sent on the same mission, duly qualified. See Luke x. 1-12. This gospel which they preached was before the crucifixion, and was good news about the kingdom of God. Then after the death and resurrection of Christ, being seen by the apostles for forty days, and speaking to them of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God, he sent them out to preach the gospel to every creature, or to all nations; the same glad tidings of the kingdom which they had preached before, with the addition of things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ. But they were to wait at Jerusalem for the promise of the Holy Spirit, by which they would receive power to perform many signs and wonders in confirmation of their word. They waited as commanded; and a few days after, when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and spoke in foreign languages, so that Jews and proselytes of fourteen different countries said, "we do hear them speak in our tongues the wonderful works of God." Acts ii. 1-11. Thus were they qualified to preach the gospel in foreign lands, without the trouble of learning the languages. And they gave the proof of their apostolic office in signs, wonders, and miracles which they did among the people, not in their own power, but in the name of him who called and sent them. See Acts ii. 43; iii. 6 12-16; iv. 9, 10, 29, 30, 33; v. 5, 9, 10, 12 16. And not only the apostles, but also those on whom they laid their hands. For instance, "Stephen, full of faith and power, did great wonders and miracles among the people." vi. 8. Also, Philip, one of the seven deacons at Jerusalem, went down to Samaria, and preached Christ, and his word was confirmed by the miracles which he did. Chap. viii. 5-8. 12, 13.

Another apostle was called to the work of the ministry—Saul of Tarsus, a violent persecutor of the disciples of the Lord. A full account of his call is given in Acts ix. 1-22; xxii. 1-21; xxvi. 9-28. He was a special apostle—"one born out of due time," (1 Cor. xv. 8,)—the apostle of the Gentiles. He claimed to be "an apostle, not from men, nor by a man, but by Jesus Christ, and God the Father, who raised him from the dead." Gal. i. 1. And that the gospel which he was sent to preach, he declares, "I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." Verse 12. Yet it was the same gospel preached by those who preceded him in the work, and abundantly confirmed by the power of the Holy Spirit. See Acts xiv. 3. 8-10; xv. 12; xix. 11, 12; Rom. xv. 18, 19; 2 Cor. xii. 12. Paul was the last one called who was sent to preach the gospel, and he certainly gave proof that he was sent by the miracles he did by the power of the Holy Spirit.

Surely sufficient evidence has been produced from the Word of God to show that all the called and sent of God, whether in the past or present dispensations, were duly qualified to prove their authority.

In view of this, can any minister, or evangelist, or elder, or deacon, produce satisfactory evidence of being "called of God, as was Aaron?" or as was Peter, Paul, Philip, etc., the servants of Jesus Christ? Can they demonstrate that the gospel which they preach is the same as that preached by Jesus, and his apostles? If they should fail in this test, how can they prove their claim to have been called and sent by him to preach a different gospel,—a gospel unauthorized? Paul wrote—"though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you let him be accursed" Gal. i. 8. A fearful responsibility rests upon every one who assumes to speak Jehovah's word. "He that hath my words, let him speak my word faithfully. What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord." Jer. xxiii. 28. "The word of the Lord endureth forever;" and Peter says—"And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you." 1 Peter i. 25. No other gospel is the word of the Lord, or has been "confirmed unto us by them that heard him; God bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Spirit, according to his will." Heb. ii. 3, 4.

There are no commissioned preachers of the gospel now. We can only tell to others what we have learned of the Father concerning the gospel of his Son Jesus Christ, as we read it in his word. We have no authority to say that we are called or sent by him.

All the commission that any one can now claim is from this—"let him that heareth say come." "And let him that is thirsty come. And whosoever will let him take the water of life freely." Rev. xxii. 17.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAY 10, 1893.

The address of any correspondent of this paper will be sent to any one wishing it, on application.

AT the meeting held in this place last Sunday by Bro. N. H. Geiselman, two more young ladies made the good confession, and were immersed and their names added to the list of those who will strive for an entrance into the Kingdom when Jesus comes. Not only are their names on a church record, but the Recording Angel has the names of Clara Goodyear and Grace Kipfer. May they live faithful lives, and hear the "Well done," when the final day comes, and enter into joy unending.

THE rejection of the Army bill by the German Reichstag is the cause of much excitement, an account of which we give in another place. With the renewed light against the Jews, and the onward march of cholera, the earthquakes in different parts of the world, floods and storms, failures of commercial enterprises and banks, all together they make a bad showing for those who claim the world is getting better, and that all things continue as they were. Nothing but the change of dispensation, with the Righteous Judge at the seat of power, can bring order, and make better. May the day soon dawn.

WE may be assured that if we keep ourselves in the love of God, the love of God will keep us.

IF the Saints of God in the future take the Kingdom, it will be because they now by faith take the King.

ACCORDING to popular theology, David has had no pious relatives die, for he said, "Whom have I in heaven but thee."

SOME one has somewhere given this advice: "When one will not hearken to words of peace, it is best to let him make war with silence."

IF we want to keep from murmuring when compassed about with ills, the best way is to reckon up the blessings we enjoy, and thank God for them.

BISHOP Lowth says that "Parable is that kind of allegory which consists of a continued narration of fictitious or accommodated events applied to the illustration of some important truth."

THE Rev. Joseph Wolf once said of a Society in London which had worked fifty years and spent £500,000 to convert the Jews to Christianity, and the result was facetiously stated to be, two Jews and a half.

IT is quite a long time since our contributors have paid much attention to the simple truths first truths—suitable for beginners, that formerly stood out in bold relief. They think perhaps, we have all gotten past that; but it is always in place to learn the alphabet of the Gospel. Passages of Scripture that decided questions for us can be used over and over again for the benefit of those situated as we once were.

"WITHOUT me ye can do nothing;" with these words before us, what folly it is to lay the chastisement of our peace upon ourselves? It seems to be one of the hardest things to realize the full import of the words "By grace ye are saved, through faith;" no sooner have we made a misstep, than we try to heal ourselves by self-inflicted stripes, as if by self-punishment God's wrath could be turned aside. God help us to remember that without Christ we can do nothing to regain God's favor;—remember that he is the all-powerful advocate with the Father—the only mediator between God and man. God meets us in Him, and through Him dispenses favors to the whole family of adopted children. This is the short way, the best way;—nay the only way for frail mortals to maintain their justified standing, confess and forsake wrong doing. God is faithful and just to forgive all who come to him in Jesus' name.

READER, "Today is the day of salvation" for you; tomorrow may never come. "Now is the accepted time."

IT gladdens our hearts, and we doubt not it has the same effect upon many others, to have old, tried and true ones give the trumpet a certain sound. We want every soul who reads THE RESTITUTION to see that the burden of our Message is, that the Gospel of Christ—the Gospel of the Kingdom He preached, is the power of God unto salvation; and we know of no other and believe in no other. Go right on, brethren, and tell the joyful story: there is so much stony ground that it is necessary to scatter seed all the time, and even then the harvest will not be a heavy one.

THE latest revival news comes to us from Wintersville, Ohio by telegraph, stating that the Rev. Mr. Newlin conducted meetings for seven weeks, and the accessions were very large up to a certain date, when the wealthier class stopped being saved, because several inmates of the county infirmary, near by, "went forward" and professed their faith. One lady stated that she didn't "associate with paupers here, and doesn't want to hereafter." What message did the Lord send to John to prove his Messiahship? "The poor have the Gospel preached to them?" Why was this? Because God had decided to chose heirs for the promised kingdom out of that class, (see James ii. 5), if they were only rich in faith. What did Paul say on this subject? He practically told the Corinthians to look at themselves if they wanted proof that not many wise men after the flesh, or many mighty or noble are invited; so that the wealthy people of Wintersville would find little agreeable company in the kingdom of God were they to get there. Of this, however, there is not the slightest probability. The promised kingdom has no charms for them, in the first place, and secondly they reject the divine conditions imposed. "Stopped being saved" because paupers had the presumption to "go forward" with them! Rather be damned with the rich than be saved with the poor! What a commentary upon the hollowness, and hypocrisy of human systems of salvation! And what of the sincere ones? Can they be saved without the Gospel? Will they share a kingdom they will not believe in? Will the Lord of Life force his divine nature of existence upon those who claim immortality independently of Him? Sad considerations, these, but they should fill our hearts with love for the gloriously simple Gospel of Christ and its blessed hope.

Answer to a Correspondent

The following questions have been submitted to us by a subscriber:—

1. Is not Luke xxiii. 43, the only text favoring death-bed repentance?

2. Please give light on the want of sorrow for past sin and absence of prayer for pardon.

3. Also the fact of the thief's knowledge of the kingdom that the disciples did not have after three and a half years instruction.

4. And why so important an event is nowhere else referred to?

5. Should not the foot note in the Diaglott certainly have some bearing on this matter?

1. We do not think this passage favors death-bed repentance. The circumstances were unique throughout. They never existed before, and can never exist again. How then, can it favor death-bed repentance of those differently situated? For instance, baptism was not yet part of the law of pardon, so the thief was justified by faith as was Abraham and all the prophets.

2. We suggest that this is not recorded as an example of the new and living way whereby we must be saved or can be saved. 2ndly we are not sure but he was sorry; the natural inference is that he was. Godly sorrow works repentance; and if he was at first a reviler, a change must have come over him before asking a great favor of Jesus. 3. Does it say we are justified by prayer or by faith? The latter, surely. But faith without works is the same as no faith—nothing comes of it. The evidence of the thief's faith is his effort to secure an interest in the kingdom. Jesus was heir to. Granting his request proves his justification—proves he was reckoned righteous, and therefore pardoned.

By consulting John ii. 25, it will be seen that "Jesus needed not that any man should testify of man." Why? "For he knew what was in man." And Matt. ix. 2, shows the effect of this knowledge. It says: "And behold, they brought to him a man sick of the palsy, (as they lowered him down through the tiles of the roof) Jesus seeing their faith, said unto the sick of the palsy, son, be of good cheer, thy sins be forgiven thee." This looks like a grand surprise for the sick one. He did not pray for forgiveness, he was anxious to be cured of his malady, and proved his faith in Jesus' power to cure him, and received a thousand fold more than he expected. And, astonishing as it may seem to some, we learn from the 5th verse that the words "Arise and walk," would have had the same effect precisely; that is, would have both cured and pardoned him; for, to the fault-finding Scribes who charged him with blasphemy, he said, wherefore think ye evil in your hearts, for whether is easier to say, "Thy sins be forgiven thee, or arise and walk?" We do not know that he or his attendants opened their mouths at all. He took in the whole situation, and discerned the spirit of faith and obedience there. So too, of the woman who was a sinner. Those tears and box of ointment were eloquent of faith and love and repentance and obedience. He knew what emotions stirred her soul—knew she was heavily laden, but knew, too, she was weary of her burden, and without a word from her came the sweet assurance from him, "Thy faith has saved thee, go in peace." Blessed Jesus.

3. We suggest under this number that it was more a matter of faith than of knowledge. Jesus said to the disciples on the way to Emmaus, "Oh fools and slow of heart to believe all the prophets have spoken. Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and enter into glory." This explains it.

4. Once is enough when the Spirit speaks, though it takes two or three men to establish the truth of anything. This being God's word, it would be no truer if repeated a hundred times. It was a very important event to the thief—far more so than to us. Our correspondent would hardly rule out all events but once referred to, after thorough examination.

5. The foot-note referred to is from the Unitarian Improved Version,—not an unprejudiced source. We think our correspondent must attach more importance to it than was intended by its insertion. Wescott and Hort say in the appendix to their introduction, p. 68, "Marcion according to Epiphanius, omitted semeron . . . paradeisus, i. e., doubtless the whole verse. Origen states that "some" were so troubled by the apparent discordance with Matt. xii. 40, as to suspect that semeron was a spurious addition to the Gospel. But it is more likely that Origen had Marcion in mind. In that case the omission was probably one of Marcion's arbitrary tamperings with the text." So much for these eminent critics.

Now about Marcion; who was he that he should be entitled to so much consideration. He was excommunicated by his own father, the bishop of Sinope for his heretical opinions and become the founder of the sect of Marcionites. He rejected the Old Testament altogether, and all of the New except a few epistles and the Gospel of Luke, except the first four chapters; and he began the 5th chapter with the words, "In the 15th year of the reign of Tiberius Ceasar God came to Capernaum a city of Galilee and spoke on the Sabbath." Need we add that we do not think it safe to reject Luke xxiii. 43 on his authority. Lastly we do not think any such copies as are referred to in the foot note now exist. If they do, they have no authority.

Dear Restitution:

As I was sending the notice of Brother W. H. Brown's death, I thought a few lines to you would not be out of place. There is here and in this vicinity quite a goodly number who are contending earnestly for the ancient faith. We are soon to have a hall in Sac City, where the "Good News of the coming Kingdom" can be preached and also heard. Yours for the Truth.

Rejection of the German Army Bill.

BERLIN, May 6.—The army bill was rejected today in the Reichstag by a vote of 210 against the bill to 162 in favor of the bill. The rescript signed by the Kaiser dissolving the Reichstag was immediately promulgated and the Reichstag is now dissolved. Caprivi will offer his resignation to the Kaiser.

The new elections, which under the Constitution, must take place within sixty days after dissolution, are to be held June 15. The new session must open within ninety days after dissolution. The Social Democratic members of the Reichstag displayed the wildest enthusiasm over the result. They hurrahed repeatedly, following cheer with cheer. Great confusion and uproar prevailed in the House, and the public excitement is at the highest pitch at Berlin.

The last attempts at compromise having failed, Chancellor Caprivi refusing to sanction a proposition to make the two years' active service permanent, the Kaiser became impatient of further delay and pressed for a decision by the Reichstag today. Hence the vote was taken at once instead of being postponed until Monday. The failure of the army bill makes it necessary for the Kaiser to defer for the present his projected reform of the higher military commands and of the posts in the war office—a process which Caprivi is said to dread even more than he dreaded the struggle over the army bill, knowing that it is likely there will be a conflict over the change which will involve the Kaiser, Caprivi himself, and others whom the Chancellor has no desire to antagonize.

PARIS, May 6.—[Copyright, 1893, by James Gordon Bennett.]—The entire attention of the European political world is turned toward Berlin, where the Reichstag voted today on the army bill. The interest is much more considerable than one would have believed. If the Reichstag had voted today for an increase of the effective military force all the great States of Europe would have been obliged to follow Germany's example, because the whole of Europe is now managed from a military point of view. Prompt dissolution of the Reichstag, therefore, produced in Paris a profound political impression. According to early reports it was thought the army bill would be rejected and the dissolution of the Reichstag was predicted. One must now expect a bellicose campaign and the use of alarmists threats on the part of Germany, as at the dissolution of the Reichstag it will be necessary to verify every piece of news before believing it, and in France we can expect incidents on the frontier like the Schnaebele affair. For the rest it is not their relations with Germany which now cause uneasiness to the French Government, but the relations of France and England, which are bad throughout Asia, Africa, and Europe.

English policies are thwarting French policies. In the difficulties with Siam it is again England exciting the Siamese against France. In Africa there are two serious troubles in the region of Lake Tchad and the irritating of the Sultan of Morocco. In Europe interminable discussion about Egypt proves that England in spite of every promise will not evacuate that country. The speech of Mr. Gladstone produced a very bad effect on the French Government. It is certain the entire politics of Europe will be influenced sooner or later by this French and English antipathy.

LONDON, May 6.—[Copyrighted, 1893, by the Press Publishing company, New York World.]—Turning the gaze upon Germany one sees the greatest constitutional struggle that the new German Empire has yet known coming to an end. For more than five months the Kaiser and his people have fought over the army bill with an obstinacy that marks the birth throes of a new epoch. Germany is in travail with constitutional government and the cause is the same as always. During twenty years France and Germany have passed and repassed each other in the race for military superiority. At each point in the contest the weights they have carried have grown heavier and now under the double burden of service and taxes Germany has lain down in the middle of the path and refuses to budge one inch more. The most docile taxpayer, the most plastic subject of Europe, has revolted, and militarism all over the continent will reel from the shock. Only once before has the Reichstag flatly defied the government, and that was on just this question of the increase of the army. That was many years back, in Bismarck's days—his first and last defeat. The new regime has broken down, and the only resort was the dissolution of the Reichstag. What will come afterward no man can say, but the elections promise no help to the Kaiser. Then either the Kaiser or the constitution must give way.

No Rest for Jews.

LONDON, May 6.—[Copyright, 1893, by the New York Times.]—Though the newspapers of Western Europe are just now busy with a more than ordinary supply of topics calling for big types and double leads, I take it that America's interest must be nearly touched by something which is happening over across the line which separates civilization from barbarism in mid-Europe, no hint of which has heretofore got into type of any sort.

Facts which I am able today to make public are known to only three men in London and, perhaps, ten or a dozen others in Paris, Berlin, and Vienna. The greatest possible pains have been taken during the last fortnight to verify these facts by a lot of detailed documentary evidence, some of the originals of which are here in London and which I have seen. These show that a wholesale expulsion of Jews has been begun in the Kingdom of Poland itself.

This means a forced dispersion of the people, compared with which the recent exodus from Russia proper is relatively insignificant. There are at the present moment something like 1,500,000 Jews in Poland, or about four times the number affected by the Passover edicts of 1891 in Russia. They are of a somewhat better class as a whole than the Russian Jews, at least from an economic point of view, because they contain a much larger proportion of artisans and skilled workmen; but they have certain social characteristics, born of their peculiar environment, which render them even less welcome as imigrants than those we have already seen in exile. When this new Polish exodus gets fairly into motion the resources and patience of Christendom will be taxed as never before.

Incredible as it may seem at first, these decrees of expulsion were promulgated as far back as Feb. 28, yet they were only heard of outside of Russia a bare fortnight ago. This alone gives a vivid notion of the hopeless obscurity enveloping the region east of the Vistula. When tidings did at last sift westward leaders of the Jewish community discredited them, and not till actual proofs were obtained were they able to realize this hideous addition to their calamitous burden.

Inquiry has developed that already many thousands of Jewish families in villages and the open country all over Poland have been served with these summary orders to move at once into towns. Most of the detailed information at hand here refers to the Province of Radom. But there seems no doubt that the same machinery is at work in the other nine gubernia of the kingdom. In the solitary community district of Ruda Guzovoska, which is forty verst from Warsaw on the railroad leading to Vienna, 480 families engaged in trade and possessed of immovable property have been served with these orders. In the village of Suicedniov, seat of administration for the government iron mines, 250 families received similar notices. In the communal district of Blizen out of 170 Jewish families in the place 158 have been ordered out. Of these latter seventy-six families have been settled there for generations, if not centuries, and contain among their adult males ten tailors, ten bakers, eighteen commercial travellers, seven commision agents, five bookmakers, four carpenters, four contractors, nine coachmen, three dealers in crockery, two butchers, two foremen of the iron work, and one porter. I give the list to show the sweeping character of the expulsion. It may be added that the list includes fourteen heads of families who served a term in the army. In the adjoining district of Ruda Malinstzaka eighty-two families are expelled, among them thirty-one workmen in a big foundry there.

Onward March of Cholera.

The Cholera keeps marching on toward Paris slowly and deliberately, but without halting. The Department of Finistere is admitted by the French to be infected, and every day brings reports of new cases in outlying towns and villages. In Russia the plague has assumed a more virulent type, while in Austria it is said to be subsiding.

The International Medical Congress, which was to have met Sept. 24, has been postponed indefinitely because of the cholera. The official reason given is that so many doctors will be engaged about that time with the disease that they cannot attend the congress. This change itself speaks more loudly than reports and statistics as to the attitude of those who know.

The Grumbler.

If you want to know whether you are a fault-finder, just try one day, one week, or one month, to get along without complaining, fault-finding, grumbling. Begin this week at home, then carry it into church, and then into business life.

It is not necessary to be told that you are a grumbler, and, beside, people may not want to tell you. But in this simple way you can find out in one month whether your wife or your pastor or business men have any right to set you down as a grumbler.

In the place of finding fault with the wrong-doings of others, let us set them a good example, and sweetly and kindly try to get them into a better way of living. A chronic grumbler is a very undesirable companion, a troublesome church-member, and an annoying business man.—Christian Standard.

A Secret Recorder.

It is recorded of Bishop Latimer, that he took especial care in the placing of his words before Bonner, because he heard the pen working in the chimney, behind the cloth, setting down all (it may be more) than he said. So we ought circumspectly to look to our sayings and doings; for conscience as a scribe or registrar, sitting in the closet of our hearts, with pen in hand, makes a record of all our ways, sets down the time when, the place where, the manner how things were performed, and that so clear and evident, that go where we will, do what we can, the characters of them shall never be cancelled or razed out, till God appears in judgment.

NOTICE.

The annual meeting of the Church of God near Scholl's Ferry, will convene at the Flint Schoolhouse, on the evening of June 9, 1893, and continue over Sunday.

Bro. Corbaley is expected to be there, yet it is not certain. If it should so happen that he cannot be with us, we shall not be without preaching brethren. We have Bros. Prosser, Skeels, and Jaquith.

Dear brothers and sisters, another year has almost gone into the past, and what has been our record? Have we remembered all through the year that we are—(or should be) "living epistles known and read of all men."

May we all attend this meeting fully determined to make it an interesting one to all. When we see destruction, misery and death on every hand, it behooves us to "put on the whole armor of God, and watch unto prayer, lest we enter into temptation, and the day of the Lord come upon us unawares."

There are a number of isolated brethren scattered throughout Oregon and Washington, from whom we would be glad to hear by letter, if they cannot be with us.

ALMIRA BROOKS, Sec'y.

Appointments.

Brother J. F. Wagoner will be at Antioch, in Marshall Co. Ind. on the third Sunday in May, 1893. Services at 10-30 in the morning. There will also be services in the evening.

DIED

Near Cherryville, Oregon, April 6, 1893, George Edward, son of Brother and Sister Dukes, aged 4 years, 5 months and 18 days.

Little Georgie was drowned in Cedar Creek, he was buried in the Cherryville cemetery, April, 7, there to sleep until the resurrection, when he shall come from the land of the enemy.

As none of our ministers are living near, there was no sermon preached. Just prayer and a few remarks at the grave by Elder Tulenger of the Christian Church.

The bereaved ones have our heart-felt sympathy; we know it is very hard to part with one of our loved ones. "Although weeping may endure for the night, joy cometh in the morning." The dark night of sorrow and weeping, will soon end, and "The Son of righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings." Our Savior holds the keys of death and the grave, and when the time comes he will unlock the silent tomb, and little Georgie will live again. Oh, may that day soon come when we shall meet to part no more.

We shall meet in that beautiful land,
On the banks of the bright golden shore,
And with all the redeemed happy band
There with Jesus to reign evermore.

There no sorrow shall e'er taint the air,
Where he dwells evil never can come,
And no weeping will break on the ear,
In that land and our beautiful home.

MRS. NANNIE OSBORNE.

At Sac City, Iowa, April 11, 1893, William H. Brown, the only son of Brother and Sister D. U. and E. R. Brown.

Willie was sick for one week with Spinal Disease. He was 21 years and one month old, at the time of his death.

He loved the gospel and promises. He was upright, honest, and good. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer, from John xi. 23, "Thy brother shall live again." It was a very large funeral. Brother Brown and family have the sympathy of the entire community.

Poetry.

Our Father Careth.

Written from hearing a piece of music entitled "A Storm at Sea."

'Tis so very lonely on the waters, Father,
And I hear the ice rain storm beat against the mast,
And now the waves are dashing across the decks below
And it's very dismal to hear the cordage creaking so

The sky is draped in blackness that bodes of dark despair,
With neither moon nor stars to guide the mariner
Now all is wild confusion I hear the women cry
O, save us from this fearful storm, don't let us die.

I kneel and pray aloud that God will save the ship
A prayer is uttered from every trembling lip.
I now retire fearless of perils of the sea,
As a frightened child rocked on his father's knee.

I hear no more the surging of the wintry blast,
Looking from my window I see a rift in the cloud at last,
As if a door in heaven were open to let his children see
That God is thoughtful of his own, wherever they may be.

Now the sea grows calmer, I hear a gentle swell;
It soundeth like an echo, he doeth all things well,
Now lo, the day is breaking, we are nearing homeland fast,
Soon we'll reach the harbor and "home, sweet home at last."

The Blessed Hope—Its Practical Effect.

"Every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." 1 John iii. 3.

The blessed hope believed in from the heart manifests itself in a life which exhibits a grandeur peculiarly its own. It patterns after the pure life of the Savior. The recipient "purifieth himself even as he (the Lord) is pure." Such a life is grand and heroic in noble deeds which stand out in bold relief, it shines before men and they view its good works, and are led to glorify God and themselves.

It leads to a life of sweet resignation and devoutly prays:

"Take my life and let it be Consecrated Lord to thee;
Take my feet and let them be
Swift and beautiful for Thee."

Oh, dear reader, would you experience the untold joys of the incoming Messianic reign, embrace the "blessed hope," lift up your voice and cry out: "Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord!" Such have just cause to be enthusiastic, and happy, even to "shouting with a loud voice," to express the joy of heart engendered by the "blessed hope." The formal professor says: "Master, rebuke thy disciples." Oh, no! he replies: "if these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out."

Whatever is treasured in the heart will govern not only the speech, but the acts of life. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." "A good man out of the good treasure of the heart bringeth forth good things; and an evil man out of the evil treasure bringeth forth evil things."

If the "blessed hope" is the sacred treasure of the heart, the love of God must radiate from it like heat from a glowing furnace. Even like David of old who said: "My heart was hot within me, while I was musing the fire burned; then spake I with my tongue." The tongue can't help but cry out, if the "fire burns," and the "heart is hot within." This is the key to a successful opening of the Scriptures. "Did not our hearts burn within us while he talked within us by the way, and while he opened to us the Scriptures."

Jesus gave himself that he might not only redeem from iniquity, but to "purify unto himself a peculiar people zealous of good works," who should deny ungodliness, worldly lusts, and "live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ."

Why should the "blessed hope" be so desirable? Because it promises life from the dead, immortality in place of mortality, health for sickness,—"the inhabitant shall not say I am sick," the blind shall see —"the eyes of the blind shall be opened," the deaf shall hear—"the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped," the lame shall leap—"the lame shall leap as an hart," the dumb shall sing—"the tongue of the dumb shall sing," joy in place of sorrow—"sorrow and sighing shall flee away," the hungry and thirsty shall be satisfied—"they shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more," the bitter tears shall forever cease—"God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes," sad partings will be no more—"there shall be no more death," "beauty for ashes," "a garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness," "the oil of joy for mourning" rest for the weary, crowns for crosses, strength for weakness "Sing, O heavens, and be joyful, O earth; and break forth into singing, O mountains; for the Lord hath comforted his people."

Apart from the blessed hope there is unrest, disquietude, a fearful uncertainty with regard to the future No peace! No joy! A life of clouds! Darkness veils the pathway! Not a single rift in the clouds to reveal a glorious gleam of the sunshine of peace! Listen, O child of sorrow, and sing for joy! Infinite goodness reveals the glad tidings of great joy in the "blessed hope" it speaks of pardon and peace now, and in the blessed era about to dawn upon the world joys beyond the conception of the finite mind. In the martyr ages it cheered and sustained its heroes amid the dark storms of persecution: yea, even those who were imprisoned in darkest dungeons would not have exchanged their joys for the throne of a king.

W. H. WILSON.

The Sabbath.

Is there any command that the Gentiles should keep the seventh day Sabbath, or any other day as a sabbath in the Bible?

It was about 2500 years after the creation of man, before the Lord made it known. Not till Abraham's posterity had been 400 years captives in a strange land, and had been led out through the Red Sea. Then he made known to Israel the sabbath. Nehemiah ix. 14. It was to be a sign between them and the Lord, throughout their generations. Ex. xxxi. 13-17. They were forbidden to do any work on the seventh day—not to even pick up sticks, nor build fires —the penalty being death. Ex. xxxv. 2-3, Num. xv. 32-35.

If the keeping of the seventh day as commanded, was to be given to the Gentile world, how could it be kept in cold countries where fire is indispensable, or how could the same day be kept, when in passing round the earth, one day is lost or gained.

The Bible has no record of the requirements, or penalties of the seventh day ever being changed, nor of their being required of any other nation. It was given to Israel in a sunny clime, where its demands could be easily complied with, and its forms ended at the cross, when they were rejected of God, and their house was left unto them desolate. Matt. xxiii. 28.

The practical or savable part of the commandments pertaining to the motive, or intent of the heart, which God only could see and judge, were endorsed in the Gospel, or new covenant law of faith. But the outward ceremonies of works and penalties, that men could take cognizance of and judge, such as the seventh day ritual, and the ordinances, types, and shadows pointing to Christ, were to be fulfilled and ended in him, as the substance.

By the works of the law shall no flesh be justified, for the law is not of faith, but of works. Gal. ii. 16, iii. 12. The law could not give life, Gal. iii. 21, nor justification, Gal. ii. 16, nor santification, Gal. ii. 21, nor perfection, Heb. vii. 19. For this reason Paul calls it faulty, and old, and a new one is to be given. Heb. viii. 7.

It is sometimes said the sabbath is not a part of the law, but Moses calls the commandments the law. Ex. xxiv. 12, xxxv. 28. Christ quotes from them and calls them the law. Luke x. 26, 27. And Paul quotes one of them, and calls it the law, and says we are delivered from this law. Rom. vii. 6, 7.

Christ broke down the middle wall of partition, and abolished in his flesh the law of commandments contained in ordinances. Where is there more of an ordinance than the sabbath ritual, with all its ceremonies and penalties?

In Col. ii. 14, Paul speaks of blotting out the hand writing of ordinances, and nailing them to the cross. Here he classes the sabbath with meats, and holy days and new moons which were all nailed to the cross. He then charges them not to let any man judge or dictate to them about these things, for they are done away, being only a shadow of things to come, but the body is of Christ.

In Rom. xiv. 5, Paul gives more advice, or caution on this subject. He tells them to be fully persuaded, or settled in their own minds as to eating, or keeping of days. That one day was not to be esteemed above another. To keep a day, made them no better, and to not keep one, made them no worse.

Paul says as to the righteousness of the law, he was blameless, but this could not save him, not being mixed with faith in Christ.

In Heb. viii. the first or old covenant is spoken of as faulty, and old, and ready to vanish away. The ninth verse says it was made with the fathers when God led them out of Egypt, and it must include the decalogue with its covenants and laws, which was a school-master, to bring us to Christ. But when faith was come, we were no longer under a school master, but under the new covenant law of faith. In Luke x. 0, Christ calls the commandments the law and quoted two of them and says, on these two hang all the law and the prophets. Luke x. 20, Matt. xxii. 40.

Paul says as touching the righteousness of the law he was blameless, and yet he was not saved, but lacked the same one thing the young man did that kept the commandments, and that was faith in Christ, without which it is impossible to please God. "Faith is the victory that overcomes the world." This was just what the letter of the old covenant, or law could not give, though perfectly kept outwardly; faith in Christ to whom they pointed must be had. "But," says one, "will not the keeping of the commandments 'Thou shalt love the Lord with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and thy neighbor as thy self,' save men?" "Yes," we say, "when fully complied with, but man in himself, without faith has not the power to obtain that love." It is above the love of this world. It can only be obtained by faith in the blood of Christ, which cleanses from all sin. It is the love of God shed abroad in the heart, that saves men. Christ is the end of the law for righteousness, to every one that believeth. He saves by the Gospel law of faith—the law of liberty —the royal law of love, against which there is no law.

Christ's faith, obedience, death and resurrection made God's love accessible to man by living faith; for he "tasted death for every man." Christ practically demonstrated he had a love above the selfish love of this world, when he gave his life for his enemies, and prayed that they might be forgiven—and Stephen proved he had the same love when he prayed for those that stoned him to death.

Such love and prayer for enemies far surpasses any love this world has to bestow. Christ gave his life for the world, while they were yet enemies, and he thus took away the sin of the world entailed by Adam's transgression, restoring man again to a savable condition, without which they never could have had justification, sanctification, perfection, future life, immortality or the kingdom, and these constitute the hope of the Gospel, and are only obtainable by faith in Christ, and not by the works of the law.

There being no Gospel command to keep any set time for worship, it is wise and proper to follow the example of the disciples, Acts xx. 7, and meet on the first day of the week for worship. It was on this day that the hope of the future life, and immortality was brought to light, and the Gospel blessing secured to all men, by the resurrection of Christ from the dead. "For to this end, Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord, both of the dead, and living. God will judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to the Gospel, in the day of his appearing and kingdom. Rom. ii. 16, 2 Tim. iv. 1. Consequently all the men must have a knowlede of Christ, and the Gospel, before they can be judged, for accepting or rejecting the Gospel is what brings final salvation, or condemnation to all men. Christ says, "My words shall judge you in the last day." Then men are not judged by other laws, and standards given.

The least modicum of reflection proves that the soul that does not die cannot have a resurrection.

Melchisedec.

The apostle's references in Hebrews to Melchisedec have created a great deal of confusion and contradiction on the part of many, who have treated upon the subject. It is a subject that needs to be handled with great care. Without referring to the different presentations that have been given upon so profound a subject, I will endeavor to present what appears the apostle's views upon it.

In the first place it is very evident that Melchisedec was a man, or otherwise the illustration would not serve as a comparison between Melchisedec and Christ. The idea before the mind of the apostle is priesthood. The Melchisedec priesthood began and ended with himself. The Aaronic began with Aaron and ended at the cross. That of Christ began when he ascended to the Father. First over the saints, and at his coming till he shall have put down all rule, authority and power, and have destroyed the last enemy, death. Then he will deliver up the kingdom to the Father that God may be all, and in all. Each of these priesthoods had their own cycle of time to run. When complete, the priesthood is abolished. I offer this as a general statement. The evidence I think will sustain what I have advanced. The apostle says, for every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God. Who can have compassion on the ignorant; for that he himself also is compassed with infirmity. Heb. v. 1-2. This seems to be a necessary condition with the priesthood, that personally they should be acquainted with the infirmity of flesh and blood. Had Melchisedec been other than man, he could not have been the priest of the Most High God. The trouble before the minds of many is where the apostle says without father, without mother. The real signification of this is, without descent. He did not descend in the line of priests like the Aaronic. So far as he was concerned, he was without father or mother in the priesthood, we know of no other before him or after him till Aaron. The apostle calls him a man, so there is no necessity of placing him outside of humanity. Surely the Melchisedec priesthood did not run contemporary with that of Aaron's. Surely it does not now exist. Such being the case, it must have ceased. By looking at chapter vii. 6, it would seem the apostle is showing the entire separation of the Melchisedec order from the line of Aaron.

The three lines of priesthood in the apostle's argument are distinctive. The Melchisedec order shows by illustration the complete separation of the priesthood of Christ. If Christ is after the order of Melchisedec, then it begins and ends with himself. It is evident the priesthood of Christ comes to an end, when there is no necessity for it. It will certainly not be needed when God will be all in all. The Divine nature alone existing. No sin to officiate for. In looking at the narrative about Melchisedec meeting Abram, we see nothing out of the ordinary human standpoint. Melchisedec was king of Salem (Jerusalem). He brought forth bread and wine. He was priest of the Most High God and blessed Abram. This was all very natural. Divine manifestations have always been upon a very limited scale. Their divine character was always made known. So far as the narrative goes, we may conclude that like all men, he Melchisedec, lived, and died, unless like Enoch, God took him. And if so, what or where is he officiating as high priest. His services are not needed upon earth and surely not in heaven. I suppose the difficulty in the minds of a great many lies in what the apostle says in Heb. vii. 3. Without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life, but made unto the Son of God; abideth a priest continually. What is the real sense and meaning of this statement. Surely not to show that Melchisedec and Christ are alike, for neither in their beginning nor ending are, or was they alike. Christ had a beginning and end of life as a man, and Melchisedec must have had a beginning of days as regards to time. For to press the idea that the neither beginnings of days spoken of by the writer, referred to no beginning of his existence, would make Melchisedec none other than the Eternal One. Leaving that idea out of question, we must find some other solution of the difficulty. We are shut up to the main thought that was in the mind of the writer, which relates simply to priestly functions. Melchisedec descended not in a line of priests, as the Aaronic. Neither did Christ, who sprang out of Juda. That of Melchisedec was everlasting in himself while he lived. It ended with his death. There was no priest before him that we know of, and none after him until Aaron. I should from all the surrounding premises conclude that it was a question of genealogy the writer had in mind when referring to Melchisedec. To conclude that Melchisedec was an immortal being is to take hold of the worst horn of a dilemma. While admitting that the statement in Hebrews is difficult of a clear and perfect solution, yet it is the duty of the reader to weigh surrounding testimony and arrive at a conclusion based upon all the facts of the case.

JOHN GOODLIFFE.

The Tobacco Habit.

I have long wanted to say something on this subject. And, if I could only say it in such a manner that some one would be benefited by reading it, how glad I would be in making the effort. To my mind it is a very filthy habit, to say nothing of the drain on the purse. And yet, think of the good that might be accomplished with the means that are spent annually, even by the people who claim to be God's people. I do not believe there are many who use the poisonous weed that would like to have their Savior come and find them in the store buying tobacco. And again think of what an injurious effect it has on a person's health.

Although I have heard some try to argue (very few though) that it was good for them, what one of them would encourage their sons to form the habit, and tell them that they would never regret it, but would always be glad that they had taken their father's advice (if any father would give such advice) and I am sure every one will agree with me that no one should do that which they are not willing to have their children do. For if it is wrong for their children it is wrong for them.

The apostle says in 1 John iii. 2, we know that when He (Christ) shall appear, we shall be like him. And now dear ones, if we want to be like him when he comes, let us try to follow his example as nearly as we can. Who will not agree with me that it is wrong for a Christian to form the habit of using tobacco? And now dear friends, if it is wrong to form a bad and filthy habit, I say in all candor that I think it is just as wrong to continue in that filthy habit. I say filthy because I think that all will agree with me that it is. And we are told in 2 Cor. vii. 1 that, Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God.

Again we read, To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne.

Now I think we ought to set the example before our children and neighbors, that the Scriptures will bear us out in. Let us always try to do that which is well pleasing in the sight of the Lord.

MAGGIE SKEELS.

Rev. xxii. 10-12.

"And he which is filthy, let him be filthy still; and he that is unjust, let him be unjust still; and he that is filthy, let him be filthy still; and he that is righteous let him be righteous still; and he that is holy let him be holy still. And behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." Rev. xxii. 10-12.

From the reading of this Scripture these things will take place just at the coming of Christ. Then if we are holy, or righteous, or just, we will be accepted, and if we are filthy, or unjust, or unrighteous, in that condition we will remain. Oh, too late to make the change then, the dear Lord will then have come. We then may want ever so much to make a change, but no, says the dear Lord and Master. You have had plenty of time to correct your bad habits. You have had line upon line, precept upon precept. Here a little, and there a little.

Paul the apostle has said, "having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God. Here is a very solemn warning from one of God's faithful apostles. Oh, let us all take warning. This subject brethren, I have had on my mind for years, and have given it much thought, but just how to present it so that brethren would not get hurt at me has been the trouble in my mind. Oh, I do not want to hurt any brother or sisters feelings but I have concluded I will not put it off any longer. I do feel as if it was the duty of our preachers to give the warning in time. I feel for one that I will not put it off any longer, for if I should fall under the power of death without this warning in time, I would be held accountable before God. So I for one will clear my mind, while the dear Lord preserves my life. Now dear brethren if I should tell you what is one of the most filthy habits without mentioning what it is, you can give a guess, for I will leave it to you, what it is, for I am safe in saying, brothers, and sometimes sisters, engage in it. Do you think that you engage in a Christian habit, when you use that weed? and nine times out of ten they will say, well, I know it is a nasty, filthy habit, and I would quit it if I could. Then you can't quit it? Are you an overcomer? If you cannot control your perverted appetite can you rule five or ten cities? Or any city? If you can't control self, you will make a poor ruler in God's overlasting kingdom. Then brother, you, and Paul, and Revelation all agree that it is a nasty, filthy practice. I cannot nor will not take any chances on the gaining of eternal life, connected with the filthiness of the flesh. There is too much at stake. Eternal life is too great a boon to lose for so small a thing. The mere gratification of the flesh for a few years. Put that by the side of an eternal weight of glory. Brother it wont pay to take any risks in so great a matter. Let us be wise and choose that good part that can never be taken from us. I have named this subject to several of our preaching brethren, and I believe every one have expressed themselves like this, "I wish all of our folks would quit the filthy habit" but, like myself they would say, "how can we approach the subject?" If we speak of it in public, they will get offended, and if we talk with them in private they will agree with us, "it is a nasty, filthy habit." Then the brother will say, "what can we do?" We had just as well say nothing. But, will the dear Lord let us off so easily in the final day of reckoning? I am afraid not. Now dear brother, dear sister, you will not get out of patience with dear, old, brother Hatch because he tells you the truth. If you do I will love you still. Paul once said something like this: Do not think me your enemy because I tell you the truth. We are commanded to abstain from all appearance of evil, and if we acknowledge the fact ourselves, that we engage in a bad habit, then there is an appearance of evil. Wherefore come out from among them and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, 2 Cor. vi. 17-18, and I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty. Having therefore these promises, (the promises of becoming the sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty.) Dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all unfilthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord. 2 Cor. vii. 1. Beloved now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure. 1 John iii. 2, 3. Now we will let John in Revelation tell us what the overcomer will receive. "He that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God. Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life. He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death. To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna. And I will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth, saving he that receiveth it. And he that overcometh and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations. He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels. Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out; and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God; and I will write upon him my new name. To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." Did Jesus overcome? You say, yes. Must we overcome? The Bible says, yes. Can we gain all those things named above, if we do not overcome? The Bible says; no. If we can't control our perverted appetites, now can we expect to be saved in that incorruptible kingdom of God's dear Son? Now dear ones I will close after giving the location of those last Scriptures. Rev. ii. 7, 10, 11, 17, 26. Rev. iii. 5, 12, 21. There is nothing but love to God, love for my brethren, that has prompted me to pen these few lines. Now dear ones, dont judge me wrongfully. I love you all. Let us keep ourselves as pure as possible. It will require diligence, fighting the good fight of faith, running the race set before us, walking worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called, in all lowliness, and meekness, and long-suffering, endeavoring to keep the unity of the faith in the bonds of peace. And all that we do, do it for the honor and glory of God. It wont be long till the Master will come. May we all be ready is my prayer, for Jesus' sake. Come Lord Jesus, come quickly. May the favor of God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ, rest and abide with us.

J. S. HATCH.

Romans viii. 1.

"There is therefore now no condemnation (judgment) to them which are in Christ Jesus." From the reading of this we learn that it is very important to be in Christ. Also in the same verse he says, "who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit." By this we learn that by walking after the Spirit we will escape judgment. In the 5th verse, "for they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh." The 6th verse, "For to be carnally minded is death." 7th verse he tells why. Because "the carnal mind is enmity against God." For it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. So then they that are in (mind) the flesh, cannot please God. 9th verse. "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his." 12th verse. Therefore brethren we are debtors to the flesh to live after the (desires of) flesh. 13th verse. "For if ye live after the flesh ye shall die." I will not write a long letter but we will notice the Apostle carries the good and bad line of thought through the chapter, and I have only written part of the worst.

Yours in hope.

Crown of Life. James i 12.

Happy the man that endures trial, because having become an approved person, he will receive the Crown of Life, which the Lord promised to those who love him. Job says, or Eliphas, "Behold happy is the man whom God correcteth, therefore despise not thou the chastening of the Almighty, for he maketh sore and bindeth up, he woundeth and his hands make whole, he shall deliver thee in six troubles, yea in seven there shall no evil touch thee." Job v. 17, 18, 19.

The sweet singer of Israel says, "Blessed is the man whom thou chastenest, O, Lord and teachest him out of thy law that thou mayest give him rest from the days of adversity until the pit be digged for the wicked. For the Lord will not cast off his people, neither will he forsake his inheritance." Psalms xciv. 12, 13, 14.

The wise man says, "My Son, despise not the chastening of the Lord, neither be weary of his correction, for because, whom the Lord loveth he correcteth, even as a father the son in whom he delighteth. Happy is the man that findeth wisdom and the man that getteth understanding. Prov. iii. 11, 12, 13.

Paul to the Hebrews says, "And ye have forgotten the exhortation which speaketh unto you as unto children. My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him, because whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. If ye endure chastening God dealeth with you as with sons, for what son is he whom the Father chasteneth not. Heb. xii. 5, 6, 7.

We learn from the foregoing Scriptures that eternal life, or a crown of life is promised to mankind conditioned on endurance. In the language of Holy Writ, eternal life, the crown of life will be given those who by patient continuance in well doing are seeking for glory, and honor, and incorruptibility. We are told to count it all joy, to esteem it all joy, my brethren, when you fall into various trials, knowing that the proof of your faith works patience. But let patience have its perfect work so that you may be perfect and complete, deficient in nothing.

We should rejoice in tribulation, knowing that tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope, and hope maketh not ashamed, because the love of God has been shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit, which he has given unto us. Indeed we should rejoice the more because of these trials, for they are an evidence of our acceptance with God. He chasteneth every son and daughter whom he receiveth; those without chastisement are bastards, spurious and not sons.

Paul compares the Christian race to a course of training which was celebrated among the Corinthians. The training regulated their diet, their hours of exercise and rest, the restraint of the passions etc. He says, and every contestant is temperate in all things. they may receive a perishable crown, but we an imperishable. I therefore so run, as not uncertainly, so I strike as not beating the air, but I severely discipline my body, and make it subservient, lest possibly having proclaimed to others, I myself should become one unapproved." 1 Cor. ix. 25, 26, 27. In the last testimony of this grand man we have him using this language, after being ship-wrecked, after enduring divers persecutions and indignities, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing. 2 Tim. iv. 7, 8.

He says all them that love the appearing of Christ will with him receive that crown.

James says, "hearken my beloved brethren, has not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith and heirs of that kingdom which he has promised to them that love him." The poor of this world, rich in faith, have the promise of an inheritance, a glorious kingdom, a kingdom of righteousness and peace.

Jehovah declares, "as many as I love, I rebuke and chasten, be zealous therefore, and repent. Behold I stand at the door and knock. If any man hear my voice and open the door I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me. To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne." Jesus says, "even as I overcame, and am set down with my Father on his throne. He that hath an ear let him hear what the Spirit saith to the churches." Rev. iii. 19, 20, 21, 22.

Jesus says, to his disciples, "Happy the persecuted on account of righteousness, for theirs is the kingdom of the heavens. Happy are ye when men shall revile and persecute you, and on my account falsely allege every kind of evil against you." Matt. v. 10, 11.

We are informed elsewhere that the way to the Kingdom is through much tribulation. It is God's arrangement to try to perfect every son and daughter by trial. Let us rejoice because of this evidence of our approval.

CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to THE RESTITUTION office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of accounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

Conference Call.

"Rally once again." The time for another "Grand Army" reunion has almost reached us again. "Occupy until I come" is the grand motto and it should be emblazoned upon the escutcheon of every volunteer in the ranks. Can we meet this watchword with the echoing answer, "Here am I, use me for the Master's service." If so rally one and all, at this yearly conference to be held at the old post, in Dutton, Kent Co. Michigan. Beginning Thursday evening, June 1st, and lasting over Sunday.

The army of occupation until the King shall come is not as full as it ought to be, and at this yearly gathering we hope to see many volunteers added to its ranks.

The Captain of our salvation has not yet called for a draft to be made, but he has called for willing workers to hurry to the front and work. Work until he comes. Who will be here to help sound out the clarion notes of the coming King Immanuel, and who of the already enlisted will hurry to the reserve in songs of praise, in words of comforting exhortation, sympathy, love, who will come who loves the cause of truth more than popularity, or dress, or gaiety, or pleasure? They are the ones who will help gain recruits for the Kingdom. Come, come to work for that object.

Dutton is on the M. C. R. R. ten miles southeast of Grand Rapids. Trains reach here from Grand Rapids at 1 40 P. M. 5 40 P. M. and 11 30 evening. From the south they reach here at 5 45 A. M. 9 30 A. M. 12 50 P. M. and 9 30 P. M.

M. A. WOODWARD, Sec'y.

The annual conference of the churches of God of the Abrahamic faith in Iowa, will meet at Clarksville, Butler Co. Iowa, June the 2nd 1893, and continue over two Sundays. The large audience tent and a half dozen or more small or living tents will be ready to accommodate those who come. And as the preaching brethren are always ready to make any sacrifice to be present, and labor for the interest of the meeting and the good of all, we hope and earnestly entreat all who have an interest in the cause of the Master and are looking for his soon coming to make a sacrifice also if necessary to be at this meeting, for we are persuaded that while all mean to be steadfast, yet there is an ominous tendency to falling away among all Christian societies that will precede his coming. Then let us, as many as can possibly do so, go to this meeting, determined to make it a means of filling our lamps with that oil that will throw light along the way of the bridegroom's approach, so that if we slumber and sleep before his arrival we will be ready when the first cry is sounded to go out to meet him, and go in with him to the wedding, and not have the door shut upon us while we go to seek for light. He may be nearer than we think.

The Church of God, in Nebraska, will hold their Third Quarterly Conference, D. V. at the Fairview School-house, Furnas Co. commencing Friday evening, June 2nd, and continue over the following Sunday.

The business relative to the next Annual Conference, and tent work requires the attendance of all the brethren. The signs that foretell "His glorious appearing" are fast culminating. That day may be nearer than we think. "Therefore, beloved, seeing ye look for such things, be ye diligent, that ye may be found of him in peace without spot and blameless."

J. J. CADY, Sec'y.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the incorruption of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

What is it to Preach Christ?

"Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them." Acts viii. 5.

When the persecution against the church at Jerusalem arose, at the death of Stephen, the disciples were all dispersed throughout Judea and Samaria, except the apostles. Then those who were scattered abroad went every where preaching the Word. Persecution did not deter them from making known to others what they had learned. They were not of that class of hearers, described by Jesus in the parable of the sower, who received the seed or word of the kingdom into stony places; and for want of root in themselves, withered away when trial came; but these had heard the word, and understood it, and were producing fruit, by publishing the truth they had received. Matt. xiii. 23. Philip, one of the seven deacons, mentioned in Acts vi. 5, went down to Samaria, and preached Christ, and with great success; for it is said that "the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, hearing and seeing the miracles which he did."

The first preacher of Christ to the Samaritans was a woman. Some three years before Philip went there, Jesus, travelling from Judea to Galilee, had to go through the province of Samaria, and being wearied, he sat down at Jacob's well, which was near the city of Sychar, some 35 miles north of Jerusalem. A woman of the city came to the well to draw water. Jesus asked her for a drink. She was surprised that a Jew should make such a request of a Samaritan woman. This led to a conversation which resulted in the woman believing that she had met with the Messiah, who she believed was coming into the world. She left her waterpot, and went into the city, and said to the men, "Come, see a man, which told me all things that ever I did; is not this Christ?" They came and saw and heard, and invited Jesus into the city. He abode with them two days; and then they "said unto the woman, Now we believe, not because of thy saying, for we have heard him ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Savior of the world." John iv. 1-42.

The Samaritans, though despised by the Jews, had a common belief with them in a coming Messiah, and when Philip preached Christ to them, attesting the word by many miracles, "there was great joy in that city." The preaching of Christ by Philip included much more than what is preached by ministers of this day. We know this from reading verse 12, which gives us the result of his preaching; "But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus, they were baptized, both men and women." In preaching Christ he must preach Jesus, as we read in verse 35 that he did to the eunuch—"Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same Scripture, and preached to him Jesus." The word Christ is an abreviation of the Greek word Christos, which signifies anointed, an anointed one. So when Philip told the Samaritans about this anointed one, he had to tell them who it was that had been anointed,—Jesus of Nazareth, a man who had been raised in a small town some 80 miles north of them,—a man, who when he was baptized by John the Baptist in the river Jordon, was anointed by God with the Holy Spirit and power, Acts x. 38; Matt. iii. 16, 17; John i. 30-34;—a man "approved of God," by miracles and wonders and signs which God did by him among the Jews; a man, who was "despised and rejected of men," and was crucified for confessing that he was the king of the Jews, their Messiah, Christ or Anointed One; a man, whom God raised from the dead, placed at his own right hand until his enemies submit to his authority, as the Son of God, both Lord and Christ. The Samaritans as well as Jews were expecting the Prophet, like unto Moses, whom they called Messiah, (the Hebrew word for Anointed One;) and the sincere and honest among them, only required proof that Jesus of Nazareth was he, for them to receive him as such. So with regard to the eunuch. He as a Jewish proselyte had been up to Jerusalem to worship, and was returning home, reading Isaiah liii. 7, 8. When he asked Philip as to whom the prophet referred in that prophecy, he "began at the same Scripture, and preached to him Jesus." He had to tell him something of the history of this "man of sorrows;" how he was anointed to preach the Gospel to the poor, and sent to preach the kingdom of God; how he "went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil, for God was with him," Luke iv. 18, 43; Acts x. 38; how he was finally rejected and crucified, but raised from the dead by his father God, to which fact all his apostles bore witness. Read what Peter said to Cornelius, as recorded in Acts x. 39-43.

No one can preach Christ without designating who was christed or anointed, viz., Jesus, the son of the woman Mary, the son of David, the son of Abraham, and the Son of God. Gal. iv. 4; Rom. i. 3; Matt. i. 1; John i. 34; Luke i. 30-35. David, the son of Jesse, was anointed by Samuel, by order of Jehovah, to be king of Israel. David then became the Lord's Christ, or anointed king; as we read in Psa. lxxxix. 20—"I have found David my servant; with my holy oil have I anointed him." So of Jesus, the Son of God, it is said, "Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity; therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows." Heb. i. 9. Thus when Christ, or the anointed one, was preached, it was Jesus of Nazareth, the crucified, who was held forth as the king of the Jews. Philip preached Christ to the Samaritans, and Jesus to the eunuch, but it was all the same, for one implied and included the other. Besides, it is the rock or foundation truth on which Jesus said his church was to be built. When he asked his disciples with regard to his personality, Peter answered, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Then Jesus said that Peter was blessed in knowledge of this truth not being derived from man, but from his Father; and then added, "Thou art Peter, (petros, a stone,) and upon this (petra) rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell (hades, grave) shall not prevail against it." Matt. xvi. 18-20. All the disciples believed this truth. See Nathaniel's confession, John i. 49; all the apostles, vi. 67-69; also the confession of Jesus before Caiaphas and Pilate, Matt. xxvi. 63, 64; John xviii. 37. Every living stone built upon this rock of truth, must believe and confess that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. The apostle John says that he wrote in his Gospel, an account of certain signs performed by his master, that we "might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing we might have life through his name." John xx. 30, 31. John also writes in his epistle that God has commanded us "that we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ," 1 John iii. 23; and he says, "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is begotten of God," v. 1; and asks, "Who is a liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ," ii. 22.

When Philip preached Jesus to the eunuch, he must have spoken of his sufferings, death, and resurrection, as the prophecy he was reading described and foretold these events. He also told him what Jesus required of those who believed the Gospel. Hence the inquiry, "See, here is water! what doth hinder me to be baptized?" So with the Samaritans. These things were necessarily included in speaking of what related to the name of Jesus Anointed.

There was another item included in preaching Christ which must not be overlooked. Philip preached "the things concerning the kingdom of God." If Jesus was of the royal house of David, born to be "the king of the Jews," as he said he was, being anointed with the Holy Spirit at his baptism in order to preach the Gospel of the kingdom, and after his rejection and crucifixion by the Jews was raised from the dead by the Father, to sit upon the throne of David, then it was highly proper and necessary in preaching Christ to mention these things of the kingdom in connection with his name. It is very evident that Philip did so, or the Samaritans could not have believed them before their baptism. All the apostles preached the same things with regard to the kingdom of God. This was the Gospel which Jesus and his apostles preached before his death, and which he sent them to proclaim to all nations after his resurrection. "For this Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." Matt. xxiv. 14. After the day of Pentecost the kingdom and the name of Jesus were both united in proclaiming the Gospel. When the apostles spoke the word of the Lord to Jews or Jewish proselytes, they endeavored to convince them that the crucified Jesus was the Messiah of the prophets, for whom they were looking. Witness Peter's discourses in Acts ii., iii., iv., v.; Stephen's in Acts vii.; Paul's at Antioch, Acts xiii.; at Thessalonica, in the synagogue, Acts xvii. 1-3; at Corinth also, Acts xviii. 4-6; he spoke to the Jews at Ephesus, disputing and persuading for three months, in their synagogue, "the things concerning the kingdom of God," Acts xviii. 19; xix. 1-8; xx. 21, 25; and to the Jews of every city he visited, he presented the claims of Jesus of Nazareth to be their Messiah, Acts xxvi. 20-23; and then to the chief Jews at Rome, xxviii. 23.

The great point of dispute between the Jews and the primitive preachers of the word was about the same then as it is now; viz. if the crucified Jesus was the Christ, or the king of the Jews, why did he not establish the kingdom? Jesus had already showed them the reason why. The kingdom of heaven was at hand if they would receive the king; but they would not. They were called upon to repent, and believe the good news, and bring forth fruits meet for repentance. The husbandmen refused to render unto the owner of the vineyard his portion of the crop, and wickedly conspired together against the heir to kill him, and to sieze his inheritance. Read Isa. v. 1-7; Matt. xxi. 33-44; viii. 11, 12; xxii. 1-14. Another parable shows the reason why the kingdom was delayed. Luke xix. 11-27. The citizens sent a message after the nobleman, saying, "We will not have this man to reign over us." God's mercy still lingered over the nation, even after the murder of his Son. Salvation was offered to the Jews first—"beginning at Jerusalem," Luke xxiv. 46-48. To those who were convicted of the sin of crucifying their king, pardon was offered them on condition of repentance and baptism in the name of Jesus Anointed. Acts ii. 38. They were assured that although the heavens would retain Jesus until "the times of restitution," he would assuredly come again, and fulfil all things of which God had spoken by his prophets. Acts iii. 19-21. A few thousands out of the nation—a remnant—accepted the proffered grace, but the rest were blinded. Hence when Paul and Barnabas preached the Gospel to them at Antioch, and they contradicted and blasphemed, the apostles said, "It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you; but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles." Acts xiii. 46. Paul was specially called to preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ, of which they were made partakers by the Gospel; so that now God is taking out of them a people for his name, (Acts xv. 14,) making them "fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God." Thus through the Gospel, both Jew and Gentile, become one body in Christ Jesus—"a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people." Eph. ii. 16; 1 Pet. ii. 7-10. This is the new nation to whom the royalty of the kingdom has been given. Luke xii. 32; Jas. ii. 5.

Who are preaching Christ now, as Philip did? Are those ministers who deny that Jesus will ever literally reign as king of the Jews? Do not such actually join hands with the Jews, who resist the claims of the despised Nazarene to the throne and kingdom of David? And do not such preachers virtually declare that the prophecy of Isaiah ix. 6, 7, and the promise of the angel Gabriel to Mary, the mother of Jesus, as given in Luke i. 30-33, will never be fulfilled? The orthodox Jew rejects Jesus as their Messiah, because he has not "built again the tabernacle of David, which has fallen down, nor raised up the ruins thereof," as foretold by the prophets; and the modern orthodox Christian makes the whole matter a spiritual affair, never to be literally accomplished. The Jew looks for an actual, literal reign of Messiah on David's throne, but is wrong as to time. He thinks, if Jesus was the Christ, as claimed by Christians, then the kingdom and throne of David would be set up, and their nation be in the land. He errs by overlooking the cause of their dispersion, and consequent delay of the kingdom. So between two parties—Jew and Gentile—the Anointed Jesus of apostolic preaching is completely ignored. The Christ which the apostles proclaimed as the Savior of men, and the future Monarch of the world, is not the same as the one that is generally received and believed in by orthodox Christians of the present day. He reigns in heaven—his kingdom is there; and at the death of the body, the spirit or soul is translated from the Church militant to the Church triumphant, which is their kingdom of heaven. Do not those who believe and teach such fables, preach another Jesus, and another Gospel? If this is true, would it not be wise for such to read and ponder upon what Paul wrote to the Galatians, chap. i. 6-9?

In conclusion, it behoves every one to be careful as to what he believes. If the foundation be that rock, which Jesus said he would build his church upon,—"Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," then it is essential to believe this truth, that we may obtain life through his name. John xx. 31.

Have You Any Assurance that Your Sins are Forgiven?

"If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." John viii. 36.

I recently attended a meeting held by the Woman's Christian Union in their beautiful temple in Chicago. The ladies were very much exercised with regard to the conversion of a certain man who was a slave to the intoxicating cup. He finally professed conversion, but lacked a satisfying assurance that his sins were forgiven. One kind lady prayed so earnestly that the Lord would give him the assurance that his sins were removed from him as far as the east was from the west. Of course that prayer could never be answered, because the Lord has plainly revealed in his Word how a sinner may receive the pardon of sin.

Jesus said to the Jews: "If ye continue in my Word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." John viii. 31, 32. There are many truths in the Scriptures, which among them can set us free? Paul to the Colossians calls it: "the Word of the truth of the Gospel." Hence, it is the sublime truths contained in the Gospel which can "make you free," and not the prayers of devout people who are themselves ignorant of the truth which sets free. No amount of prayer can take the place of that obedience required to that form of doctrine divinely delivered to us for that purpose. God's plan can never be set aside for any human device. I felt sorry for those ladies, because they were in earnest, and yet were ignorantly striving to have that poor penitent set free from his sins. I yearned that they might know the divine plan so plainly revealed in his Word. God will never accept earnest ignorance in place of his own revealed method. See Rom. vi. 17, 18: "God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you. Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness." This is the Scriptural method of being made "free from sin." The "doctrine" referred to is the Gospel—the glad news concerning the coming Messianic reign. The obedience is revealed in verses four and five: "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we should also walk in newness of life." No one can "walk in newness of life," unless he is first "made free from sin." And no one can be "made free from sin," unless he obeys "from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you." "Newness of life," always pertains to those who are "in Christ" by faith and obedience.

2 Cor. v. 17: "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things (his sins) are passed away; behold, all things are become new."

Now, if these kind and benevolent ladies were only instructed in this grand truth, and became obedient to the above divine method for the pardon of sin, they could offer their penitents a method, by which they could have a positive assurance of the pardon of sin, and need not to agonizingly pray the Lord to give the assurance, for God has already given that assurance to those who from the heart become obedient to the faith. 2 Tim. vi. 3: "If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness; he is proud knowing nothing." Oh that men would discard human traditions, and "consent" "to wholesome words," even "the words" and "doctrine" "of our Lord Jesus Christ." Listen to them: "Now ye are clean through the word I have spoken unto you." John xv. 3. How can "the word" become efficacious for the cleansing from sin? and what is "the Word?" See 1 Pet. i. 22-25: "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth * * * Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible by the Word of God, which liveth and abideth forever. * * * But the Word of the Lord endureth forever, and this is the Word which by the Gospel is preached unto you." Thus summed up, this testimony of Peter teaches that purification comes by "obeying the truth," found in "the Word which by the Gospel is preached unto you." There is certainly nothing ambiguous or mysterious in this plan. Why should men substitute in its place the modern anxious bench method? God will never answer the prayers offered at that bench, when substituted in place of "obeying the truth,"—"the word" preached "by the Gospel."

In full accord with this, is Eph. v. 25, 26: "Christ also loved the Church, and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the Word." Hence again, the method of cleansing is through "the washing of water"—baptism required by "the word"—the Gospel. This also harmonizes with Christ's commission: "He that believeth (the Gospel) and is baptized shall be saved." Again: "According to his mercy he saved us by the washing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost." Titus iii. 5. Any method which omits the "washing," (or "the bath of regeneration"—Diaglott,) must be defective, since the Word so distinctly affirms that "he saved us by the washing of regeneration." If salvation attaches to "the bath of regeneration," there must of necessity be the remission of sins connected with it, for there can be no salvation while sin remains. See Acts xxii. 16. "And now why tarriest thou? Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord."

The ladies of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union have frequent and earnest appeals from people laden with sin, seeking for deliverance. Now if this association is really Christian, as its name would indicate, they certainly should adopt and recommend the Christian method, and stoutly reject the human anxious-bench system, because it is deceptive. Those poor people are led to believe they have received that which in fact they have not. In not a single instance are they instructed to "arise and be baptized, and wash away (their) sins," as an obedience to the truth required by the Scriptures. Is it not strange that people who profess the Christian name, should so persistently reject the Christ-method. It seems as if there could hardly be any excuse for ignorance in this matter, seeing it is made so plain in the first Gospel sermon delivered after the Apostles were endowed with power from on high.

Peter preached the saving Gospel to his hearers when he called their attention to the fact that David "being a prophet and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne." "Therefore, let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ. Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and the rest of the Apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Did they recommend the method now in vogue among those who call themselves "Christian," and invite them to come up to the front, and they would pray for them that the Lord would forgive their sins? Listen: "Then Peter said unto them, repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." This is the method introduced and preached by the Apostles of our Lord immediately after they had been filled by the Holy Spirit which was to guide them into all truth. To ignore this method, is to ignore the teaching of our Lord's inspired apostles, and the guiding power of the Holy Spirit, which was to lead them into all truth, that no error should occur. For the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, or any one else to teach a method contrary to this, is to practice a grievous delusion upon those who trust their teachings.

Pleasures and Amusement.

In regard to the lawfulness of certain pursuits, pleasures, and amusements, we may confidently say that whatever is found to unfit you for religious duties, or to interfere with the performance of them; whatever dissipates your mind, or cools the fervor of your devotions; whatever indisposes you to read your Bible, or to engage in prayer; wherever the thought of a bleeding Savior or a holy God, of the hour of death or of the Day of Judgment, falls like a cold shadow on your enjoyment; the pleasures which you cannot thank God for, on which you cannot ask his blessing; whose recollections will haunt a dying bed, and plant sharp thorns in its uneasy pillow—these are not for you. These eschew; in these be not conformed to the world, but transformed by the renewing of your minds. Never go where you cannot ask God to go with you; never indulge in any pleasure which will not bear the morning reflection.—Dr. Guthrie.

The Heart's Garden.

Gotthold ordered a pasture in his garden to be dressed afresh, and planted with all varieties of bulbs. The work, when finished, suggested to him the following reflections. Although the gardener has exercised his skill upon this plot of ground, and given it a form, which adds greatly to its beauty, nevertheless like other earth, it still retains the wildness of its nature, would, ere long, be overgrown with weeds. It is the same with the hearts of God's children. No doubt they have experienced a blessed regeneration, have become other men, and by the grace, word, and Spirit of their heavenly Father, have had their hearts transformed and renewed. Still innate sinfulness continues lurking within them, and must daily be kept under, by repentance and prayer, struggle and holy resolutions. They who are sincerely pious, do not indeed forsake sin, but sin does not forsake them.

More Egyptian Antiquities.

Dr. Flinders Petrie's latest excavations in Egypt have resulted in finding many valuable antiquities. Last season Dr. Petrie explored the "City of Khuenaten," a new city which that Pharaoh built for him*self,* now known as Tel le Amarna. The strange and interesting results of the explorations show that Khuenaten had introduced many novelties into Egypt in addition to that of a new religion. Among these, it is found that he had brought in a new style of art, not only in sculpture, but in painting and decorative art as well. 1400 B. C. is the date given to these relics by Dr. Petrie (that is over 3,000 years ago), and most of the colors appear as sound as when first laid on; the touches with the brush are yet clear and distinct. The question as to how this new style of art reached the Nile Valley will, no doubt, attract the consideration of Egyptologists. Dr. Petrie thinks it was entirely due to the personality of Khuenaten himself; for the art, as well as the worship, was all swept away by the Pharaohs that followed him.

ANOTHER gem picked up lately from some one, we do not know who, was this: God is love; and whatever we find in theology, inconsistent with this attribute, is false doctrine. •

MISS Floorie Bryan, a young English woman has forsaken Christianity, or what goes by that name, and married the Maharajah of Patiala in India; evidently she still believes that two cannot walk together except they agree. There is a natural fitness of things in this. •

WHILE it is as true now as ever it was, that he who will live Godly in the Anointed Jesus shall suffer persecution; it is also as true as ever it was, that if we suffer we shall also reign. And if we want to overbalance the present suffering we must keep up the scale of glory that is to follow;—reach out the arm of faith and bring the future near to us, and so live in its light. •

WE go here and there on the railroads, both steam and electric, as if they had been thousands of years in use;—forgetting what has been accomplished in the lifetime of many now living. Word reaches us from England that Mr. Joseph Willett, who was intimately associated with George Stephenson in the building of the first railway in England, died in Liverpool a few days ago, at the age of 91 years. New methods of propulsion are at this moment being brought out. Two new companies have been organized in New York for furnishing motors for street cars; one employs liquid carbonic acid, and the other liquid ammonia. REPORT comes from Europe that a wholesale expulsion of Jews has been commenced in Poland, and that it will force 1,500,000 people to leave their homes and sacrifice a great part of their property. It is said the edict will reach about three times the number that were affected by that of 1891. No exceptions are made, mechanics, farmers, merchants, even men who have served a full term in the army, the rich and the poor alike are forced to leave their homes forever, within one week of notice. We regard this as a remarkable sign of the times; and it seems as if such a vast deportation would cause the great powers at once in self defense, to take steps to secure a permanent home for them in the land of their fathers. We know they have to go there; and we expect to see a great many of them go there under circumstances that will not lead the world to suspect that a divine hand was directing the movement at all. •

"THE Emperor William of Germany is mad, and says the Army Bill must become a law;" so says the heading of a despatch from Berlin on the 9th. "THE difference between Jesus in the days of his flesh, and the Holy Spirit, is shown by his sayings, that whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of Man, it shall be forgiven him; but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Spirit, it shall not be forgiven him, Matt. xii. 32. To speak against the Son of Man was to speak against the man approved of God, but to speak against the Holy Spirit was to speak against God Himself, whose name is sometimes used interchangeably with that of the Holy Spirit. On this principle many of the difficult sayings of Jesus are to be explained." •

A Memorial Service.

At the old Epworth Memorial Church in Cleveland, memorial services were held last Sunday. They were not in memory of Christ; they were not intended to show forth his death till he come; they profess to think everything of his death, but they do not want him to come here any more; they want to go to him. This was in memory neither of Bethlehem, nor Nazareth, nor Calvary, it is an Epworth Memorial. Epworth is a little town in Lincolnshire, England. It was the birthplace of John Wesley, the founder of Methodism. The Epworth Memorial Church, a moderate sized, plain wooden structure has stood for a number of years on Willson Avenue. The society seems to have prospered, and conceived the idea of forming a league and gathering money from without to build a magnificent temple; from the appearance of things, this too has been a success, for a massive and glistening structure, costing hundred of thousands of dollars now stands where the old one at first stood. The dedication services commence on May 13th, with a Grand Symphony and continue on for a number of days. It will be a great event for Methodists. They have become a most numerous and influential body, and they do well to honor the founder of their church in this way. An immense amount of hoarded wealth has been scattered amongst the working classes; thousands of young people will be kept from immoral company, and the whole establishment will doubtless prove to be an effective religious police station; and mayhap the incoming administration Jesus and his saints will use this vast structure to increase the Government and Peace of the Age to Come. Yes; let them build to their hearts content. It would be easy to do worse than that. If they did not spend their money and time and talent in that way they would not employ them to disseminate truths which they reject themselves.

In one respect these people set an example worthy of our emulation. They have nothing but the traditions of men to build upon, while we have the oath and promise of God, and [illegible] lavish their means upon tradition, and in our hands the cause [illegible] always suffers for lack [illegible] getting that Jehovah [illegible] silver and gold are mine. •

The One Price.

In passing through the streets we frequently see a sign which says, "The One Price Store." We rather like stores where this rule is lived up to strictly, having a natural distaste of what is called "beating down." The one price is safe to be little in excess of that of others, or else it would do no business, and besides this it may often be helpful to those whose judgment may not be of the first order.

The one price store reminds us that one price has been paid for us; we have been bought with a price—the precious blood of Christ. Oh, how precious it was! To realize it we must remember that there was no other precious blood. Oh, what a price! All of the precious blood there was. The Book of God may be ransacked from Genesis to Revelation but only one price will be found. God out of his love gave his only begotten Son, and that Son shed his blood,—paid the price. But reader, it takes two parties to make a contract; we have shown only God's part. Do you know what you must do to secure an interest in that precious blood? As there was but one price paid for all, so the terms for all are one and the same. Faith, Repentence, Baptism, and a Godly life,—these alone will secure the benefits of the sacrifice of Christ. He who would tell his fellows that sincerity will save them, belittles God's gift, undervalues the price, and has the presumption to prescribe the conditions of his own salvation. Faithfully we would say to you, God's saving scheme admits of no dickering. The price has been paid, but you have to surrender. There can be no transfer till the published conditions have been complied with. You cannot have two legal standings. You cannot be in the First Adam and the Second Adam at the same time. One must be put off before the other can be put on. Have you done this? Not if you squirm at the conditions. Heed this kindly admonition. •

The Woman's Seed. No. 9.

Many centuries have passed since Paul that noble soldier of the cross and the crown, said, "The love of Christ constraineth us," but we are happy to confess that we also feel the constraining power of that love. If it be but little we can do for him, we can and do love him: blessed Jesus. We have been looking up several evidences of his love, and happened upon John xii. 27 where he says: "Now is my soul troubled;" this, as the context shews, was in view of the trying ordeal he would soon pass through. It was not a preexistent son who said this, nor an angel, but the man Christ Jesus.

The Woman's Seed, the prospective bruiser of the serpent's head. Does not the invitation to come and reason together, embrace this, as well as every other subject of revelation? If so, we ask, If he were a preexistent person, would he have any cause for trouble? Do we not see what a mighty struggle he had with himself when he was for the moment perplexed to know whether to say, "Father, save me from this hour," or not? It was but for a moment that his weakness troubled him, for he immediately adds, "but for this cause I came unto this hour." When he speaks from heaven to beloved John in Rev. iii. 21, he was an overcomer; but in the Scripture under consideration we see he had not yet overcome, and it was the overcoming that troubled him. If there were no possibility of failure, no such conflict could have taken place. This shows us how "he himself hath suffered, being tempted," and why it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren in all things in order that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God.

We would call attention to what James says in the 13th verse of his first chapter, in this connection: "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God, for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man;" the reason is obvious, there is no evil in him. Jesus was made perfect through suffering; and after being made perfect he could no more be tempted than could God or the holy angels. If we comprehend the mind of the Spirit, and we humbly conceive that we do; because God is a spirit and Jesus has also become spirit; and God maketh his Messengers spirits they cannot be tempted because it is impossible for them to yield to temptation. In a word, To be tempted, implies the possibility of being lured by temptation. Once more let us entreat all to bear in mind that there is only one seed of the woman, one seed of Abraham, one seed of David, one Son of God, one Anointed Jesus, one sacrifice for sin, one Redeemer, and ONE PERSON, not two. And this person,—this Son of God was "made of a woman; made under the law;" and being IN ALL THINGS, made like unto his brethren, he no more had two natures than we; if we are both mortal and immortal so was he. But the impossibility of this will be apparent if it be remembered that man violated the law of God, and was sentenced to death, that being the penalty.

Every man who dies honors the law of God; and at death the account between God and man may have closed forever.—but it did not. Having a desire for the work of his hands, he made new propositions to him although all claims upon him had been forfeited. It must be borne in mind, however, that God is just as well as merciful:—just to himself, as well as to his creatures. And there stood the law which was to take all there was of man to satisfy its claim. It would turn the whole race back to the dust it was taken from, no matter how good, bad or indifferent the characters.

As death, not dying, was the penalty, the law was honored as soon as life was extinct. Why, then, it may be asked, may not God in his goodness revivify them, seeing they have paid the full penalty of his law?—Yes, why? One thing would prevent this, and that is, individual sin. The sin of every man is as obnoxious to the law of God as was the sin of Adam. Death is the wages of sin no matter who commits it; so that if men were raised to life after paying the inevitable debt, they would have to die again for their own sin, and so the whole race is held in the grip of death; for not one was found without sin of his own.

What, then, was necessary in order to redeem men from death without doing violence to the law of God? How could God be just and at the same time be the justifier?

We know exactly what was necessary to be done, by what was done! it was necessary to find one of Adam's race who should live without sin of his own, be perfectly obedient, so that having died like all other men, God could raise him up again, because of his sinlessness and bestow upon him his own, everliving, Divine nature; and set him before the rest of mankind as the object of faith. In this way those who could not live without sin of their own may be freed from their sin justified by FAITH, in him who was justified by his WORKS. Power and authority, has been given him to raise all such and bestow his own divine nature upon these; and bless his holy name he has promised to do it.

God foresaw this dilemma and provided against it, when he promised that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head. To believe that some other person is to do this, is to disbelieve the promise disbelieve the record given by God of his Son when he says he was made of a woman. This is a very serious phase of the subject indeed. We ask all to be careful and not be found opposing plainly revealed truth. And we warn all not to practically charge God with circumventing his own law, by sending a spirit being, who could not possibly sin—could not possibly be disobedient, and say of him, he "knew no sin," and that he was "obedient unto death;" and that because he loved righteousness and hated iniquity he had been anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows," when in reality it was impossible for him to do anything else.

Our present purpose is to furnish one more article, after which texts supposed to be opposed to this line of thought will be examined with what ability God has given us. •

Peter's Second Epistle.
Chap. 3.

1. This second epistle, beloved, now I am writing unto you, in both of which I am stirring up your genuine thought in the way of a reminder,

2. that ye may have called to mind the oracular words previously spoken by the saintly prophets, and the commandment of us the apostles of the Lord and Saviour.

3. Recognizing this fact first, that during the last days mockers will come with mocking, going their way according to their own inordinate desires;

4. And saying, where is the promise of his coming? For since the fathers lay down to sleep all things continue even as from creation's beginning.

5. For they willingly ignore the fact, that there were heavens of old, and the earth constituted from water and through water by the word of God;

6. Whereby the Cosmos of that time when flooded with water perished;

7. While the present heavens and the earth by his word have been treasured up, watched to be kept for fire unto a day of judicial trial and loss of irreverent men,

8. But may ye not have ignored this one thing, beloved, that one day in the estimation of the Lord is as it were a thousand years, and a thousand years as it were one day.

9. The Lord doth not delay his promise as some people account delaying. But is forbearing for your sakes, not desiring that any should perish; but that all should come unto repentance.

10. The day of the Lord though will come like a thief, as it were, in which the heavens will pass away with a rushing sound, and the burning elements and earth will have been dissolved, and the works therein will have been discovered.

11. Then since all these things are things that dissolve, what sort of people doth it behoove us to be in sanctified conduct and true worship;

12. Looking expectantly and zealously promoting the coming of the day of God, during which heavens on fire will have been dissolved and elements melt as they burn?

13. New heavens though and a new earth we are to be expectantly looking for, in which dwelleth righteousness.

14. Therefore, beloved, since ye are expectantly looking for these things, may ye have been earnest to be found spotless and blameless by him in peace;

15. And account ye the forbearance of our Lord salvation, even as also our beloved brother, Paul, according to the wisdom given him hath written you,

16. Talking in them even as in all his epistles about these things, in which there are some things hard to apprehend, which the untaught and unstable wrest as they do the rest of the Scriptures to their own loss.

17. Do ye, then beloved, since ye know beforehand, be on your guard that ye be not led away with the error of the lawless and fall away from your own support;

18. And be growing in grace and an acquaintance with our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

To him be the glory both now and unto a day of an age. Amen.

COMMENT.

"Genuine thought" instead of "sincere mind" R. V. suggests to the reader the fact that there is such a thing as spurious thought. There is a great deal of laborious thought in this world of the latter kind, thinking to no purpose or something worse, misleading thought.

"Saintly prophets" instead of "holy" R. V. for reasons already given.

"From water and through water" instead of "out of water and amidst water" R. V.

"Whereby" refers to these two uses of water.

"In the estimation of the Lord as it were" instead of "with the Lord as" R. V.

"The Lord doth not delay etc." instead of "The Lord is not slack etc." R. V.

"Not desiring" instead of "not willing" R. V. There is a vast difference between a "desire" and "a will" or "purpose."

"And the burning elements and earth will have been dissolved and the works therein will have been discovered" instead of, "And the elements shall be dissolved with fervent heat and the earth and the things in it shall be burned up" R. V. A very material difference of thought as it seems to me. We dissolve metals to mould them into new shapes. We do not burn them up. Is not this the thought here? There is to be "a new earth and a new heavens." Will not the old material be used with an elimination of the dross?

"Zealously promoting" instead of "earnestly desiring" R. V. implies work on our part, something to do as well as "desire."

"Which the untaught and unstable" instead of "the ignorant and unsteadfast" R. V. "The rest of the Scriptures" instead of "the other Scriptures" R. V. a violation of a common Greek idiom.

This reference here to Paul shows that even in Peter's day Paul was misunderstood and misinterpreted, and the "wresting" still goes on "unto their own loss" instead of "destruction" R. V.

"Unto a day of an age" instead of "forever" R. V.

Hoping that the reader may have found profit as well as pleasure in this study of Peter's two epistles and may have formed a new conception of Peter's character, we will try and take up some thing else in our next.

Our Coming Conference.

The annual recurrence of the month in which the roses bloom, and all nature seems revived from her long wintry sleep, brings with it another blessing, especially to the lovers of God's truth, that is, our precious June meeting. Around it cluster pleasant associations that linger in the memory as both [illegible] part. And now with deep solicitude some hearts are stirred with this question: what kind of a meeting shall the Antioch Conference be?

In Iowa the brethren have a programme arranged, and judging from the topics to be discussed a rich feast awaits those who attend. It has been kindly suggested that we have a programme for our meeting, and while this would certainly be very desirable as well as profitable it is feared that there is not time enough between this and the meeting to arrange one. It is not known yet who the speakers will be, and if known it would require some time for the necessary correspondence to decide upon some plan of action. But in the absence of a pre-arranged system, there can be a profitable and interesting meeting held at "Old Antioch" if each brother and sister will resolve to try to make it a good one on the same principle that we always have most excellent dinners, because each one brings the best they have, and if we all do this I believe a feast awaits us all, and one that will like Elijah's heaven-sent meal, do us good many days hence.

Let each of us then resolve that (as this may be the last meeting at this place) it shall be the best. Come then, with hearts full of love to God, and that warm affection for each other that is the out growth of love to God. Lay aside the heavy burdens of life, they can be resumed afterwards with renewed strength to bear them. If deep sorrow fill your heart, come where mutual sympathy can in a measure alleviate it. If your life is full of sunshine, oh come and diffuse a few pleasant rays that may light up the darkened pathway of others who so much need it. The Master is coming, let there be at least another family reunion to talk over matters of the deepest importance to all the children.

Love to all the faithful.

Dear Restitution:

Since our last report of labors, a few more desiring eternal life have come to the fold again. Others have started anew for the kingdom by putting on Christ by baptism.

At our last visit at Hesperia, six were added to the church. We spoke twelve times there. Leaving there we went to Fremont, where we spoke by request of the Disciple brethren twice in their church. Leaving there with the promise of visiting them again as soon as possible in the future. We next went to Byron, where on account of a very severe snow storm which blockaded the roads we were only able to have two meetings, resulting in the baptism of Brother and Sister Moses' only daughter. This greatly rejoiced us all, and when we saw the tears of joy rolling down their cheeks, we knew that our labors had not been in vain, and we committed her to the tender care of a loving father and mother, and went on our way to Leighton where two intelligent women gladly stepped down into the baptismal wave. May God keep Sisters Gates and Cross so faithful that by them their homes may be sanctified to the Lord, and many looking at them may desire to know the way. O, that we had strength to speak every night in the week to some one who knows not the way of life or how to gain that sweet gift from God. Pray earnestly brethren for the cause of truth, that God may give his servants whoever they are, health and strength wherever they may labor for the truth, that many may be saved in the day of his appearing.

Yours working for the Master.

A Cruel Swindler.

A successful imposition on a widow in Hungary is described in a despatch to a New York Journal. The woman lives at a small village named Bezdon, where every one knows his neighbor's business. Her husband had been an industrious, thrifty man and he left her all his savings, amounting to about four hundred dollars. A few days after his death, the widow received a mysterious visitor. He came in the dead of night, after she had retired to rest, and he had some difficulty in inducing her to rise and dress and admit him. Eventually, he succeeded, and then he told her that he was the bearer of a communication from her late husband. In fact, he said, he was the Apostle Peter, who had the keys of heaven. Her husband had presented himself there, but had been refused admittance on account of his having during his lifetime neglected to contribute to the charities of the Church. Nothing less than the sacrifice of all his savings would purge him of this sin and he trusted that his widow would consent to the sacrifice. The poor widow was too much agitated by the appearance of her visitor, who had a long beard and wore a loose flowing robe, to exercise her ordinary good sense. She was also much distressed by the report of her dead husband's condition and she finally handed to her visitor the four hundred dollars, which was all she had in the world. The police are searching for the impostor, but so far without success. It is a pity that the woman was not better instructed, but her ignorance is not without parallel. There are many, even among people who should know better, who seem to think that money given to Christ's cause will secure for them admission to heaven, in spite of inconsistency of life. (I Cor. xiii. 3.)

Dear Restitution:

I am a girl of eleven years, but I feel like I would like to write a few lines to THE RESTITUTION, if there is room for it. I would like to tell you my favorite verse in the Bible, it is "Blessed, are the pure in heart, for they shall see God" I think no one will see God, unless they are pure in heart. I hope I will be pure and reach that beautiful home in the kingdom. Pray for me that I may be faithful to the end.

Yours in hope,

Poetry.

Boast not of Tomorrow.

Boast not thyself of to-morrow,
As you journey life's pathway along;
You have no claim on the morrow,
Though to-day you be healthy and strong.

Boast not thyself of the morrow,
For you know not what will come
To blight all your anticipations,
Ere the rise of another sun.

Boast not thyself of to-morrow,
Though wealth be at your door—
To-morrow the record of fortune
May number you with the poor.

To-day may find you in vigor,
And you feel on yourself to depend;
To-morrow may find you in sickness,
Needing the help of a friend.

The present is all you can claim,
Then seek to do right this day,
Remember the moments and hours
Are swiftly passing away.

Boast not thyself of to-morrow,
For your life is as fleeting as breath;
The morrow which in your boasting,
May find you in the bands of death.

The "Swaying Furnace."

Mr. Dana, of the New York Sun, who has been spending a year in Europe and the East, writes to his journal an interesting letter about Jerusalem. He visited that interesting city last November. "It was formerly," he says, "very difficult and even dangerous to go there. But now it is safe, easy, and comparatively inexpensive." The route from Jaffa now is by railroad. There is now, says Mr. Dana, one daily train that makes the round trip between Jaffa and Jerusalem, and the first class fare is 10 francs. "The time of leaving Jerusalem is 9 a. m. and the returning train starts from Jaffa at 2 p. m. The running time is about three hours and a half. The language used upon the line by guards and station men is French." Then follows a reference to a very curious superstition among the Eastern Jews, which we quote in another column, with the Hebrew word on which it seems to rest. It is to the effect that the opening of a railroad to Jerusalem "must precede the coming of the Messiah." This curious belief seems to be prevalent among the Oriental Jews. Mr. Dana ascribes its origin to the last chapter of the prophecies of Isaiah, where the final ingathering of the Hebrews is to be heralded by various couriers, including one kind which the text translates as "swift beasts," but which is in the Hebrew, according to Mr. Dana, a "swaying furnace." This, Mr. Dana thinks, is a picturesque word to describe a locomotive. Hence (Mr. Dana leaves it to be inferred), the Jews may be right in anticipating "the coming of the Messiah."

There are many persons who seem to be looking for the event here indicated; the Oriental Jews look for "the Messiah," and the Second Advent believers, on this side of the Atlantic, look for "the second coming of Christ."

Most religious beliefs are apt to contain some element of truth. The belief that the world is on the border of a great change, though it may not prove to be exactly the occurrence believed in by the Jews of the East, or the Second-Adventists of the West, is apparently more widely spread than the limits of either or both of those people. Many believe the ending years of this remarkable nineteenth century are to bring some impressive change, in religious, social or political affairs—perhaps in all. Probably a great change may be already going on; but it is not likely to be limited to the closing years of the present century. It may not be wise to be expecting miracles, or any supernatural occurrence. The order of things in this world (and probably in other worlds than ours) is not to move by miraculous steps. Apparently the world has entered already upon the most remarkable epoch it has yet seen; but the development of human progress is not in the miraculous order, but by natural and graduated steps—by gentle degrees, through which the greater light comes; as the dawn gradually opens into the beautiful light of sunrise, and the sunrise broadens and brightens into the perfect day. The "swaying furnace" which now pants daily from Jaffa up to Jerusalem isn't going to introduce to the world any miracle. It may wake up the sleepy and untidy Jewish quarter of that historic town, and bring its people more into touch with the great pulsating heart of the moving world. It may be the herald of such things as, seen (as they will at some time be seen) in and around Jerusalem and Damascus, will cause some people to believe that the Messiah has really come. And so it may be in reality, to their apprehension—for the marvels to be wrought when the (as yet) mysterious element we call electricity shall be brought more perfectly under human control and directed to channels of human uses now undreamed of, will surpass any we have yet seen. Nor is that time so far buried in the remote future as many may yet suppose. It is probably not very far off. The tide of human affairs is moving faster now than it ever has moved before.—Hartford, Conn. Times.

Jerusalem and the Messiah.

I have been told by a friend, Dr. Pereira Mendes that there is a notion among Oriental Jews that the opening of a railway to Jerusalem must precede the coming of the Messiah. This he heard nearly twenty years ago when minister of a congregation almost wholly composed of Hebrews from north Africa, Turkey, Greece, Asia Minor, and the farther East. The foundation for the opinion appears to be the last chapter of the prophecies of Isaiah, in an eloquent prediction of the return of the Hebrew exiles, where we read: "They shall bring all your brethren out of all the nations, for an offering unto the Lord, upon horses, and in chariots, and in litters, and upon mules, and upon swift beasts to my holy mountain, Jerusalem, saith the Lord."

The Hebrew word which is translated "swift beast," in the English version is כרכרות (kirkaroth), and occurs only this once in all the Bible. The roots of the word are found in 2 Samuel vi. 14, where it is applied to the swaying dance of David, and in the common Hebrew word for furnace.

Hence the derived meaning, as Dr. Mendes tells me, "a swaying furnace." For the English rendering there is no justification whatever in the sense of the Hebrew word in the text. Some propose to translate it "dromedaries;" but the same prophet only a few chapters before (lx. 6), uses a totally different word, the accepted equivalent of which is "dromedary." It is certainly neither camels nor asses, for there are well-known Hebrew words regularly used for these. When the English translation was made in King James's time there was no word to express the Hebrew in this passage; but what more accurate epithet could be applied to a railway locomotive than to call it a swaying furnace? And what more accurate term could the prophet use to describe what he had seen in his vision of the return of the Hebrews by all kinds of conveyances, among them one which he had never beheld in all his experience, but which "swayed" and carried fire? What a picturesque word to describe a train or locomotive in rapid motion!—New York Sun.

A Dated Codex of the Samaritan Pentateuch.

Among the manuscripts I recently brought from Syria is one of special interest to Biblical scholars. It is a copy of the entire Samaritan Pentateuch—the Hebrew text, not the version. I found it in May, 1892, in the possession of a Moslem of Nablus, who had purchased it, with other effects, of an aged Samaritan then lately deceased.

The manuscript at present is bound in the form of an Oriental book. It consists of two leaves of paper, followed by two hundred and sixty-nine leaves of parchment, and four leaves of paper complete the volume of five hundred and fifty unnumbered pages. The leaves are now about 12½x10½ inches in size, but were cut down some in rebinding. The text is in the Samaritan character and covers a space about 8¼x7¼ inches on both sides of the leaf. In the parchment portion there are from twenty-six to twenty-nine lines to the page, both the extremes being of rare occurrence; but in the paper portion as many as forty-six lines are found, including the blanks between paragraphs. On the first page, otherwise blank, is the name in Arabic of a former owner, the Samaritan Ephraim the son of Rizq, and on the last page is an Arabic colophon which states that this Holy Torah, in the hand-writing of the Sheik Abraham, Judge of Israel (ישראל שופט), was repaired and the portions missing from the beginning and end supplied by Jacob, the son of Aaron, the son of Ishmael(?), the son of Ghazal, the son of Isaac, the son of Abraham, the priest. The text on parchment, which is throughout from one hand, begins with "For dust thou art," of Gen. iii. 19, and ends with "to hear my voice" of Deut. xxx. 20; the manuscript is in such a good state of preservation that between these limits scarcely a letter of the original scribe's work is past recovery.

I have discovered four cryptograms. Where they occur the pages present three columns, but the text runs across the whole page. Two lateral columns of equal size are separated by narrow but well-defined spaces from a central one of a single letter to a line. In reading the cryptogram you go from top to bottom along the central column. The desired result is secured simply by the arrangement of the writing and the interlineation of punctuation marks. In the largest of the four there are seven instances of a portion of a word being found at the bottom of one page and the rest on the next, although in his ordinary work the writer never divided a word at the end of a line.

(a) The first cryptogram, which reads יהוה נציץ קרביה, is found on p. 159, embodied in Ex. xiv. 24-29, where is recorded Yahve's overthrow of the Egyptians in the Red Sea.

(b) The 2d, מכתב אברהם נסיאה, "writing of Abraham the prince;" occurs on p. 182, in the text of Ex. xv. 22-16:3. The same information is given in the fourth. Notice, however, the variant spelling of ס for ש

(c) The 3d, חצי התורה, "Middle of the Law," on p. 272, runs through the twelve lines containing the passage, Lev. vii 12-16. The London and Paris Polyglots insert between vss. 15 and 16 of Lev. xvii, the two words דארצותה פלנה but Kennicott did not find them in any of the Samaritan manuscripts that he collated. (Vid Blayney in loc.)

(d) The fourth and longest covers the first sixteen pages of Deuteronomy (pp. 462-477 inclusive), and is as follows:

"I, Abraham the son of Israel the son of Ephraim the son of Joseph the prince king of Israel, wrote the copy of this Holy Torah for myself in the name of my children in the year six hundred and twenty-nine of the kingdom of Ishmael, which (it) is the year three thousand and two hundred of the dwelling of the children of Israel in the land of Canaan and (it) is the year five thousand and nine hundred and ninety-three of the formation of the world. And it is the completion of seventy-four Torahs [which] I wrote, and the days of the years of my life in the tread of it are sixty years; I praise Yahve. And I ask him to prolong their lives until children and children's children study in it. Amen. Amen. Amen."

This proves the parchment portion of the codex to have been written A. H. 629 A. D. 1232. This statement must be taken as entirely trustworthy; embodied in the text as it is, it could not be tampered with as a colophon might. This manuscript is, therefore, one of the oldest copies of the Samaritan Pentateuch in the hands of scholars, and one of the very few whose date is certainly known.—W. Scott Watson in Independent.

The Queen of All.

Honor the dear old mother. Time has scattered the snowy flakes on her brow, plowed deep furrows on her cheek, but is she not sweet and beautiful now? The lips are thin and shrunken, but those are the lips which have kissed many a hot tear from the childish cheeks, and they are the sweetest lips in all the world. The eye is dim, yet it glows with all the soft radiance of holy love which can never fade. Ah, yet, she is a dear mother. The sands of life are nearly run out, but feeble as she is, she will go further and reach down lower for you than any other on earth. You cannot walk into a midnight where she cannot see you; you cannot enter a prison whose bars will keep her out; you cannot mount a scaffold too high for her to reach that she may kiss and bless you in evidence of her deathless love. When the world shall despise and forsake you, when it leaves you by the wayside unnoticed, the dear old mother will gather you in her feeble arms and carry you home, and tell you of all of your virtues until you almost forget that your soul is disfigured by vices. Love her tenderly, and cheer her declining years with holy devotion.

The New Name.

To him that overcometh Christ promises a new name. The real name is the promise of a new nature, new power, new privileges. Abram, the high father, becomes Abraham, the father of a multitude, or of many nations; Jacob, the supplanter, becomes Israel, the prince of God; Simon becomes Cephas, a stone, the impetuous weakness of his nature transformed into the strength and firmness of a rock.

The new self is as individual as the old; nay, it is more so. It is the real self. Sin dwarfs, distorts and weakens the nature. Spiritual life restores it to the glory for which it was designed. Holiness is self-realization. When the prodigal son came to himself, he hastened to return to his father's house.

The new name, the new nature, the new powers, the new privileges, come from Christ. He only realizes his best possibilities who makes the perfect character of Christ his ideal, who is inspired by his teachings and is renewed by his Spirit. Salvation is character. It is a divine life which stamps the image of Christ on the heart and makes the daily life a Gospel. As the sunshine fixes a picture on the sensitive prepared plate, so the lineaments of Christ are wrought by the Holy Spirit on the heart that turns toward him. "We are changed into the same image, from glory to glory, as by the Spirit of the Lord." He that has the new name can say with Paul: "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Paul was immeasurably more of a man when he could say, "Not I, but Christ liveth in me," than when he lived in all good conscience, but was blind to the beauty and opposed to the will of the God-man. Human nature is a vast organ, whose music Christ alone can fully bring out.

His Eye Seeth Every Precious Thing.

He sees the promise and possibility. There are things—many things—of which everybody at a glance can see the worth; precious things that proclaim themselves loudly. You seem to see their price attached to them. The golden crown, shaped by art and bedecked with flashing diamonds and the glitter of a thousand gems, claims everybody's praise at once. But away behind all this there was a genius that saw these precious things when as yet they were not; who saw them where others saw no sign, or the crown would never have been at all. Where nobody else saw anything there was some man who read the promise of gold and dug for it—dug on when the patience of others was worn out. He was the genius. There was the man who saw in the rough rock, or down in earth's darkness, the hope of the diamond—who knew it when he found it, a coarse thing without any sign of worth, that scarce any body in London would stoop to pick up.

In Victoria I was anxious to go down a gold mine. The very name and sound of the thing was enough to fill the imagination with all sorts of wonders, so I put on the rough dress of the miner, and lit my candle, and went down for some hundreds of feet underground. Then, the thick darkness only slightly disturbed by our candles, we splashed along through the pools that filled the tramways, and stooped through the low and narrow passages, until we came to the place where the men were at work. Here and there between the dark rock ran a line of white quartz, just like a vein of marble. Not a sign or trace of gold glistened in the candlelight; not a single particle of the precious metal gleamed anywhere. The gold was in the dark quartz, but invisible. To me there was no sign; no possibility of gold. I sighed, and said: "So this is a gold mine; water dripping from above, muddy puddles under foot, with roof and sides of bare rock." Yet the expert knew it, and saw in it the treasure, and from here there went the flashing gold.

Come, let us take it to ourselves. There is a sigh from many a heart: "I am no good, mere waste. Why should the sunshine and all the great mysteries of God's world be mine since they are turned to so poor account? What good am I to any one anywhere?" Here is comfort and hope for such a one. Dear soul, this is our God; not only when we have gained a thousand victories and reached some eminence and usefulness shall he see in us some worth, but now. We get down into the depths of the soul, and it is dark. In the muddy ways and in the gloom, search as you will, you will find no slightest gleam, no faintest trace of gold. But in you, in me, our God sees such promise and possibility that for us he gave his all that he might have us and enrich us with his own beauty. Come to him; give yourself up to him. Worth nothing to ourselves, worth little to others, to him we are worth more than anyone can ever tell. His eye seeth every precious thing.

There are some who are amazed at the use that God has made of them. But a few years ago if they had been told that they would be engaged in such work for the Master as they are doing to-day they would have fainted at the idea of attempting it. God sees the possibilities. God can turn you to a glorious worth and use if you will but simply and honestly give yourself right up to him. It takes genius to see the beginnings of genius, to see the promise in the rough sketch with its blunders; in the blundering of the little musician to detect the hints of future power. So gracious, so skillful is our heavenly Master! Where others see nothing he sees much. His eye seeth every precious thing.—Methodist Times.

Two Stakes.

If you have ever tried to plough a straight furrow in the country—we are sorry for the man that does not know how to plough and still more sorry for the poor fellow that is too proud to want to know—you have found out that it is necessary to have two stakes in a line and to drive your horses by these stakes. If you have only one stake before you, you will have no steadying point for your vision, but you can wiggle about without knowing it and make your furrow as crooked as a serpent's coil; but if you have two stakes and keep them ever in line, you cannot deviate an inch from a straight line, and your furrow will be like an arrow speeding to its course.

This has been a great lesson to us in our Christian life. If we would run a straight course, we find that we must have two stakes, the near and the distant. It is not enough to be living in the present, but it is a great and glorious thing to have a distant goal, a definite object, a clear purpose before us for which we are living, and unto which we are shaping our present.

The blessed Son of God always recognized the distant future, the great baptism with which he was to be baptized; and even when a child he was getting ready to be about his Father's business. So we find young Joseph, that model character, looking forward, even from his earliest youth, to the vision of his coming glory. So the great Apostle Paul was always pressing on to some great future in his life-work to preach the Gospel in the regions beyond, to stand in the name of Jesus in the palace of Ceasar, claiming the whole world for Jesus. That Word of God, "Thou must bear witness of me at Rome, also," was like a distant stake holding him strong and steady amid the years of trial and persecution.

Dear young friends, you want the distant stake of a high object, of a definite aim, of a glorious goal, in your life. We grow as big as the things we live for. Any man or woman that has a small object will be a small man or woman; but a very small man living for a glorious thing, must grow great. There is no object that can make you greater, by the grace of God, and give a grander purpose to your life, than the glorious work of evangelizing the world. Put your stake a little further out, my dear brethren: yonder on the shores of India, or the banks of the Congo, or the interior of Africa, or the swamps of the Soudan, or the mountains of Thibet; higher, further, onward, upward, press ahead, and then remember, "no man having put his hand to the plough and looking back is fit for the kingdom of God." Christian Alliance.

Christian Courage.

Courage is as necessary to success in the Christian life as in any less spiritual undertaking, and in nothing is it more certain to be productive of great results.

The maxim that applies so often in worldly matters, "Be sure you are right, and then go ahead," may well be remembered and put in practice by the Christian with an emphasis on the concluding words. Many fail to reap the results that they might from the knowledge which they possess, simply because they have not the courage to "go ahead." In the last day, the "fearful" are found no better off than the unbelievers and murderers. Rev. xxi. 8.

Courage, in the spiritual sense, is synonymous with faith. Faith is belief in the word and power of God, the Omnipotent; hence where faith is, there can be no fear. With the eye of faith the individual sees God doing the work, and therefore feels no doubt over the result.

The Christian pathway is beset with difficulties, and it is the purpose of the Devil to magnify these into what will seem to be insuperable obstacles. He will always make the imaginary difficulties much greater than the real ones. He magnifies the difficulties, but carefully hides the blessings. He wants every one to think that the Christian life is a hard, toilsome, and gloomy one. He constantly aims to hide the individual view from the One who is able to do all things, and the sight of whom gives confidence and strength, and to impress him with the thought of the hard things he must do to obtain eternal life.

But there are no conditions under which apparent obstacles will more readily yield to a bold forward movement than those which invest the pathway to immortality. Seen through the gloomy haze which the prince of darkness delights to cast around it, this pathway appears filled with the shadows of mountains and the vague outlines of spectral shapes that stand to bar the traveller's progress,—things which the dark magician has used to conjure up, and place before the doubtful eye of the faint-hearted candidate for the life to come. There is the denial of self, the loss of wealth, friendships, the sacrifice that must be made, and hardships endured, all clothed with the semblance of reality, and wearing their darkest aspect, to deter the timid from venturing onward in response to the divine call. And very many allow these dark specters to impress their minds with fears and doubts, until they halt in the way, and then drift slowly and surely backward. But when with the firm tread of faith they march boldly up to the obstacles, the mountain shrinks to a mole hill, and the shapes which seemed so formidable vanish into the empty realms from whence they came, leaving the pilgrim surprised at his own fearfulness and distrust. The obstacles he does encounter are rarely found to be those which he anticipated, and moving out in faith, he meets no difficulty without also finding the means by which to surmount it. With God's word beneath us and his power within us, we can march boldly up to what seem the most gigantic obstacles, in the fullest confidence that they will give way before us if not disappear altogether. Where there is an irresistible power, there can be no movable obstacle; and where faith is there is an irresistible power. This is the time for every Christian to bear in mind the words of the apostle to the Hebrews (Heb. x. 38, 39,) "Now the just shall live by faith; but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him. But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe to the saving of the soul.—Review and Herald.

DIED

At her home in Benton Harbor, Mich. Apr. 28, 1893, Juliet Andrews, wife of Brother Samuel Andrews, aged 72 years, 9 months, and 3 days.

Sister Andrews was born in Virginia, July 25, 1820. Married Dec. 7, 1837, soon after joining the Disciple Church. Some years after, hearing the Gospel of the Kingdom, The restitution of all things, and the Second Coming of Christ, and resurrection from the dead, preached by Moses Hull, she obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine, which will give her an abundant entrance into that glorious rest which God has promised to all his faithful children.

Sister Andrews was much loved by all who knew her. Her neat little home always seemed so inviting. The cordial welcome from her and Brother Andrews, and to hear her sweet gentle voice and kindly words, never forgetting the precious promises which were her consolation and hope, was indeed a pleasure

She was taken with a chill Sunday the 23rd. Thursday she seemed restless and said several times that she "wished she might go to sleep, and sleep till Jesus comes." Friday A. M. she went to sleep, and her wish was answered, she never woke.

Brother Andrews and three children survive her. For him the sunshine of his life has gone out, but, may his sorrow soon be turned to joy in the glad awakening at the resurrection day.

[illegible] is it.

The inspired James says, "brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him, let him know he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death and shall hide a multitude of sins." James vi. 19-20. Is this not strange since our spiritual guides tell us there is no death. The soul they tell us is immortal, cannot die. This same inspired man says: "then when lust hath conceived it bringeth forth sin, and sin when it is finished it (but our spiritual guides tell us that sin will never be finished but will be perpetuated to all eternity:) bringeth forth death." Strange again. There is no death, says our modern guides. Chap. i. 15. Do not err my beloved brethren. Verse 16.

Patient Job says, "For the congregation (church) of hypocrites shall be desolate, and fire shall consume the tabernacles of bribery." Strange again. Our guides tell us that the congregation of hypocrites will not be consumed, but preserved in the fire. Job xv. 34.

Not long since, I heard one of our spiritual guides preach the funeral of a child. He said the child was not dead, but in heaven. Her body, her house, was buried north of the church, he said her body was her house. Here again the inspired Job is strange. He dosent say my body is my house, but he does say the grave (sheol, hades,) is mine house. Chap. xvii. 13.

Elder Tatom said the little child would by and by come back, go to the grave north of the church, get into her little body (house) and raise it. But strange. Job says of him that dies, "He shall return no more to his house." Then according to Job the little child will return no more to her house. But the Elder comes and says in effect, Job, you know nothing about this matter. Your body is your house, and not the grave as you say. You will return and get into your house and raise it at the judgment day. Job vi. 10. Strange our guides tell us that when we die, if we be good Baptists, we go to heaven, if wicked we go to hell to be punished, and after we have been enjoying the bliss of heaven, or the tortures of hell, for say, ten thousand years, we must be brought back and judged. Is it possible that some one has been enjoying the bliss of heaven that had no right there. Or is it that some saint has been tortured in hell for five thousand years that aught to have been in heaven all these centuries. If not why this future judgment? If all go to the right place at death, why this judgment some time in the future?

Would it not be a relief to the wicked to bring them out of hell for a short time, at least would it not be like a drop of cold water to the tormented? Again, would it not be torturous to the saints in heaven to take them away from joy, and bring them to earth to be environed with their sinful bodies, or houses? At least it seems strange to me. The Bible says of dead ones that they shall return no more to their house (bodies if you please).

Our spiritual guides tell us that the man after God's own heart, to-wit, David, is in heaven vieing around the throne of God. They also tell us heaven is up. How could King David go to heaven without ascending pray?

Near two thousand years ago an inspired apostle of the Lord Jesus, one who had been in the school of Jesus for about three years and six months, namely, Peter, on the Pentecost after the ascension of the great Teacher, Peter being one of the twelve disciples, (learned) now Jesus had taught them among many other things that he would be killed and raised the third day, that his soul would not be left in Sheol, Hades, neither would his flesh see corruption. That God would raise him out of death to set on David's throne. Strange is it not?

Jesus promised the twelve that if he went he would send them another Comforter, even the Spirit of Truth, which was to guide them into all truth, and bring to their remembrance all things whatsoever he had taught them. This spirit which the world could not receive was to reprove the world of sin and righteousness and judgment, came after they had been filled with the Holy Spirit. The Spirit of Truth. Peter being spokesman, says among other things of David, that he has not ascended to heaven. Further that David is both dead and buried. See Acts ii. 24-35.

CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

Conference Call.

"Rally once again." The time for another "Grand Army" reunion has almost reached us again. "Occupy until I come" is the grand motto and it should be emblazoned upon the escutcheon of every volunteer in the ranks. Can we meet this watchword with the echoing answer, "Here am I, use me for the Master's service." If so rally one and all, at this yearly conference to be held at the old post, in Dutton, Kent Co. Michigan. Beginning Thursday evening, June 1st, and lasting over Sunday.

The army of occupation until the King shall come, is not as full as it ought to be, and at this yearly gathering we hope to see many volunteers added to its ranks.

The Captain of our salvation has not yet called for a draft to be made, but he has called for willing workers to help to the front and work. Work until he comes. Who will be here to help sound out the clarion notes of the coming King Immanuel, and who of the already enlisted will hurry to the reserve in [illegible] of [illegible] comforting exhortation, sympathy, love, who will come who loves the cause of truth more than popularity, or dress, or gaiety, or [illegible]. They are the ones who will help gain recruits for the Kingdom. Come, come to work for that object.

Dutton is on the M. C. R. R. ten miles southeast of Grand Rapids. Trains reach here from Grand Rapids at 1:40 P. M. 5:40 P. M. and 11:30 evening. From the south they reach here at 5:15 A. M. 9:30 A. M. 12:50 P. M. and 9:50 P. M.

The annual conference of the churches of God of the Abrahamic faith in Iowa, will meet at Clarksville, Butler Co. Iowa, June the 2nd, 1893, and continue over two Sundays. The large audience tent and a half dozen or more small or living tents will be ready to accommodate those who come. And as the preaching brethren are always ready to make any sacrifice to be present, and labor for the interest of the meeting and the good of all, we hope and earnestly entreat all who have an interest in the cause of the Master and are looking for his soon coming to make a sacrifice also if necessary to be at this meeting, for we are persuaded that while all mean to be steadfast, yet there is an ominous tendency to falling away among all Christian societies that will proceed his coming. Then let us, as many as can possibly do so, go to this meeting, determined to make it a means of filling our lamps with that oil that will throw light along the way of the bridegroom's approach, so that if we slumber and sleep before his arrival we will be ready when the final cry is sounded to go out to meet him, and go in with him to the wedding, and not have the door shut upon us while we go to seek for light. He may be nearer than we think.

Libbie Palmer, Sec.

The Church of God, in Nebraska, will hold their Third Quarterly Conference, D. V. at the Fairview School-house, Furnas Co. commencing Friday evening, June 2nd, and continue over the following Sunday.

The [illegible] relative to the next Annual Conference, and tent work require the attendance of all the brethren. The signs that foretell "His glorious appearing" are fast culminating. That day may be nearer than we think. "Therefore, beloved, seeing ye look for such things, be ye diligent, that ye may be found of him in peace without spot and blameless."

J. J. Cady, Sec'y.

The annual meeting of the Church of God near Scholl's Ferry, will convene at the Flint School-house, on the evening of June 9, 1893, and continue over Sunday.

Bro. Corbaley is expected to be there, yet it is not certain. If it should so happen that he cannot be with us, we shall not be without preaching brethren. We have Bros. Prosser, Skeels, and Jaquith.

Dear brothers and sisters, another year has almost gone into the past, and what has been our record? Have we remembered all through the year that we are—(or should be) "living epistles known and read of all men."

May we all attend this meeting fully [illegible] to make it an interesting one to all. When we see destruction, misery and death on every hand, it behooves us to "put on the whole armor of God, and watch unto prayer, lest we enter into temptation and the day of the Lord come upon us unawares."

There are a number of isolated brethren scattered throughout Oregon and Washington, from whom we would be glad to hear by letter, if they cannot be with us.

Almira Brooks, Sec'y.

Let us meet and enjoy one more good meeting at Antioch. Let as many of the churches send delegates as can conveniently. All lovers of the truth in Indiana are invited, and friends and brethren from other states will receive a hearty welcome.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.

VOL. XLII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAY 24, 1893. NO. 20.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Original.

Socinians.

A short article signed "Wiley Jones" appears in THE RESTITUTION for April 5th. A few thoughts suggested thereby may not be out of place. The writer says—"Let us take care not to tie such a millstone as socinianism about the neck of the gospel of the kingdom, for on the belief of that gospel our eternal salvation depends." This is good advice, and discriminates fairly between what is fundamental and resting on plain and solid Scripture statements, and what may be whether true or false, derived from the reasonings of the human mind on inexplicit statements. This same advice has many fitting applications beyond that of the teachings of the Socinians regarding the person of our Lord. But a word to the wise is enough.

The paragraph quoted from the Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge is scarcely full enough in regard to the Socinians. For instance, the Encyclopedia Perthensis, published about the beginning of the present century, says "They (the Socinians) likewise maintain the sleep of the soul, which they say becomes insensible at death, and is raised again with the body at the resurrection, when the good shall be established in the possession of eternal felicity, while the wicked shall be consigned to a fire that will not torment them eternally, but for a certain duration proportioned to their demerits."

It may be interesting to note one or two things connected with the elder and younger Socinus regarding their mission as truth-seekers in an age of gross darkness and superstition. In the Encyclopedia I have quoted, it is stated that the elder, Laelius was born in Sienna in Tuscany, Italy, in 1525. Designed for the law, he began to search for the foundation of that science in the Word of God; and by that study discovered that the Romish religion taught many things contrary to Revelation; when, being desirous of penetrating farther into the true sense of the Scriptures, he studied Greek, Hebrew, and even Arabic. In 1547 he left Italy to go and converse with the Protestants, and spent four years in travelling through France, England, the Netherlands, Germany and Portugal, and at length settled at Zurich. He thus became acquainted with the most learned men of his time, who testified by their letters the esteem they had for him; but as he discovered to them his doubts, he was greatly suspected of heresy. He however conducted himself with so much prudence that he lived among the capital enemies of his opinions without receiving any injury. He met with some who heard his instructions with respect; these were Italians who left their native country on account of religion, and wandered about in Germany and Poland. He likewise communicated his sentiments to his relations by his writings. He died at Zurich in 1562. Those who were of sentiments opposite to his, and were personally acquainted with him, confess that his outward behavior was blameless. He wrote a paraphrase on the first chapter of St. John; and other works are ascribed to him.

Some additional facts of importance are stated in Chamber's Encyclopedia—"The principles of the Reformation had slowly found their way into Italy, and in 1540 a secret society was formed at Vicenza for the discussion of religious questions. It was composed of 40 persons distinguished by their rank, their occupations, etc. Socinus was admitted a member. The conclusions at which they arrived were unfavorable to the dogma of the Trinity, which they held to have been borrowed by the early church from the speculations of Greek philosophers. The purpose of their meetings together having been discovered, the society broke up. Some of the members were arrested and put to death, others sought safety in flight. Among the latter was Socinus."

"Faustus, nephew of the preceding, and principal founder of the Socinian sect, was born at Sienna in 1530. The letters which his uncle Laelius wrote to his relations made an impression on him; so that he fled as well as the rest, when the inquisition began to persecute that family. To be brief, Faustus drew up a system of divinity of which his uncle had made a rough draught. He resolved to propagate his principles, for which purpose he wrote a treatise De Iesu Christo Servatore (Of the Savior Jesus Christ).

After various experiences at Lyons, Basil, Cracow in Poland, he died at a village about nine miles from Cracow in 1604. All his works are contained in the first two volumes of Bibliotheca Fratrum Polonorum."

Considering the time, locality, and circumstances in which those two men lived, it must be acknowledged that to them the credit is due of making an honest endeavor to dispel some of the darkness by which they were surrounded. And whatever amount of error their views may contain, and however they may clash with the ideas of many in our day, I have been struck with the substantial identity of the first item of their creed quoted from the Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, with the words of our Lord himself uttered in his intercessory prayer for his apostles, recorded in John xvii. Keeping in mind that this prayer was expressly addressed to his Father—his words are—"This is life eternal that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." The item quoted as above referred to is—"The Father and He alone, is truly and properly God." It must be acknowledged that the identity of statement here is substantial, and there is no question as to the genuineness of the text. The words are plain and unequivocal, and seem to be incapable of any other sense than that the only true God is the Father.

It might well be asked—Is it matter for wonder that thoughtful, earnest men should consider these solemnly uttered words of our Lord as plainly giving expression to a fundamental truth of Christianity, and to seek to give effect to it against what they considered to be "contrary to Revelation?"

Besides they might well consider that the Master's words had been received by his servants, and substantially repeated by one of the most eminent—the Apostle Paul. Writing to the Corinthians, Paul says "To us there is one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we by him; and one Lord, Jesus Christ, through whom are all things, and we through him." And writing to the Ephesians, the same Apostle says—"There is one body, and one spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and in all."

Without seeking to do more in this matter than to point out these statements, I would remark that those men failed to note the most important characteristic of our Lord, namely, his Messiahship—the fact that he is the Anointed of Jehovah to "sit upon the throne of Jacob for ever." This, and not any theory regarding his person, is the chief saving element of his name, the reception of which has been laid down as the central principle of the gospel. His own words—"If ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins" -sets this official relation in a strong light in so far as personal salvation from sin and its penalty, death, is concerned. This doctrine of the Messiahship of Jesus constituted the confession of faith of the apostles—"Thou art the Christ the Son of the living God"—which also found expression in the form—"Thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Israel," and, with emphasis—"Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life. And we believe and are sure that thou art that Christ, the Son of the living God." (John iv.) The importance of this truth is seen in the fact that the fourth gospel was written for the express purpose of setting it forth for the faith and salvation of men. (John xx. 31). It also squares exactly with the proclamation of our Lord and his apostles during the period of his personal ministry, which is so frequently spoken of as "The Gospel of the kingdom." These two forms of one grand truth are so plainly recorded in the gospels and apostolic letters; finding practical expression in such a fact as this—"when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized both men and women," that it is surprising that the persons with whose Bible researches we are dealing did not stumble upon them. But the same remark applies to the other reformers of that century, and not only to them, but to thousands of the present day who fail to see the truth although it is pointed out to them through voice and pen in manifold ways.

I shall conclude these remarks by observing that not being acquainted with the writings of the two men referred to, I can only conjecture from the nature of the first statement in their creed, that they derived the basis of it from the words of our Lord quoted from John xvii., and would naturally view them as of authority sufficient to countervail any adverse inferences to be derived from less distinct utterances in the Scriptures on this subject.

Viewed from the standpoint of the controversies that have been carried on on the subject of the person of our Lord—the above is a very small part of a very large subject. These controversies have been out of all proportion to the relative importance of the subject, when compared with the importance of the Messiahship. But I venture to trust that this small contribution shall not be deemed without interest, or out of order as regards the readers of THE RESTITUTION.

J. CAMERON.

The Christian Sabbath.

I recently received a paper called The Sabbath Advocate in which was a marked article entitled: "The Christian Sabbath."

The writer says: "Having clearly shown that the seventh day of the week is the Sabbath of the New Testament, of which Christ is Lord, and hence is the true Christian Sabbath."

Possibly the writer is not aware of the fact that the Prophet Hosea declared that all the Sabbaths of Israel should "cease." "I will also cause all her mirth to cease, her feast days, her new moons, and her Sabbaths, and all her solemn feasts." Hosea ii. 2. Now the New Testament is in perfect accord with the Prophet Hosea. In 2 Cor. iii. 7, we read that "the ministration of death written and engraven in stones * * * was to be done away." A portion of "the ministration of death," was the Sabbath to which was affixed the penalty of death, and the only penalty; hence, fittingly belongs to that "ministration of death." A law shorn of its penalty is a dead letter, which is the case with the Sabbath law. If the law was still in force, the Lord would provide a way in which the penalty could be executed; but such is not the case to-day. Let any company of people attempt to enforce the penalty of that law in any government on earth, they would very soon be arrested and punished for murder. Verse 13, says: "the children of Israel could not steadfastly look to the end of that which is abolished." It seems that some professed Christians cannot either. 2 Chron. ii. 4, shows that the Sabbath was one of the ordinances given to Israel. What has become of these ordinances? Col. ii. 14: "Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which it was contrary to us and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross." Seeing these things have been "taken out of the way," what right has any one to judge us with regard to a violation of the Sabbath law, seeing that it was one of those ordinances which has been blotted out, and nailed to the cross. When the law was in force, they had not only the right to judge, but also to execute the penalty. But how is it now? See Col. ii. 16: "Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days: which are a shadow of things to come." This "shadow," was a school master to lead to Christ.

Again, See Gal. iv. 10, 11: "Ye observe days, (Sabbath days) and months, and times, and years. I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labor in vain." Why? Because they were holding to a shadow after its mission was filled. Take the advice of Paul, "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage," ("the ministration of death.") Gal. v. 1.

W. H. WILSON.

Spiritualism.

Dear Aunt Margaret:

I expect you will be suprised to receive a letter from me. I will tell you why I write this letter.

I do not know how to begin to tell you, for I know how bitter you will oppose, but duty comes in ahead of every thing else. I am prepared for all you will say about me,—that I am deceived, led astray, crazy, etc.

Well, to commence. I am confident that the spirits of our departed friends can, and do, return, and communicate with us when we give them a chance. There is one that has come a number of times, and urged me to write to you, and tell you that he is conscious, and that he was mistaken in what he laughed at (while in the form) it is Uncle Fil Plummer.

Now Aunt Margaret, I fought against writing this, but he kept urging me to do it. I asked him what good it would do you? You would not believe it. He said it would do you good, "when you passed over."

Now Aunt, I dont know as I have done justice to the subject, but I feel I cannot say any more at present. I will be glad to hear from you.

I am your affectionate niece.

ALTA MCKEE.

Dear Niece:

I received your letter. I was glad and surprised both to receive a letter from you. I was glad to hear you was well, but very sorry to hear the sentiments it contained. Yes indeed I am. As you say, it is a delusion, I know it is a delusion, I know you are deceived, led astray, and I will tell why. I know it because I believe in God's Word. I know his Word is Truth. I do not guess at it. I am now past seventy years of age. Have been a Bible reader for sixty years. I know what it teaches. They can not deceive me. My faith is built upon the Rock, though floods come and the winds blow it falls not, because it is founded upon a rock.

Yes, Alta, I read so much in God's Word that the dead know not anything, their thoughts are perished, their love, their envy all gone. Let God be true though it make every man a liar. We can not make death other than death, they cannot be dead and alive both. Death is death, and life is life. No, the Bible does not teach this dogma of the immortality of the soul, on which Spiritualism is built, but it does teach that many false prophets shall arise, and shall deceive many, and because iniquity shall abound the love of many shall wax cold, but he that shall endure to the end the same shall be saved. Yes, Christ teaches in Matt. xxiv. that they shall show great signs and wonders, (spiritualists) insomuch that if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect.

No, Alta, I am not among the deceived, Praise God. I am living in the one faith, the one hope of the Gospel, and as I grow older, and nearer the grave my hope grows brighter, my faith stronger. I am hoping, waiting, and watching for our blessed Master to appear to take unto himself his great power and reign. I believe he is near, and my heart rejoices in the blessed hope of soon seeing the King in His Beauty, for He is coming to raise the dead, change the living saints, fashion our vile bodies like unto his most glorious body. Yes, I shall be satisfied when I awake in his likeness. Yes, then, when he comes, and not before, I shall see Uncle Fil Plummer, (not in disembodied spirits for their is none, or no such thing as disembodied spirits, for spirits, all have bodies,) and clasp glad hands with him, and talk with him face to face, and not with him only but with all our dear loved ones that now are sleeping in death.

Yes, He will call and they will answer, and come forth clothed with immortality, eternal life.

Yes, Praise His Holy Name. He said, "I am He that was dead but am alive evermore, and have the keys of death and the grave, and as I live ye shall live also. Blessed Promise. Soon may He come, is my prayer. For it is written unto them that look for Him, He shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation. So it is necessary to be steadfast, always abounding in the truth.

I am glad that this present state of things is not always to last, for when Christ comes, our Life Giver, to take the rule of government in his hands then He will take away the sins of the world. Then, instead of envy and wrong doing, as it is now, there will be fulness of joy. Sorrow and sighing will be done away. The earth will be filled with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea. None will say, know ye the Lord, for all shall know him from the least to the greatest, every knee shall bow, every tongue shall confess He is Lord of all. Oh, blessed day, soon may it come is my prayer.

I am your affectionate Aunt.

MARGARET HAYNES.

The Coming One.

We do not know of a promise left on record by the blessed Savior, more precious to the true believer, the loving, faithful disciple, than this: "I will come again." The response of his soul is, "Even so come, Lord Jesus." The constant prayer is, "Thy kingdom come." He is in habitual, longing expectancy. He is in continual watchfulness as a bride for her bridegroom. He "looks for him," and will "love his appearing." This is the attitude of the true church; "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ." This is the point to which all their aspirations turn. Hence they think and feel, and live, and act as "strangers" to the world and "pilgrims" in the world; for their "citizenship is in heaven; from whence also they look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ."

This is what inspired and sustained the primitive Christians in their trials, conflicts and service. They "comforted (or exhorted) one another with these words." To keep alive this hope in the church the apostles prayed, preached and labored. This was the great incentive to holiness, that their "whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." To this end was the holy sacrament, the Lord's supper instituted. "For as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup ye do show the Lord's death till he come," (1 Cor. ii. 26). If your faith hath not yet grasped this truth in that solemn ordinance, dear reader, you have never yet comprehended its full, or real significance. Faith looks forward, not backward.

Then see how everywhere this truth is wrought into the very fibre of divine revelation. One verse out of every thirty of the New Testament directly ennunciates this doctrine; and one-fifth as many more teach it by implication. Look through the inspired epistles and notice how it is used as an encouragement to faithfulness and watchfulness; as a check to worldliness and selfishness; as an incentive to holiness and diligence; as a consolation in sorrow and bereavement. At the very close of the sacred canon the Lord again most positively reiterates the promise, "Surely I come quickly," so that, it would seem the last impress on the reader's mind should be this glorious anticipation.

It seems remarkable, when closely examined, how largely this one truth fashioned the character and conduct of the Christian church for the first three hundred years. Christ to them was not merely the crucified and risen one; he was the coming one.

But look at the church of the present. A disinterested observer would hardly learn that there is such a doctrine in the Bible. In many churches the pulpit slights it almost wholly. The members treat it as a dead letter. Indeed, it has been admitted, that this portion of the Holy Oracles has become so repugnant to some church members that "their very nature recoils from it." They do not wish the Lord to return suddenly, and do not wish to think of it. Evidently they have fallen in love with "this present evil world," or were never begotten of any other. But they were in the church, and "want to get to heaven when they die." They entertain a comforting hope, and, may be, "have done many wonderful works in his name." But whatever else they may have they have no true love to Christ; to his truth and character; to his promised return. Should the last trump suddenly sound, and the sign of the Son of man appear in the heavens, what, think you, would be the effect on the nominal church of today? What effect does the doctrine now have when effectually preached? To how many is it a welcome truth? How many would rejoice at his sudden appearance? Evidently all whose treasure is laid up in heaven, where the Lord sitteth at the right hand of the Father. But what of the many to whom this truth, when believed, is alarming? They can banish the thought, but not the reality. My friends, is this the state of the true church, the bride of Christ, the Lamb's wife? Will the faithful, loving wife dread the return of the long absent husband? Will the thought of the hour be repugnant to her mind and heart? Impossible.

How then can the affianced of the Lord look with dread or indifference upon the consummation of all their hopes and aspirations? those who have renounced all other objects and live wholly unto him? Strange kind of love these manifest! But what else can be expected in an easy-going age of the church, when the clergy exclude this important part of God's word almost wholly from their pulpit ministrations? Look, for a moment at the inconsistency of the church. What few references, throughout the sacred epistles, to the ordinance of baptism; and yet what a prominent attention is given it in the church! Then look at the prominent and extensive place this doctrine holds in the inculcations of those inspired teachers, compared with the same truths as taught in the churches of today? Who will explain this singular incongruity? Will this conspicuous fact allow us to say, "We have not shunned to declare all the counsel of God?" And if there is such a lameness right here in Gospel ministration, ought we not to expect a like lameness in the character of our people?

This doctrine figured so largely in the faith and teaching of the early church, as not only to so wean the members from the aims and objects of the world as to take joyfully the spoiling of their goods, gain and honor, but even, in one instance at least, to so occupy their minds and hearts as to interrupt the necessary pursuits of life, so that the apostle was obliged to correct them. No danger of such a state of things under the favorite pulpit of the present. No wonder the Savior exclaimed, "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" faith in his coming?

Dear reader, are you waiting and watching for the coming of the Lord? Oh, that God would awaken such a faith and interest in this neglected portion of his word as to reveal it in their lives and characters, and raise up such a company of faithful ambassadors as to awaken the church everywhere to a waiting watchfulness for the coming of the Master, lest coming suddenly, he find them sleeping.—A. H. Shank in Messiah's Herald.

Preach the Word.

The following is one of the things impressive and timely which Dr. Howard Crosby "dead yet speaketh" for this day—"We count it a sad feature of the church to-day that, instead of this healthy preaching, we have so much pulpit oratory, lyceum lectures on moral subjects, presentation of schemes for social improvement, laudation of men and events; all of which might find their appropriate places, but which are wholly out of place when brought into the Christian pulpit, which should be consecrated to one purpose only, the holding forth of the word of life. Our Timothys need to have it sounded constantly in their ears; "Preach the Word" (2 Tim. iv. 2.) They who think God's word is but a narrow field to operate in, have very little apprehension of its infinite scope and unfathomable depths.

They who think that any moral or useful subject is "God's Word" have very little apprehension of the immense gulf between truth and opinion, between inspiration and human wisdom. The Bible is dishonored by abandoning it for something more "taking" with an ear-itching crowd. But we hold that although this crowd will not relish Bible exegesis and exposition, thoughtful souls will gather about the exegetical preacher and take a far higher delight in his preaching. It will not be the delight of a momentary ecstasy, but the delight of a sense of spiritual growth, a permanent and heavenly delight."—Evangelical Messenger.

As there are five Wednesdays in the month of May, our next issue will bear date June 7.

TRUTH and love should always go hand in hand. It is not easy to resist the combined attack of these powerful things; but they must be carefully managed.

SINCE the defeat of the German Army Bill news comes from Berlin that France is rapidly strengthening the forces on the frontier. The opposition claim that it is a false report, made to influence the coming election. We shall see.

THE Dedicatory Services of the Epworth Memorial M. E. Church, in Cleveland, was held on Sunday May 14th. In the morning a debt of $75,000 hung over the edifice; in the evening it was entirely free from debt. Services were held all through the week. The Tuesday evening meeting was addressed by ministers of almost all Protestant denominations, and one Jewish Rabbi from the Huron Street Temple.

THE great Daily Papers are of the opinion that startling changes in Presbyterianism in this country will result from the Presbyterian General Assembly in Washington. Dr. Thomas C. Hall, Pastor of one of the most influential churches in Chicago, threatens to withdraw from the Presbyterian church if the assembly decides against Dr. Briggs, and says: they are not attempting to dishonor the Word of God; and while they may be mistaken, they believe that these views will strengthen and protect the Bible. Poor Bible; it must be in a bad way to need such protection and strength as they can give it. If man, the creature's origin is not given in Genesis what use have they for any part of the book? All the instruction it contains, all the promises made, and all the penalties threatened, are addressed, and adapted to just such creatures as Adam is described to have been. If man is not what Moses describes him to be, there is nothing in the book that suits him.

THE Rev. Wm. Knight of the Old Stone Presbyterian Church of Cleveland is trying to show there is not near so much difference between Protestants and Catholics as is often made to appear, and where we (Protestants) touch hands. A discourse intending to prove that they did not worship Mary brought out several reviewers. One of whom quoted from "Liguori's Glories of Mary" to show that they did, as follows: "Mary is our only refuge, help and asylum." "There is but one city of refuge,—and that is Mary;" "often we shall be heard more quickly if we have recourse to Mary, then we should if we called upon the name of Jesus our Savior." "At the command of the Virgin all things obey, even God." "The salvation of all depends upon being favored by Mary." "Mary has only to speak, and her Son executes all."

IT is gratifying to know that the greatest living student of comparative religion, Prof. Max Muller, in the course of "Gifford Lectures," in dealing with the word "soul," admitted that in itself, it does not contain the idea of spirituality much less of immortality. Tracing it back to its root, he showed it to contain unequivocally, the idea of materiality; and have in Genesis, Nephesh, "soul" from the verb naphach, "to breathe." In speaking of the various conceptions of the soul after death, held by the philosophers of Greece and India, he made an admission which is fatal to belief that the Bible teaches the immortality of the soul. "It is strange," he says, "that the two religions in which we find nothing, or next to nothing, about the immortality of the soul, or its approach to the throne of God, or its life in the realm of light, should be the Jewish and the Buddist. The Old Testament is almost silent, [illegible] silent on such a subject [illegible] but one interpretation."

RUSKIN says, "there is a wider division of men than into Christian and Pagan; before we ask what a man worships we have to ask whether he worships at all." But this to us seems wide of the truth. How a man or woman can exist without adoring something we can not understand: certain it is, not a few worship themselves; some worship gold, others horses, and cattle, and ships, and houses, and pictures, and fashions, and a host of other things come in before God, or supplant him altogether, so that he is not in all their thoughts.

AT a speech at the unveiling of a monument to William I, Grandfather of the present ruler of Germany, Emperor William said:

"This festivity is in the midst of serious times. Eleven years ago my grandfather addressed you the most important words. Now we must maintain what William I. created, and secure the future of our Fatherland. Our army requires increasing and remodeling. I have summoned the nation to provide the necessary means. All other questions are inferior to this, the most serious question, one upon which depends the very existence of the Fatherland. And we need absolute unity in order to solve the question. Whatever separates us as Germany, whatever causes views to diverge must now be put aside, because it imperils the future of the Fatherland.

The Woman's Seed.
No. 10.

In a straightforward way we think we have named testimony which showed that the child Jesus was called the Son of God, for the reason given to his mother previous to his birth, viz: Because of the overshadowing power of the Highest by which he was miraculously begotten; not because of his pre-existence, Luke i. 35: and that God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Spirit and with power Acts x. 38; and not Jesus Christ. That would be similar to saying, "God anointed Jesus anointed," or "that Christed Jesus Christ," and that the Father loved the Son, because he laid down his life that he might take it again, John x. 17, and many other points. Before examining what are held to be opposing texts, we wish to give a brief resume of Doctor Thomas's writing on this subject:

In The Herald of the Kingdom and Age to Come, Vol. 4, p. 111., he says, "Till the birth of the Body prepared of Mary's substance, the fleshly medium did not exist there was no God manifestation through the flesh, nor even then, till the baptism anointing of that Body. Hitherto it was God dwelling in unapproachable light, unlosoming the Spirit. But when God manifested himself as a Father, His Spirit speaking by the Son-flesh, could say, "Glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." When the prepared body lay in the tomb, the God-manifestation ceased; but when the Spirit of God filled it again, it was on that day begotten as "the Son of God with power according to the holy spiritual nature."

In Herald of the Kingdom vol. 5, p. 110, He asks, "Why was the good spirit of Jehovah in the prophets styled by Peter the spirit of Christ?" Ans: "Because it was the same spirit that dwelt in Noah, Moses and the prophets that afterwards dwelt in Jesus without measure, and so constituted Him pre-eminently the Anointed One, or Christ." . . . . . "This was one spirit, not many, and styled in the New Testament, Eternal Spirit through whom Jesus offered himself without fault to God."

In Herald of the Kingdom vol. 9, p. 112, he says, "Jesus was formed of Mary's substance by the creative power of Holy Spirit." She was a marriageable, but unmarried maiden of David's house; the mother of Jesus, whose nature was like her own, was the same as David's and Abraham's, neither better nor worse; it was sin's flesh, as Paul tells us; while in character, he "was holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners;" or without sin. If his nature had been immaculate, sin could not have been condemned in the flesh when he was crucified."

In Eureka vol. I, p. 87, 88, commenting on the words "I am the First, who was dead;" he says: —"This would naturally suggest the inquiries, Did the Deity, who is the Creator and upholder of the universe ever die? And while he was dead, how was the universe sustained? And seeing that death is an utter destruction of all power, how was life restored to the dead creator of all things. Apart from Revelation these are unanswerable questions, for "the world by wisdom knows not the Deity;" and none by searching can find him out. We are compelled from very helplessness, to accept God's own account of these things, which is revelation, or to remain in hopeless ignorance of the truth. There is then a mystery in the premises, which, as the apostle saith, without controversy is great. By mystery is meant a secret, a secret which the Deity only could reveal. He made it known, yet the revealed secret continues to be styled a mystery in reference to what it was originally. Paul terms it the mystery of godliness. . . . In specifying it, he saith of the mystery, that it consisted when revealed, of Deity manifested in the flesh, perfected in spirit, seen of messengers, preached unto nations, believed on in the world, received up in glory." I Tim. iii. 16. . . . Deity is Deity though he manifest his wisdom and power through mortal flesh. . . . The time of manifestation was appointed and placed on record in Dan. ix. 25, and when the fulness of the time was come, the Deity sent forth his Son, made of a woman; begotten, not of blood, nor the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of the Deity, by holy spirit coming upon her and power of the Highest enveloping her: therefore also the holy thing she bore was called a Son of Deity, and named Jesus, Luke i. 35. Thus "the Logos became flesh and dwelt among us," says John, and we beheld his glory, glory as of an only begotten from the Father, full of grace and truth. . . . The chief Eloah was now born, and, as the star of Jacob cradled in a manger received the homage of the wise men and the acclamation of the heavenly host. This babe was the body made in secret, through which the Eternal Spirit, when it should attain to the fulness of the times designed to manifest himself. That time had arrived when "Jesus began to be about thirty years of age." He was now sent forth—His sending forth was subsequently to his immersion, and preceded by his anointing with holy spirit."

In Eureka vol. 2, p. 222, referring to Ex. xx. 24, where it says, "An altar of earth thou shalt make unto me, and shalt sacrifice therein thy burnt offerings; the Doctor says, "Now all this was significant of the substance-Christ, who was the end of the law. The Holy Spirit signified something that he regarded important in his system of wisdom, in commanding an altar to be made of earth, or of unhewn stone, and in forbidding a tool to be lifted upon it—a riddle the meaning of which would be found in the realities developed in the Christ. He is declared by Paul to be the Christian altar, Heb. xii. 10, which in being cleansed by the blood of Jesus is made identical with him. He was the altar of earth, or unhewn stone, and in his making or generation, he was begotten, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of the Deity." The flesh made by the Spirit out of Mary's substance, and rightly claimed as his flesh, Psa. xvi. 8; ii. 31.

In Phanerosis p. 8, he clearly shows what he understands by the words, "The word was made flesh," for in speaking of Adam habited in fig leaves under the inspiration of the serpent he says, "He (Adam) was the word of the serpent made flesh."

On p. 19, he say, "As son of Mary he pretended to no power, wisdom or superiority. Mary's son was "the Vail of the covering to be rent; the vail in which the Father-power was veiled, the flesh-medium of power-manifestation."

On p. 21 he says, "That born of Mary was Bain Eloah, son of power. Besides that power there is no Savior. Apart from the power the son could not save; for he as son of Mary testifies that of himself he could do nothing." That the Supreme Power would save by a servant-power is manifest from both Isaiah and Peter. "Thou shalt be my servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the desolations of Israel. I will also give thee for a light to the nations, that thou mayest be my salvation to the end of the earth," chap. xlix. 6. The I and Thee of this passage are but one power—power in servant manifestation."

On p. 32 of Phanerosis, he says, "By God-head is meant the source, spring, or fountain of Deity—the divine nature in its original pre-existence before every created thing. Moses teaches that this God-head was a unit—a homogeneous unit, undivided into thirds or fractions.

On p. 33, speaking of a weak point in the Jewish understanding of the doctrine of the Messiah he says, "They can only see in Christ a son of David having no higher origin than blood, or the sinfulness of the flesh, or will of man. They have no conception of Christ who should be formed by the Eternal Spirit from the substance descended from David, as Adam was formed by the same spirit from the dust; and therefore generated by the will and power of evil, still less did they see that such a son of Power should become a son by a spirit generation from among the dead." . . . It is true the Christ also was in the world before Moses lived, Adam and Eve received the first promise of his appearing. Enoch, the seventh from Adam predicted his coming with his ten thousand saints; Abraham saw his day, and was glad. But still the hopes and convictions of these ancients would have been lost but for Moses, who was caused by Yahveh to put them on record. . . The first idea, then, that Moses gives us of the Christ is that he was to be born of Adam's race, was to be the seed of the woman and son of God; was to be killed; he was to rise from the dead, and he was to destroy the power that killed him.

On p. 35 he asks, upon what principle was the Hebrew nation Yahveh's son? Upon precisely the same principle that the son of Mary claimed to be the Son of God—upon that of spirit paternity. Isaac was the father of the nation and his begettal was miraculous. The nation descended from him was a miraculous conception."

On p. 36 he speaks of the covenant to David 2 Sam. vii. 14, and remarks that David expected that the Son of the woman who is to bruise the serpent's head would descend from himself and therefore be Son of man; but that he would be begotten in one of his female descendants by the spirit of Yahveh and therefore be Son of God."

On p. 39 we read, "Hence he declared to Nicodemus, "that which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." Here are two natures, the man-nature and the God-nature. He was flesh, having been born of the flesh, though not by the will of man; and he is now spirit, having been born of the spirit from the grave to incorruption. Jesus then is spirit. . . . Being spirit, he is therefore Theos, or God. He is now no longer flesh and blood, but holy spirit nature, a flesh and bones embodiment of Spirit; and therefore of the One Yahveh."

On p. 41 we read, "The flesh, or Mary's Son was the earthen vessel, the cherub, hidden as a polished arrow in the quiver, or shadow of the power of the Eternal Spirit; in other words, "the Spirit of Yahveh rested upon him" after his anointing. He was filled with the effluence of the Eternal substance and covered with it as a halo of power, so that he was bidden, covered or protected from the machinations of evil doers, and from evil influences, which could not harm him until the protecting effluence was withdrawn. This resting upon in-dwelling and covering was the sealing and anointing of the Father foretold. Dan. ix. 24."

On p. 43 it says, "When we contemplate the cherub before his sealing and anointing, we see only the Son of Mary, the "seed of the woman," in the words of Moses; and Son of God, in the same sense that Adam was."

On p. 45 he writes, "Between the two living manifestations [flesh and spirit] was interposed the death-state. In this state the cherubic flesh was deserted by the effluence of the Eternal substance. The effluent spirit forsook Jesus, when he exclaimed upon the cross, "My ail, my ail, why hast thou forsaken me?" It was withdrawn from him for some time before he died. . . . Yet that cherub continued to live as other men. In process of time he expired. It was no longer affirmable that "I and the Father are one. . . . for the Father was no longer in him, nor he in the Father." But some one may say, did not Dr. Thomas once write "Deity is very God." Christ the Word who in the beginning laid the foundations of the earth, therefore pre-existed before the birth of the body prepared of the substance of Mary, and which lay dead in the tomb? Did he not write, too, that the pre-existed Christ or Deity was not the less Deity because he veiled himself in flesh? Did he not write that Jesus Christ, in the day of his weakness had two sides the one Deity; the other man? Yes; he wrote in that way in the Ambassador for August, 1869. What must you do about it? Just remember he was fallible with all his learning and critical acumen, and wrote at one time what he had abundantly refuted at others; but, as Archbishop Whately says Plato was appealed to as believing in future reward and punishment because the passages inculcating that idea are much more numerous than those expressing doubt of it, the same may be said of Dr. Thomas' writings on the subject under consideration. The extracts given above are not a tithe of what might be collected, but if they are carefully considered in the light of the testimony, the bare assertions in the Ambassador article will not disturb you.

That article has a history. R. C. Bingley, who some 25 years ago worshipped with us in Cleveland, for a time, returned to England and published "A Declaration of the First Principles of the Oracles of the Deity in 37 propositions." A very helpful work and still in print. As a young man, and young in the faith, this was imprudent; and, as might have been expected, his elders criticised it, and the quotation from the Ambassador is the authoritative correction of the assertion by the declaration "That Jesus Christ had no existence before his birth, except as a purpose around which the gradually developing scheme of salvation revolves." Exactly what the Doctor had long taught, and exactly what the Author of Twelve Lectures had taught. And the true inwardness of the article is disclosed towards the end, where the Doctor proposes that "all your readers consent to stop disputing about the nature and pre-existence of Christ for the next twelve months, and apply themselves to the study of the subject as revealed in Moses and the prophets, and by Jesus and Paul and Peter in the spirit of little children. There is too much cacoethes scribendi et loquendi by the unlearned and the unstable for the interests of the truth and themselves."

Poor man! although deeply indebted to him for laying bare much precious truth, he is now on stilts so high that he forgets that he is giving advice to the ignorant in an unknown tongue. Why did he not tell the author of the Declaration plainly, that he was overfond of speaking and writing; and was lacking of any higher motive. Of course no one would knowingly represent that the Doctor was opposed to pre-existence if he knew how extensively he had written on the other side: to give our readers some idea of this, and the history of the paragraph that is calculated to undo much of his life labor the above has been presented.

As might have been expected, the immediate effect of the Doctor's article was this: correspondents of the Ambassador arrayed the Editor against the Doctor. And it is not surprising that it required over eight columns of small type matter in the October number to make it appear that there was no difference between the assertion that Christ did not exist before his birth of Mary, and that he did exist, and, indeed, in the beginning laid the foundations of the earth. It was up hill business to make this appear, as will be seen by the following apologetic remarks:—"There is no contradiction in the several views placed in juxtaposition. . . . They are all in their place true. [By this he did and at the same time did not pre-exist.] They are but different aspects of the same truth. They appear to be contradictory only to those who fail to take a correct view of the terms employed in the expression of them. Dr. Thomas writes technically, on the subject; the other work quoted aims at literal definition; hence the appearance of conflict where there is actual harmony, as we shall show. Dr. Thomas employs the terms of the Spirit as one having spent a life in the Spirit's atmosphere, and having had his whole mind moulded by the mind of the Spirit. He speaks as the Spirit speaks, (? ?) but is not careful to define terms. . . . To those apprehending the ideas represented by the terms, technical writing is the richest and most suggestive of all writing." As Doctor Thomas was in England at the time said article was published, and took no exceptions to it, we are disposed to think it was his apology for a great mistake, although quite inadequate.

Our intention is to commence the examination of the difficult passages in our next.

The Ideal of the Gospel?

There is an ideal in the gospel, toward which all the work of the Holy Spirit is ever advancing. As the artist from the first line upon his canvas to the last stroke of his brush has before him an ideal toward which he is ever working, so has the Spirit of God. The work of the artist in a single day may not seem to approach in the least the desired end, and yet every stroke of the brush brings that end nearer. The process of the Spirit is not a speedy one, and yet it is always working to secure likeness to the divine ideal. We do not always so understand it, but nevertheless it is true. We plan our work, and purpose doing this and that, believing that from our efforts the result will come which will increase our happiness and our comfort. But our hopes are not realized. Suddenly we are brought face to face with the ashes of disappointment. Instead of the beautiful thing which we had hoped to rear for ourselves, we have nothing but the charred remains of our cherished plans.

It is something we wonder over as we weep. But the very ashes of our hopes will help on the God-designed end. From ruined plans and disappointed expectations God will bring the trusting soul nearer that perfected condition in which real Christliness will appear. For ashes he will give beauty. We may see our fondly cherished hopes come to naught and carefully arranged plans all fail, and yet, if we suffer our heavenly Father to carry out his purpose in us, we shall find that as each blow of the sculptor's mallet brings out the designed figure with greater beauty, so the Great Designer of our lives through the wreck of our plans and the disappointment of our expectations, is bringing out the beauty and superior excellence of a Christ-like character. All things are ever working together for good to them that love God, for the purpose of securing a consummation so grand as this.—Messiah's Herald.

The Divine Shadow.

Many people have this world a desert-march. They go half consumed of trouble all their days. But we are not turned out on a desert to die. Here is the long, cool, certain, refreshing shadow of the Lord.

A tree, when in full leafage, drops a great deal of refreshment; but in a little while the sun strikes through, and you keep shifting your position, until, after a while, the sun is set at such a point that you have no shade at all. But go in the heart of some great rock, such as you see in Yosemite or the Alps, and there is everlasting shadow. There has been thick shade there for six thousand years, and will be for the next six thousand. So our divine Rock, once covering us, always covers us. The same yesterday, to-day and forever! always good, always kind, always sympathetic! You often hold a sunshade over your head passing along the road or a street; but after a while your arm gets tired, and the very effort to create the shadow makes you weary. But the rock in the mountains, with fingers of everlasting stone, holds its own shadow. So God's sympathy needs no holding up from us. Though we are too weak from sickness or trouble to do anything but lie down, over us he stretches the shadow of his benediction.

It is our misfortune that we mistake God's shadow for the night. If a man come and stand between you and the sun, his shadow falls upon you. So God sometimes comes, and stands between us and worldly successes, and his shadow falls upon us, and we wrongly think that it is night. As a father in a garden stoops down to kiss his child, the shadow of his body falls upon it; and so many of the dark misfortunes of our life are not God going away from us, but our heavenly Father stooping down to give us the kiss of his infinite and everlasting love. It is the shadow of a sheltering Rock, and not of a devouring lion.—T. DeWitt Talmage in Christian Herald.

Temperance Notes.

Great Britain and Ireland brew more beer than the German Empire. The production of the world is estimated at over 50,000,000,000 gallons per annum. In 1891 Great Britain produced 1,500,000,000 gallons. Great Britain spends on an average 20 shillings for drink for every half crown it gives religion. Ireland, in 1890, spent about £11,000,000 on drink; its total rental did not come to more than £9,000,000 sterling.

The statistics of suicides last year are startling, showing an increase of five hundred over those of 1891, the men greatly outnumbering the women; three thousand of the former to five hundred of the latter. Three hundred and fifteen are assigned to liquor.

Men do not become wildly intoxicated on tobacco, but the deadly lethargy and stupor of soul is as destructive to the tobacco slave; and the use of the weed is the greatest aid to intemperance in drink we know of. Thousands are so enslaved by tobacco that their power to distinguish right from wrong is destroyed and they are an easy prey to the devil.

Poverty never drives a man to drink unless he wants to go; but drink drags a man to poverty, whether he wants to go or not.

Count Leo Tolstoi, who spent his time and fortune a year ago in alleviating the sufferings of the starving Russians, now asserts that drunkenness was one of the great causes of the famine.

Affliction in the Light of the Cross.

When Job's wife bade her sadly-afflicted husband "curse God and die," she gave terse expression to a feeling common to unrenewed human nature. The deeply thoughtful Amiel says: "natural man curses grief;" but he adds, "The Christian interprets it in the light of the cross." To the former it is nauseating bitterness poured poured into the cup of his earthly pleasures. It distrusts his selfish appetites makes him angry with God, and keeps up a tempest of discontent in his soul. To the latter it is pain mitigated by the consolations which arise from the sympathy of Christ and the inspirations of hope. Seeing that the cross was, as Amiel strikingly phrases it "the apotheosis of grief in which suffering was a triumph, the crown of thorns a crown of glory, a gibbet a symbol of salvation," he submits to it as to the discipline of love which is working in him, and contributing an added weight of glory to his felicity in the life to come. Therefore the peace which flows from submission to the divine will and the bliss which is begotten by hope prevent his complaints and enable him to say with Luther, "Strike, Lord, strike, but oh, do not forsake me!" and with his suffering Lord, "Thy will be done!"—Watchman.

In 1850 there was one criminal in 3,500 of our population, but in 1890 there was one in 786.5, a tremendous increase in 40 years.

Poetry.

He Careth.

Dear human hearts. Where should we be,
How could we linger here
If there were none who, in our grief
Would shed for us a tear?

If there were none who cared to smile
With us in happy hours,
When skies are blue, when seas are calm,
And earth is decked with flowers.

If we were quite alone—alone
Outside the world's great heart—
Cut off from God, cast out by man,
With none, or lot, or part.

'Twere better that the sun himself
Should cease to give its light
Than that our souls for aye should stray
In one long, loveless night.

With none to care, with naught to love,
One's heart a stony thing,
One's life a series of events,
A winter without spring.

Thank God for love, the love of friends,
That golden thread which binds
Us each to each, and links us on
To kindred human minds!

That Christ-like thing which reacheth down
To depths of human woe,
And sheds o'er darkest paths and sad
A benediction glow.

But thank God most for His great love,
That living source divine,
Which stoopeth down to earth and cares
For your life and for mine.

He careth! Ah, what wondrous rest
Doth this thought with it bring;
Enough to make the desolate
Rejoice once more and sing!

He careth, if our hopes come in
With sails distraught and torn;
He careth when we seem to lie
All stranded and forlorn.

He careth, if our friends forsake,
And skies are clouded o'er;
If troubles in succession roll
As wavelets on our shore.

He careth, and He will not let Us have too much to bear;
Nor any burden, great or small,
But what He too will share.

He careth, and he shareth too
Our sorrow and our joy;
He knoweth well what troubles press,
What anxious griefs annoy.

Then let us always go to Him,
And cast on Him our care;
No human sympathy, though sweet,
Can with our Lord's compare.

He cared so much in ages past,
As His own self to give
A holy, willing sacrifice
That we through Him might live.

Dear friends, then let us each and all
A living offering pour
At His loved feet our lives henceforth
As did that one of yore.

Assured that He will "care" to take
What we in love bestow,
And will re-model it Himself
Whilst yet we dwell below.

How to be Happy.

The late Dr. Chalmers said the three essentials of happiness were, have something to do, something to love, something to hope for. We wish, if possible, to emphasize this utterance of Scotland's great divine. All desire happiness, more or less, and are seeking it in various ways in which they think it is to be found. It is a sad truth that so many fail to find it, and repine under failure. There are divinely constituted ways in which it is to be found, and as necessary to his attainment as to plow and sow the ground for a crop. One of these is to have something to do.

We have faculties and facilities for doing, and an abundance of work to do, and for the most part are placed in circumstances favorable for doing it. Our creation is an act of wisdom which never errs. We are here for a purpose—to act some part in the great arena of life. What it is should be our earnest inquiry; "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" The Apostle Paul seemed to grasp the thought at once that he had a work to do, a personal work. He sought it, found it, and did it. Said Miss Mary Lyon, the founder of Mount Holyoke Female Seminary: "There is nothing in the universe that I fear, except that I may not know all my duty, or may fail to do it." She found her work, and was happy in doing it. The highest plane of enjoyment cannot be attained without Christian activity. The indolent cannot be happy. There is peculiar enjoyment in going about, like our blessed Lord and Savior, doing good, in acts of benevolence—relieving the distressed, comforting the sorrowing, raising the fallen. There is joy often in making sacrifices for the good of others. Such work is "twice blessed. It blesseth him that gives, and him that takes."

Something to love. We are not only created with ability to love, but are placed in the midst of objects worthy of our affection. Love sweetens the sacrifices we make for others, lightens the burdens, and makes pleasant what would otherwise be irksome. "Wherefore love is the fulfilment of the law," for it "beareth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things." In Jacob's service for Rachel "the seven years seemed but a few days, for the love he had for her." The mother is sustained and made happy in her assiduous attentions to her children by parental affection. The soldier endures hardship for the love of his country. The marriage relation is made the happiest bond on earth, and its relative duties delightful by true conjugal affection. It is said, "Love cannot give without receiving, nor receive without giving." We cannot bless others without being blest. "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth."

Something to hope for. If we are doing the work assigned us, then there is something to hope for as results. We have a right to have "respect to the recompense of reward." The husbandman is stimulated by the hope of the harvest ingatherings. None can enjoy the "pleasure of hope" as the earnest, faithful, working Christian; for they that toil and are self denying for Christ and humanity have the promise that they "shall receive manifold more in the present time, and in the world to come, life everlasting." "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bring his sheaves with him." The apostle looked hopefully to the crowning glory; for, having found his work and having done it, he said: "I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me." Such a hope is "an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil."—N. Y. Observer.

Separated to God.

God's people are called to a new life, a life of separation from the old carnal life. They are "created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." Hence our Lord prayed "sanctify [separate] them through thy truth." The former life has ended and the new has commenced.

This separation from the old is not to be an imprisonment in a cloister. The new creature is not to be shut up in a nunnery for the cultivation of extraordinary sanctity. The sympathetic ties that bind us to those about us are not to be cut. We may not strangle them into atrophy, nor build barriers between ourselves and those about us who need the light and warmth of our new life. "I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil that is in the world," said the Master when he prayed for us. There could scarcely be a better definition of separation to God than is given in this petition for all of God's children. In the world, but not of the world. While walking through the world, we are to walk with God. "No man lighteth a candle and putteth it under a bushel, but on a candlestick, that it may give light unto all that are in the house. Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven." That requirement would shut the door of every nunnery and monastery on the face of the earth. The children of God need to give forth all those newborn sympathies and loves with which God has encircled them. The lost ones need to be in close contact with the same, and to feel their power. It is either a false life, or a false education of a true life, that would shut us away from this perishing world.

There is, however, a true separation of every child of God from the evil that is in the world. It begins in the experience of the new birth. This separation means that we are now and forever set apart to the service and glory of God; "to glorify God and enjoy him forever." We are to cease serving self, which is the most intense form of serving the world. The soul, by this separation, has been restored to its normal relations to God and to all the purposes of grace and mercy which shine through his truth and providence. It comes into the attitude of sweetly praying, "Thy will be done" and rests in a constant choice of God's choosing. Separation to him means unity of purpose and life with him. As all we have comes from him, so all we have and are returns to him.

Being the temples of the Holy Ghost, the separated ones are indwelt by the teaching, illuminating and sanctifying Spirit. The Spirit which gave them new life, new hopes, new motives, new loves, and constantly feeds these new passions of the soul, has a right to this temple.

There are grounds of separation, upon which God claims it of his people. It is in the redemption by the blood of the Son of God that the basis of this separation is laid. God said to Israel: "When I see the blood, I will pass over you, and the plague shall not be upon you to destroy you." While judgment fell upon Egypt, Israel was redeemed unto God, and was thenceforth to be a separate people, a peculiar people, a people for a possession. In his redemption by the blood is also found his judgment of our sins. He said to Israel: "Ye have seen what I did unto the Egyptians"—how he executed judgment upon them. So he has judged our sins, having laid them upon One, and the only One, who was able to bear them. Having judged them, they have passed away from the believer, so that "there is no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus." For when he pointed Israel to what he had done to the Egyptians, he added: "And how I bear you on eagles' wings, and brought you unto myself." He delivered them with a mighty deliverance: "As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings, so the Lord alone did lead him [Israel], and there was no strange God with him." There was no other helper or deliverer. Therefore, he had a right to demand of them that they should be separated from idols to himself—that they should "obey my voice and keep my covenant."

Notice that God said to them: "I brought you unto myself." He must do that before he could bring them to the promised land. Indeed, God was the way to the promised land, and when they forsook him they forsook the way and wandered in the wilderness, where their carcasses perished. Thus our Christ has brought us to himself, and having done this he has a right to claim our separation to himself. —Chris. Herald.

Jesus Only.

"Awake, awake, put on thy strength, O, Zion; put on thy beautiful garments."—Isa. lii. 1.

The Church is the object of God's special care and regard. "He loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob." With sleepless vigilance He has watched over all her interests, and with His almighty arm He has guarded her during all the roll of the centuries. In the previous chapter, the Church had cried, "Awake, awake, put on thy strength, O arm of the Lord." In response to this earnest cry, the Lord says to His Church: "Awake, awake, put on thy strength O Zion."

God's call to His Church implies that she is in a deep sleep, requiring a loud call to awaken her.

Such a state is always one of indifference and insensibility.

1. We do not realize our privileges and possibilities. What we may possess, or enjoy, or accomplish, we do not fully comprehend. How few avail themselves of the promises of the Holy Ghost! We are, consequently, pigmies and dwarfs, when we should be men, enduring hard things, as good soldiers of Jesus Christ.

God's provisions for His people are boundless, bottomless, topless, and sideless.

2. The Church is insensible to its condition. How many are satisfied with forms, knowing nothing of the saving power of God,—"A name to live while they are dead."

Many ministers are shorn of their strength by relying on their education; others by conniving at late suppers, waltzes, germans, and midnight revelries.

3. The condition of the Church is truly appalling.

She is indifferent to her dangers. Perils surround her camp. Great conflicts are before her, and the war is upon us. A steady fire of shot and shell comes from foes within and without. O trumpet of God, sound on, until the Church shall hear thy call, and rise from her inglorious victory!

4. "Put on thy strength." We are as surely commanded to "be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might," as we are commanded not to steal. For me to be weak is not merely a misfortune, it is a crime whose disastrous results are as lasting as eternity. My failure would be that of a general who suffers defeat when he should have conquered; of the pilot who drowns the confiding passengers whom he could have safely landed. You dare not be weak. Your "weakness is a spreading infirmity." You are commanded to be strong. Your "strength is a spreading energy." The conditions of success are within the easy grasp of every child of God. He has placed within our reach the resources of infinite power and strength. If a man is as strong financially as is his financial backing, why may we not be as strong spiritually as our spiritual backing?

We may be so cabled to the Throne that our resources are boundless. Power to perform every duty, meet every responsibility, endure every trial, and achieve all our triumphs, is pledged in Christ. "Now thanks be unto God, which always causeth us to triumph in Christ." 2 Cor. ii. 14. Failure is clear beyond the range of possibility, so long as we are anchored to the Rock of Ages.

The strength of the Church is not her numbers. Israel often counted noses, but God was pleased only when they counted Him. Many a church with a large membership suffers inglorious defeat.

The strength of the Church is not in her culture or education. The Greeks were cultured and refined in much. The musty records of Chinese history show that that people, thousands of years ago, were devoid of culture, but they were strangers to the strength of God. We are living in an age of brain worship. Young men are taught that "Knowledge is power," and so their heads are stuffed, and their hearts starved.

The strength of the Church is not in her money. Thomas Aquinas was coming one day into a room where some monks were counting heaps of gold pieces. They said to him: "The time is no more when the church has to say 'Silver and gold have I none.'" To which he answered, "Yes; and neither can it say, 'In the name of Jesus of Nazareth, rise up and walk.'" The church has ten billions of money, but is she "terrible," to her enemies, "as an army with banners?"

The strength of the Church is the Holy Ghost, Himself, who, in His burning energy, purifies and reforms those whom He possesses, and fills them with a divine anointing which abideth. We must know the mighty power of God in ourselves, before we can with much faith expect to see it fall on others.

By saved men, are men to be saved.

Open wide the doors and windows of your soul, and let the blessed Holy Ghost come in. He will cleanse and fill you. He will rest your tired soul by delivering you of your deadly doings.

I scarcely dare ask many people how they get on. They pour a whole reservoir of their deadly doings right over on me. They are in some great W. C. T. U., or Y. M. C. A., or W. F. M. S., or Y. P. C. E. They say they are tired to death, and that they have no time to pray or read their Bibles, and they are going to have a vacation. Well, beloved, people who do not have time to pray and read their Bibles, might just as well take a vacation as not.

I bless God I have nothing on hand. I have no congregation of finical people who must be pleased, visited, and kept in a good humor or they will not support me. No hard battles to fight, no heavy burdens to bear, no reputation to keep up, nobody owes me an apology, every one is good to me, whether they mean it or not. "All things work together for good." Jesus does it all, and just lets me run along by His side. Oh, it is true He lets me preach about seven times a week, besides various other privileges, but that is all easy when He takes the responsibility. I admit it is hard work to preach half an hour each Sabbath and be sure you do not hit any one. A great many preachers break down at it, and are compelled to go to Europe for their health. What a luxury to see Jesus only.—Seth C. Rees. Selected by Mary A. Woodward.

Coming.

Coming! Coming! What is coming? Is it glad news? Is it sad news? Coming when? The city lies peaceful in the beauty of a summer twilight. The busy hum of day is nearly done. Children are playing about the doorways, and people are resting from the cares of day. A sweet, soothing sense of peace steals over me. The birds twitter good night lullabys, and sleep is creeping over all. A horseman dashes through the streets wildly waving his arms. Terror is pictured on his face. He is nearly hoarse, but he is crying a dreadful warning. "Flee for your lives! Flee for your lives! The dam's given way. Flee for your lives!" Only a moment and he is gone out of sight.

How do they feel now? Peace has fled. Can any one calmly sit down or fall asleep now? No, the question is, Where shall I flee? If anyone doubts the horseman, let him listen for a moment and hear the "boom, boom" of on-coming destruction. Beautiful homes, treasures, all are left. Only for safety now. It does come, and everything is swept away. Those who did not believe are buried beneath the waters. Those who mean to get ready are too late and now perished. Over on the hill-tops are a group of saved ones.

Our world looks beautiful. Spring is putting on her best dress. The skies are blue. The air is warm and birds are singing. The busy hum of life is heard. Pleasure and festivity abound. People settle down secure. And yet it is coming. It is surely coming. We can see the signs of danger. We can hear the boom of prophetic utterances. Judgment is coming.

"O sinners, the heralds of mercy, implore.
They cry like the patriarch, "Come."
The ark of salvation is moored to your shore,
O enter while yet there is room!
The storm-cloud of justice rolls dark over head,
And when by its fury you're tossed,
Alas, of your perishing souls 'twill be said,
'They heard—they refused—and were lost.'"

Shout it until we are hoarse. Will no one hear? It is like a dreadful nightmare to think of the indifferent millions standing in so great peril. It is coming. Let the world wake up. Shake up the sleepers. Only a moment's hush, and destruction will sweep over the land. Who is on the hill-tops? A little flock. Are we out of the city of destruction? It is not safe to step down for one worldly attraction. Rise above it. Lift your voice and shout, for it is coming. —Lillian M. Cunningham, in Crisis.

Lesson in Charity by a Jew.

Baron Nathaniel Rothschild has taught the anti-Semites a lesson in charity by a splendid gift which he has made for the benefit of Viennese sufferers from pulmonary diseases, which are peculiarly prevalent in that city owing to cold winds and the dust. For some time past a number of philanthropic persons have been trying to found an asylum for patients of this kind, but only a fraction of the sum was forthcoming until Baron Rothschild informed the promoters of the scheme that he wished to present them with his chateau at Reichenau, in the Semmering, for the new establishment. It would be difficult to exaggerate either the timeliness or generosity of this gift. The estate and pleasure grounds, worth 5,000,000 florins, are widely know among the most beautiful in the Styrian Alps. The Baron will transfer the chouteau and grounds to the society the 1st of August, and has promised to make all necessary alterations. It is hoped that it can be got ready for the reception of patients by next winter. Baron Rothschild has already thrown open his park and green-houses in Vienna to the public for a small entrance fee, which goes to a local charity. His chateau in Semmering will afford accommodation for 300 beds.

Dear Restitution:

When Daniel was shown the vision of the 8th chapter, Gabriel was told to make him understand it, but we see he did not, he thought it was about the seventy years desolation. We see by his prayer, Gabriel stopped him and told him he had now come to give him skill and understanding. Told him when he begun to pray the commandment came forth, therefore understand the matter and consider the vision. He says, seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and thy holy city to finish the transgression, to make an end of sins. If Daniel understood this, cannot we? After Jesus had pronounced many woes on the Jews, He said, "Fill ye up the measure of your fathers, wherefore behold I sent unto you wise men and prophets and scribes and some of them ye shall kill and crucify some ye shall scourge in your synagogues, and persecute from city to city."

He says all the righteous blood shall come on that generation. Is this not the seventy weeks that was measured to Daniel, and did they not kill and persecute from city to city? Look at them, how soon they killed Stephen. The angel says, "after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, and the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary. Was it not Titus the son of Vespasian that came with the Roman Army? Certainly it was. Verse 27 says, "and he shall confirm a covenant (see margin) with many for one week." Did Titus do it? Josephus says he first told them that all the Jews that would come over to him he would save their lives and restore their property to them after the war ended and give them his right hand to confirm the agreement, and Josephus says he offered this between every letter to the end of the war. He says many accepted of the offer, and many more would but they feared the Jews would kill them before they could get there. Hales notes on Josephus, says, it was just three years and a half from the time Vespasian entered on that war that they caused the sacrifice and oblation to cease. He says the war lasted over seven years. Josephus says they carried their ensigns to the temple and set them over against the eastern gate and there offered sacrifices to them. The reading in the margin is, "and upon the battlements shall be the idols of the desolator." Jesus said to the disciples, "when ye see Jerusalem compassed with armies then know that the desolation is nigh. Then let them which are in Judea flee to the mountains, and let them which are in the midst of it depart. etc., for these be the days of vengeance. that all things which are written may be fulfilled, for there shall be great distress in the land and wrath upon this people, and they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations, and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."

I cannot see any Scripture for the idea that a personal antichrist or the sacrifices are to be restored. When he brings again Zion he will appear in glory. There has been no time since Jerusalem's destruction that such a calamity could come on them, as they have never been a nation since, and they will be scattered till Gentiles cease to rule. So, says God's word. I see no Scripture to show why our Savior will not come today.

MRS. H. L. ISHAM.

Dear Restitution:

Will you kindly allow me space in your columns to define my position more clearly in regard to the definition I gave to the word gospel, in THE RESTITUTION of March first.

It seems that I have been misunderstood, or in other words the brother lost the whole gist of our argument. I think I will have to tell what I was trying to prove, seeing I did not make it so plain for others as it seemed to myself. It was this. That one did not have to preach the destruction of the wicked in order to preach the whole gospel, but the destruction of the wicked should be preached as a result of believing and obeying the gospel after it (the gospel) had been preached.

The brother seemed to take umbrage because I gave Webster's definition. True I gave Webster as good authority because according to my poor knowledge of the Bible I verily believed it to be a Bible definition, therefore I said this seems about correct. Now if the brother will be better pleased I will say that I think Webster's definition of the word gospel is correct and a good one—proof.

His criticism will be found in THE RESTITUTION of March 22: On the first page he quotes from Luke ix. 2. "And he sent them to preach the kingdom of God." And at the sixth verse it is said that they went as directed and "preached the gospel." All very good. Now how could they preach the kingdom of God without preaching the gospel, and now how could they preach the gospel without preaching the things concerning Christ. Would it not be glad tidings concerning Christ and salvation through him! If so then Webster and I are right after all.

I will give a few quotations in the way of proof. Gospel—good news or glad tidings relates to the following revealed truths. 1st, Birth of John the Baptist as the one that should turn the hearts of the fathers to the children; and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just. Luke i. 13-19. 2nd, The birth of Christ, Luke ii. 10. 11. 3d. proclamation of deliverance to the captives, together with Christ's manifestation of miraculous power in recovering the sight of the blind and setting at liberty them that are bruised. Luke iv. 18. 4th, It includes a hundred fold more in this life, and in the age to come eternal life, Mark x. 29. 30, and immortality 2 Tim. i. 10. It is the the Gospel of Christ and the grace of Christ. and there is a curse against those that pervert it, and do not see the power of Christ as made known in the glad tidings of salvation through his name, Gal. i. 6-10, for it is the gospel of the grace of God, Acts xx. 24, and of your salvation. Eph. i. 13.

It is the power of God unto salvation if believed by either Jew or Gentile. Rom. i. 16. But Scriptural belief includes obedience of the gospel, Rom. x. 16, and those that do not obey it are threatened with destruction when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven. 2 Thess. i. 8. In other words the glad tidings would not be fully proclaimed without telling the things that relate to obedience as well as of faith. It is the gospel of the resurrection of Christ. 2 Tim. ii. 8, 1 Cor. xv. 1-4, Acts xv. 32, 33. It is the gospel of peace and of good things, Rom. x. 15, and of rest both in the typical and anti-typical kingdom (Heb. iv.) and was preached to Abraham promising the blessing of all nations, Gal. iii. 8. Hence it is preeminently the gospel of the kingdom. Matt. iv. 23, Mark. i. 21, Matt. xxiv. 14. But our criticism of our critic is this, the glad tidings of revelation should never be construed to only mean the gospel about the kingdom, for while it is concerning the kingdom of God, it is also of Christ's truths, his resurrection, his grace. It is of salvation, of life, of immortality, of peace, rest and blessings. But if our gospel is hid it is hid to them that are lost. 2 Cor. iv. 3. Now my brother have I given a good Bible definition to the word gospel? Is it definite enough. I think you will agree with Webster too on this word in question. I may have been a little too broad in my assertion when I said, Webster is good authority, but I only had the one word on my mind. As you say we should define such words as God defines them I believe I have done so this time at least. This is the idea I wanted to convey when I gave the definition as I did. I too believe in certain fundamental truths that are essential to our salvation, and as you say, "may be comprehended briefly in the gospel of the kingdom." Some of these truths I have tried to make plain as I believe them. I did not want to be misunderstood therefore I have written as I have in the spirit of love. Your sister in Christ.

Those superb Dining Cars which the Nickel Plate Road will put on service May 28th. They are all ready and magnificently furnished and completely equipped. Hardly a railroad in the land can show their equal. No road has anything superior.

Conference Call.

"Rally once again." The time for another "Grand Army" reunion has almost reached us again. "Occupy until I come" is the grand motto and it should be emblazoned upon the escutcheon of every volunteer in the ranks. Can we meet this watchword with the echoing answer, "Here am I, use me for the Master's service." If so rally one and all, at this yearly conference to be held at the old post, in Dutton, Kent Co. Michigan. Beginning Thursday evening, June 1st, and lasting over Sunday.

The army of occupation until the King shall come, is not as full as it ought to be, and at this yearly gathering we hope to see many volunteers added to its ranks.

The Captain of our salvation has not yet called for a draft to be made, but he has called for willing workers to hurry to the front and work. Work until he comes. Who will be here to help sound out the clarion notes of the coming King Immanuel, and who of the already enlisted will hurry to the reserve in songs of praise, in words of comforting exhortation, sympathy, love, who will come who loves the cause of truth more than popularity, or dress, or gaiety, or pleasure? They are the ones who will help gain recruits for the Kingdom. Come, come to work for that object.

Dutton is on the M. C. R. R. ten miles southeast of Grand Rapids. Trains reach here from Grand Rapids at 1-40 P. M. 5-40 P. M. and 11-30 evening. From the south they reach here at 5-15 A. M. 9-30 A. M. 12-50 P. M. and 9-30 P. M.

M. A. WOODWARD, Sec'y.

The annual conference of the churches of God of the Abrahamic faith in Iowa, will meet at Clarkesville, Butler Co. Iowa, June the 2nd, 1893, and continue over two Sundays. The large audience tent and a half dozen or more small or living tents will be ready to accommodate those who come. And as the preaching brethren are always ready to make any sacrifice to be present, and labor for the interest of the meeting and the good of all, we hope and earnestly entreat all who have an interest in the cause of the Master and are looking for his soon coming to make a sacrifice also if necessary to be at this meeting, for we are persuaded that while all mean to be steadfast, yet there is an ominous tendency to falling away among all Christian societies that will proceed his coming. Then let us, as many as can possibly do so, go to this meeting, determined to make it a means of filling our lamps with that oil that will throw light along the way of the bridegroom's approach, so that if we slumber and sleep before his arrival we will be ready when the final cry is sounded to go out to meet him, and go in with him to the wedding, and not have the door shut upon us while we go to seek for light. He may be nearer than we think.

LIBBIE PALMER. Sec.

The Church of God, in Nebraska, will hold their Third Quarterly Conference, D. V. at the Fairview School-house, Furnas Co, commencing Friday evening, June 2nd, and continue over the following Sunday.

The business relative to the next Annual Conference, and tent work requires the attendance of all the brethren. The signs that foretell "His glorious appearing" are fast culminating. That day may be nearer than we think. "Therefore, beloved, seeing ye look for such things, be ye diligent, that ye may be found of him in peace without spot and blameless."

J. J. CADY, Sec'y.

The annual meeting of the Church of God near Scholl's Ferry, will convene at the Flint School-house, on the evening of June 9, 1893, and continue over Sunday.

Bro. Carowey is expected to be there, yet it is not certain. If it should so happen that he cannot be with us, we shall not be without preaching brethren. We have Bros. Prosser, Skeels, and Jaquith.

Dear brothers and sisters, another year has almost gone into the past, and what has been our record? Have we remembered all through the year that we are—(or should be) "living epistles known and read of all men."

May we all attend this meeting fully determined to make it an interesting one to all. When we see destruction, misery and death on every hand, it behooves us to "put on the whole armor of God, and watch unto prayer, lest we enter into temptation, and the day of the Lord come upon us unawares."

There are a number of isolated brethren scattered throughout Oregon and Washington, from whom we would be glad to hear by letter, if they cannot be with us.

ALMIRA BROOKS, Sec'y.

The third quarterly conference of the Church of God, of the Abrahamic faith, in Indiana, will be held at the Antioch meeting house, five miles south of Plymouth, on Friday, June 9, at ten o'clock. A. M. and continue over the following Sunday.

Let us meet and enjoy one more good meeting at Antioch. Let as many of the churches send delegates as can conveniently. All lovers of the truth in Indiana are invited, and friends and brethren from other states will receive a hearty welcome.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.

VOL. XLII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 7, 1893. NO. 21.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Wait for the Morning.

[illegible] for the morning—It will come, indeed,
[illegible] as the night hath given need.
[illegible] yearning eyes, at last, will strain their sight,
[illegible] unanswered by the morning light.
[illegible] will they vainly strive through tears
[illegible] the darkness of thy doubts and fears,
But, bathed in balmy dews and rays of dawn,
Will smile with rapture o'er the darkness [illegible]

Wait for the morning, O thou smitten child,
S[illegible], [illegible]ed, and persecuted, and reviled,
[illegible]irst and famishing, none pitying thee,
[illegible]ed with the twisted thorns of agony—
[illegible] faintest gleam of sunlight through the dense [illegible] of gloom to lead thee thence—
Wait, then, for the morning—it will come, indeed,
As surely as the night hath given need.

—James Whitcomb Riley.

Epistle of Joudas.

1. Joudas a bond-servant of Jesous Christ, and a brother of Jacob, unto the beloved ones in Father God and the called who have been watched to be kept in Jesous Christ;

2. May mercy be yours and peace and love have been made full.

3. Beloved, making all haste to write unto you about our common salvation. I have deemed it necessary to write exhorting you to strive earnestly for the faith once for all delivered to the saints.

4. For certain men have insiduously entered in who were of old pre-written unto this verdict, irreverent men, who have exchanged the grace of our God for extravagance, and who deny the only Master δεσποτης (sole Lord) and our Lord Jesous Christ.

5. And I desire to remind you, though ye know it all, that when the Lord had once for all saved a royal-people from a land of Egypt, he lost those a second time who become distrustful;

6. And angels who did not watch to keep their own authority, but left their own dwelling-place, he hath watched to keep beneath gloomy darkness with Hadean (invisible) bonds unto a judicial-trial of a great day;

7. As Sodoma and Gomorra and the cities round about them, that in a manner like to these went off in fornication and after other flesh, present an example, while they suffer a right penalty of age-lasting fire.

8. Likewise forsooth these dreamseers also pollute flesh and set aside lordship and blaspheme glories.

9. Though Michael the archangel when he was discussing with the Diabolos (Devil) about the body of Mouses and differed in judgment, did not dare to bring against him blasphemous accusations in a judicial way, but said, may the Lord have rebuked thee.

10. But these blaspheme whatever they do not know, and whatever by nature they do know well like the unreasoning animals, in these they corrupt themselves.

11. Woe unto them; Because in the way of Cain they have gone their way, and in the error of Balaam they have been poured out for wages, and in the contradiction of Kore they have lost themselves.

12. These are the spots in your love-feasts, those who are being entertained along with you, shepherding themselves without fear; clouds without water, borne about by light winds; waning-autumn trees without fruit, twice dead, uprooted;

13. Wild waves of a sea that foam up their own experiences of shame. Wandering stars for whom the gloom of the darkness hath been watched to be kept for an age.

14. And Enoch a seventh from Adam prophesied also in respect to these, saying. So the Lord hath come with his saintly myriads,

15. To execute judgment against all, and to convert all the irreverent for all their deeds of irreverence which they have irreverently done, and for all the harsh words which irreverent obdurate sinners have talked against him.

16. These are murmurers, people who complain of their lot, who go their way according to their inordinate desires: and their mouth talketh ponderous things, while they stand in awe of a face for the sake of gain.

17. But may ye, beloved, have remembered the oracular words previously spoken by the apostles of our Lord Jesous Christ;

18. That they said unto you, that during the last time there would be mockers, going their way according to their own irreverent, inordinate desires.

19. These are those who draw lines of separation, soul-folks (natural-folks) who have not spirit.

20. But may ye beloved, building yourselves up in your most sacred faith, offering votive-prayer in sanctified spirit,

21. Have watched to keep yourselves in God's love, looking expectantly for the mercy of our Lord Jesous Christ unto eternal life.

22. And with discrimination show mercy to some;

23. And some save by snatching them out of the fire, while to some ye show mercy with fear hating even the undergarment spotted with the filth of the flesh.

24. And to him who is able to guard you from stumbling and to stand you blameless with exultation in the presence of his glory;

25. To God alone our Saviour through Jesous Christ be glory, majesty, control and official-power, before all the animate-age and now and for all the animate ages. Amen.

COMMENT.

"Joudas" instead of "Jude" R. V. I see no reason why a revered apostle should be called a nick name.

The heading of the Epistle is "Jouda" which is the Genitive of Joudas the meaning being that this is Joudas' Epistle understood, an idiomatic elipsis, that is all. We might just as well call David Dave" and Solomon "Sol."

And how the translators ever got "James" out of "Jacob" his brother is more than I can see with my limited vision. I always supposed, and do yet, that Jacob and James were two different names.

"Pre-written" instead of "set forth" R. V.

"Verdict" instead of "condemnation" R. V. There is another word for a condemnatory verdict or condemnation.

"And who deny the only Master (δεσποτης) and our Lord Jesous Christ" instead of "And denying our only Master and Lord Jesous Christ" R. V. which changes the thought of the author from two persons to one. The author means that God is the "Master" or "Despot" and Jesous Christ is "our Lord;" and this is the very point of the whole Epistle. Joudas is emphasizing the fact that at this early day in the history of the church "certain persons had insiduously" begun to deny God in this way. Read this epistle carefully and see if the thought of Joudas is not to correct this very error and to strongly assert the glory of God the Father. Read the closing invocation in this light. For this has also been tampered with for the same insiduous purpose.

"Lost" instead of "destroyed" R. V. the antithesis being "saved" and "lost"—something to be infinitely sad about rather than to glower over—to think that it is possible for our infinite Father to lose when his desire is to gain.

"Own dwelling-place" instead of "proper dwelling-place" R. V. This hardly an allowable euphemism.

"Authority" instead of "principality" R. V. The original is a general term while "principality" is a specific term.

"Hath watched to keep" instead of "kept" R. V. for reasons given before.

"Hadean bonds" (that is invisible or unknowable bonds) instead of "everlasting," R. V. No stretch of derived meaning will allow this.

"Of a great day" instead of "the great day" R. V. The author had a reason for leaving out the article.

"Other flesh" instead of "strange flesh" R. V. "Other" may be "strange," but "strange" is not necessarily "other." Not the thought of the author.

"Age-lasting fire" instead of "everlasting fire" R. V. Christ himself limits this fire to the judgment-day when Sodomorra and Gomorra will arise and condemn Tyre and Sidon and Capharnaum and Chorazin, he says.

"Glories" instead of "dignities" R. V. Not the same thought by any means.

"Differed in judgment" instead of "disputed" R. V. I for one am glad to know that angels do not dispute. I have my opinion of people who cannot discuss without disputation. Read what Paul says on this subject. Argument is a noble masculine qualification, disputation a feminine weakness.

"Blaspheme" instead of "rail at" R. V. Are they equivalent terms?

"Spots" instead of "hidden-rocks" R. V. reminds me of a boy's translation of "All Gaul is divided into three halves."

"To God alone our Saviour through Jesous Christ" instead of "To the only God our Savior" R. V. for reason already given and also for the reason that the rendering is not only ungrammatical and unfair to the author but is contradictory to the specific teaching of the Scriptures themselves. Christ is a god, and all Christians who reach the "perfected" condition of the "saints in glory" are called gods. "I have said ye are all gods and sons of a Most High One." This is quoted by Christ himself and approved as oracular, and this to us ought to be a final "imprimatur."

Report.

Since my last report from Ingraham, Ill., I visited Desoto, Mo. Where Brother J. H. Morse now lives. Had two meetings, but as the attendance was poor we thought best to discontinue them. On the following Sunday we went to the country where they had nearly completed a new meeting house, but owing to hard rains and bad roads there were but few out, so I left an appointment for the second Sunday in May. The first Sunday in May I had an appointment in Arkansas, near Jonesboro. I was there six days. I immersed Bro. Johnson into the All-saving Name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins. This is the one that Bro. W[illegible] sent me to immerse. I returned to Desoto to fill my appointment, and again the rain prevented us from having a turnout. Brother Brandt of Casey had sent me word to stop over and hold some meetings at that place, which I did, and as the interest was good I continued over Sunday. I immersed one willing soul. This was one of the best meetings I have had for some time. They have an organization, and Brother Brandt has begun preaching for them, and with proper encouragement he will make an able defender of the truth. I traveled 802 miles, and immersed five into Christ, and preached 27 discourses. The Gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth and obeys from the heart the form of doctrine delivered. I expect to visit Casey and Ingraham, again this summer. I am quite worn out with this trip, but hope to recruit soon. May the Lord soon come.

The every-day cares and duties, which men call drudgery, are the weights and counterpoises of the clock of time, giving its pendulum a true vibration and its hands a regular motion; and when they cease to hang from the wheels, the pendulum no longer swings, the hands no longer move, the clock stands still.

Selected.

Signs to Precede the Advent.

There are certain conspicuous events which are to take place in this world preceding the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and one thing is the organization of a Ten-Kingdomed Confederacy within the boundaries of Caesar's original Roman Empire. There are 23 kingdoms now, but before the Lord comes the Bible clearly teaches us that these 23 kingdoms are to be changed into ten kingdoms. In Daniel ii. 31, we read that Nebuchadnezzar saw a great metallic image, whose head was of fine gold, his breast and arms of silver, the thighs of brass, the legs of iron, the feet part of iron and part of clay. Daniel said the interpretation of this image was that Nebuchadnezzar's kingdom should be followed by three kingdoms and the last kingdom should be divided into ten divisions as represented by the ten toes of the image. These kingdoms have existed, the Babylonian kingdom was the head; Medo-Persian, the arms and shoulders; Grecian, the loins; Roman, the legs; and they are a faithful representation of the Roman Empire as it was divided into western and eastern divisions, which were afterwards sub-divided into 23 kingdoms, but we have not had the ten kingdoms yet. We are looking for them and for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, for in the days of these ten kingdoms (Dan. ii. 44). God will set up a kingdom that will never be destroyed, an everlasting kingdom.

Another great thing to precede Christ's Advent is the embryo rise of a terrible monster, called in the Bible, Antichrist, the Wicked One, the Man of Sin, and the Son of Perdition; one, who will exalt himself and set himself against everything, even God himself. Now, this Antichrist will arise after the formation of the Ten-Kingdomed Confederacy, as we are told very plainly in Daniel vii. 24, and viii. 9. There Antichrist comes forward as a Little Horn, out of one of the four kingdoms into Alexander the Great's kingdom was divided after his death. Antichrist is to become King of Syria: I dare-say he will be a very pleasant man to talk to: there will be something very fascinating in his manner. He will get the kingdom by flattery; he shall come in a subtle way, according to Daniel ii. 21. He will work the thing so as to attain his object. He will give the Jews religious liberty, and allow them to worship God with sacrifices in a rebuilt temple, concerning which he will, according to Daniel ix. 27, makes a seven years' covenant with them. But in the midst of the seven years the ten kingdoms will give him all their power, and then he will give up his pleasing ways, and will be seen to be the terrible creature that the Bible represents him to be, and then he will commence to persecute the Christians. He will go so far as to have his image set up in the temple at Jerusalem, and he will decree a number, 666, to be known as his imperial stamp, and all who will not have this number placed on their foreheads or hands, will be put to death.

Before the first stage of Christ's Advent in the air, this confederacy must be formed, as one of the signs of the Lord's second coming. I don't think we shall have to wait long for it. Before long some gigantic European war will break out and produce this ten-kingdomed confederacy. After this happens, the Lord will speedily come.

There are many reasons for believing that this advent of our Lord is very near. One is that as Daniel "understood by books the number of the years" (Dan. ix. 2), and perceived that the end of the Jewish captivity was approaching, so in our day learned men have "understood by books" notably from Daniel's own book that the end of this dispensation is approaching. You are familiar with these calculations which seem to me as clear and cogent as a proposition in Euclid. Then there are other signs, which are marvellously like those of which our Lord said. "When ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors." (Matt. xxiv. 33) There is that emissary from hell, called spiritualism, which is surely a sign that we are living in the last days. St. Paul says. "Men shall depart from the faith, giving heed to the doctrines of demons." Look at the upside-down state of the world. The spirit of discontent reigns on all sides. Agitation exists on every hand. Capital against labor, and the employed against employers. Look at the constantly recurring earthquakes. Look at the confusion in which the world is; it is in such a disquieted state that no government can put things right—neither kings nor congresses nor parliaments can reform it. It needs the King to come; and not until Jesus Christ comes will things be as they should be.—A. J. Steel in Christian Herald.

Minor Music.

One marked difference between the music of the past generation and that of the present day, is found in the use of minor tunes. A generation ago these were among the most common and popular tunes sung: at present they are hardly ever heard. Singers say, "We do not like minor tunes;" and well they may say so, for they are unable to sing them: and yet the music of nature is almost entirely in the minor strain. The songs of birds, the wail of winds, and the tunes of primitive nations are full of minor strains; and though to the gay and light-hearted such strains may be unwelcome, yet when persons have had experience of the woes and sorrows and sufferings of this weary world, their voices are very likely to sink into the minor chords. The great speakers whose words stir the hearts and enlist the sympathies of men have this element in their voices; and whenever a heart is broken in view of sin, and touched by the power of the eternal spirit, the tones of the voice bear witness to the change, and the anointed ear can detect that inner pathos which speaks the emotions of a contrite heart, which the Lord will not despise.

The trouble with many persons who do not fancy minor tunes is, that they have never had their hearts broken in penitence before God, and they are not under the influence of that Holy Spirit which touches the hearts of men, and makes intercession within them with groanings that cannot be uttered. Hence the music best suited to their taste is cribbed from rattling jigs and rollicking choruses, which move the toes but do not melt the heart.

It is true, that the Christian's life is a life of joy, but it is not the world's joy, with its empty mirth, and its laughter like "the crackling thorns under a pot;" it is a deeper mirth, a more genuine joy, which is the portion of those who are "sorrowful yet always rejoicing." When men have tasted that the Lord is gracious, and know the power of his love; when their hearts have been melted into contrition and tenderness before him; when they have entered into the sanctuaries of God and understood the end of the wicked; when they have learned to pass the time of their sojourning here in fear, as men who have been redeemed with a wondrous price: when they have learned that this world is not their home, that they are pilgrims and strangers here, that the world passeth away and the lust thereof, and all its gay glory is destined to vanish like a dream; when the emptiness of worldly pleasure and the godlessness of worldly mirth no longer charm or satisfy their souls, then they will be in a position to understand the beauty of some of those sacred strains which so fully express the sorrows and the joys, the penitence and the faith, of men who are filled with the Holy Spirit, and know the grace of God in truth.

The Christian Commonwealth in speaking of the use of minor music, remarks:

"Not many months ago a noted Canadian musician, Professor Coleman, died at Worcester Heights. His experimental sensations as a musical genius furnish a startling commentary, as some of his religious countrymen have not failed to notice, on the condition of this fallen creation. That condition is painfully and truly set forth in Rom. viii. 19-23, 'The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now.' Coleman used to say that hardly a solitary wave broke on the shore which to his ear was not keyed in the minor: that most of the winds are likewise keyed in the minor; and that the sounds made by animals are likewise in the minor mode. This truly and pathetically confirms the delineation of creation as it is given in the New Testament. The music of earth is not in unison with the music of the spheres, for sin has set the harp-strings of nature out of tune. But the 'new song' of complete redemption will not be in the melancholly minor. Even nature shall fully share in the glorious emancipation to come with the manifestations of the sons of God."—Common People.

An Intelligent Faith.

Saving faith is intelligent faith. A blind faith will not save anybody. It cannot produce works, for works can only come from a mind acting upon the body with a definite end in view. It is consequently of no use to the individual who has it.

But are there many people cherishing such a "blind faith?"—Yes; and for the simple reason that people are not intelligent concerning that upon which faith is based. "Faith," we read, "cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." So the word of God is the basis of Christian faith. To have faith is to believe that word. But a person cannot believe that which he does not know is there to be believed. His faith cannot include what he does not know that the word of God contains.

One may say he believes God's word, and be sincere in the statement, and yet come very far short of the truth; because every person believes not what the word of God actually declares, as seen by the all-discerning eye of Omniscience, but his own conception of what that word declares: and it would not be possible for him to believe anything else. All Christians, nearly, will say that they believe the Bible, and every part of it; but cite a passage to one, and it becomes evident that it is his own conception, and not the ideal conception, of its truth that he believes. Ask an orthodox Christian if he believes Eccl. ix. 5, and he will reply that he does; but at the same time will tell you, if asked, that he does not believe that the dead sleep unconscious in their graves. He believes the text as he thinks it means, and not as it actually does mean. And it is so with all the rest of us. We get out of the word of God just that which we actually see in it. And if our conception of what any part of that word teaches is wrong, or falls short of the truth, our faith is to that extent of no effect. We may say we believe what the inspired word says, for we know it is the word of the Omniscient, who cannot lie; but if we do not know what it says, there is no force in our assertion that we believe it. It is merely a general statement, meaning nothing.

The Gospel, we know, is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." To the one who does not believe, it is not the power of God unto salvation. There is just as much power in God's word at one time as another; but without the belief that power is not displayed. There is no other medium through which it can operate. We may read a text which contains power enough to create a universe, and if we do not see that it contains this power for us, it will do nothing for us. It affords us no basis upon which to exercise faith.

It is evident then that the word of God must be studied carefully and earnestly, that its real contents and meaning may become apparent; and then faith can be exercised in it, and the power which it contains to destroy sin in us, to strengthen, encourage, and build us up in Christian life, be derived from it. The power is there—power to work miracles in behalf of others, but no one is ever going to be surprised at a manifestation of this power in himself. He will first have recognized it, and believed that it was his to be exercised according to the will of God. When the church reaches this point, the power that was manifested of old will be seen again working unto salvation.—Review and Herald.

Do it with Thy Might.

We are living in a time which above all other times calls upon the Christian for earnest work. The prophet of God, looking down the ages to this time, exclaimed, "Woe to the inhabiters of the earth and of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time." He has come down with the determination to do everything that he possibly can do, to work as he never worked before for the destruction of human souls. Meanwhile, what should those do who profess to be laboring for their salvation? Should not their efforts be marked by a corresponding increase in zeal and earnestness?

Now, if ever, is the time to put in practice the injunction, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." Time has a value now that it never had before. Never had the world so many inhabitants to be warned as to-day. Never were facilities for work greater, or opportunities more numerous. Never was there so much that needed to be done in all branches of Christian work.

While the devil has come down in great wrath, to work with all deceivableness of unrighteousness, well knowing that the time is short, and the unseen agencies from above are equally active on the other side, can man, the object of controversy, contemplate the outcome with indifference? Many apparently can; and the fact is only to be accounted for by the knowledge that human hearts become hardened and stupified by the deceitfulness of sin. It is a strange and fearful thing that at such a time any among the professed followers of Him who "went about doing good" can be insensible to the loud call of Heaven, and the most imperative demand of the times, seeing naught of—

"The good we all may do,
While the days are going by,"

if we would shake off the stupor begotten by the gratification of self.

"Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light."—Review and Herald.

The Restitution.

EDITORIAL STAFF:
Directors of the C. P. Association.
M. JOSLIN, Corresponding Editor.
PLYMOUTH, INDIANA JUNE 7, 1893.

☞ The address of any correspondent of this paper will be [illegible] to any one wishing it, on application.

IN Bishop Wilson's Sacra Privata it is beautifully said, that when we offer our prayers through his (Christ's) mediation, it is He that prays; his love that intercedes; His blood that pleads; it is He who obtains all from His Father.

UNFORGIVENESS [illegible] unforgiven sins, no matter how much we pray for forgiveness. [illegible] be a sin in God; for that knows every secret, and the spring of every action and is not mocked with lip service.

"WITH thee," says the Psalmist, "is the fountain of life." And "when Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory," says Paul; not before it is hid with Christ in God; he is the fountain, the vast reservoir of life for all who believe and obey him.

"CONTINUE ye in my love," said Jesus. Is it not surprising that we need to be told to do this. Is there anything more [illegible] desirable than the assurance of the Savior's affection? And what a peaceful resting place [illegible] What a powerful staff to rest upon! Brethren and sisters, can we not, as John did, sign our names as disciples whom Jesus loved? [illegible] are we if we can.

A FORMER religious writer takes us into his confidence in this way: "I do not think we ourselves are aware how much our religious life is made up of phrases; how much of what we call Christian experience is only a dialect of the churches, a mere religious phraseology with almost nothing behind it in what we really know and feel." This should be a powerful warning for us, and a reminder of what the Master has said about hearers and doers.

RELIGIOUS nonsense is the worst kind of nonsense we know anything of, because it produces the worst effects. A few years ago fire and sulphur were scattered with a lavish hand; but now it is remorse of conscience that is to torment sinners. In view of the fact that the more men sin the less their conscience trouble them, so that at last they are seared as with a hot iron, this is down right stupidity.

Are You a Christian? If not, why not?

These questions were printed upon small slips of paper and distributed to some two thousand working men in Cleveland, by Dr. E. O. Buxton of the M. E. Church. The number of affirmative answers to the first question was very small, compared to those who give the reasons why they do not believe in the Christian religion. A large number said the only reason why they were not Christian, was carelessness; others because they were wageworkers,—one said that Christ's doctrines recognized industrial as well as moral and spiritual evils, and clearly outlines a remedy for all; while modern churchism deals only with the moral and spiritual evils, to the neglect of the industrial, which is the parent of nearly all. Another reason was, "I don't think you believe it yourself." One answered, "I am not a Christian because I believe in truth, not fiction; and because of the unequal distribution of justice by the Christian's God to his children." Another said, "No sir, because the Christian church is in opposition to most reforms and does nothing to emancipate the people from the oppressions of capital." Another—"No, I am not, because I cannot reconcile the doctrine of man's free agency with the doctrine of hell, and God's omnipotence, justice and mercy." Still another—"Because the truthfulness of the Bible has been disputed by science." One did not want to live with Rockefeller, Gould, Sage, Wanamaker and other fleecers of their fellowmen." One did not believe the Bible which teaches polygamy, slavery, and moderate drinking." One was not a Christian because as a rule Christian employers are more oppressive than heretics, and "because Christian and hypocrite are synonymous terms." Another was not a Christian "because the doctrines of Christ are not preached." Another "because Christ was only a good man and a reformer." One said, "No, because I'm living like a dog." Another, "I have no clothes to wear." Another, "no time to go to church." Another, "I work seven days a week." Another, "I'm too tired on Sunday to think of Christianity;" another, "the lodge is good enough church for me;" another, "Too much of hypocrisy;" another, "I like my beer too well;" another, "I can't afford it."

These answers should furnish food for thought to those who have for many years thought that the world would speedily be converted by human effort. Millions are raised by missionary [illegible] in heathen lands and much progress is often reported, but at home where there are Bibles by the million the masses of the people are disgusted with the practical specimens of Christianity exhibited to them, as well as with the God-dishonoring and manhood-degrading doctrines taught.

The Woman's Seed. No. 11.

Before examining what are considered Biblical passages of Scripture to harmonize with the points already proven, we beg our readers to remember that it is the Book [illegible] we are examining and [illegible] throughout; and if [illegible] appear to clash, it is [illegible]

[illegible] Truth of God on this or any other subject without believing what He says about it. During this age God does not now instruct by impressions, visions, or dreams. We are completely shut up to the words he employs. And if when things are called by their proper names we want to express in a way, and by words of our own, we must not forget that our own words express our own ideas, not God's.

Again, in coming to the Book of God, we must take its statements as authoritative and decisive. The WOMAN'S Seed is to crush the Serpent's head; not another seed. We must be careful not to leave the narrow way at the outset, or we will never find the truth. On the presumption that this is subscribed to we hopefully proceed.

To show that this was an understood and believed truth in the infancy of the race, we read in Jude that Enoch, the seventh only from Adam, prophesied of the coming of the Lord with ten thousand of his saints, which all know to be his second coming, overleaping the first, and leaving it for others to speak of. Then, too, we trace the Woman's Seed from Abraham, and from David, the fruit of whose loins is to sit upon his throne, when it is the throne of universal empire; The Messiah, or Anointed of the prophets, the prophet like unto Moses, the Virgin's Son, the slaughtered Lamb. He MADE OF A WOMAN must be the Woman's Seed. He was identified for us both by God and Gabriel, as well as by Himself; "I that speak unto thee am he," said he.

Although several of our articles were destroyed by fire we think we have fairly demonstrated by the Word that no pre-existent person could have been the World's Redeemer, and that in the nature of things, the "Woman's Seed" did not preexist; and that in order to claim the pre-existence of Jesus Christ, God's record of his origin must be ignored. We know as surely as that God has spoken to us, that the Only Begotten of the Father full of grace and truth did not pre-exist; and the task before us is to show that no words of God teach that he did; this we do not hesitate to attempt because we have implicit confidence he cannot stultify himself.

Daniel iii. 24-25 has been offered to us as infallible proof of the preexistence of Jesus Christ. Nebuchadnezzar said:—"Did not we cast three men bound into the midst of the fire? They answered and said unto the King, true, O, King. He answered and said, Lo, I see four men loose, walking in the midst of the fire, and they have no hurt; and the form of the fourth is like the Son of God." This really suits those, who want to believe in pre-existence without any critical analysis at all.

We will now give a Jewish translation: "Did we not cast three men bound into the midst of the fire? They answered and said unto the King, certainly, O, King. He answered and said, "Lo, I see four men unbound walking in the midst of the fire, and there is no injury on them, and the appearance of the fourth is LIKE A SON OF THE GODS."

The Revised Version reads: "Like a son of the gods:" and Dr. Adam Clarke says [illegible] the [illegible] proper translation bar elahin signifies a Son of the gods, a divine person or angel." And observe the King calls the fourth person an angel in the 28th verse. Jamieson, Fausset and Brown say the original [illegible] an angel from [illegible] as verse 28 proves. Without doubt King James translators believed in the Trinity and their belief affected their rendering. Are we prepared to take this heathen monarch as authority respecting the son or the Son of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego whom he threw into the fire because of their loyalty to him?

Although these learned men believe in the Trinity they testify against their faith, and hence their criticism on this rendering is of peculiar value.

The next passage brought [illegible] is Micah v. 2 "But thou Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me, that is to be ruler in Israel, whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting." This, then, is the birth place of the future Ruler in Israel. This is where the Woman's Seed first saw the light. No preexistent person could be made of a woman and be born of her. And yet [illegible] the words which seem to say he always existed. Singular philosophy or sophistry this [illegible] as old as his father. Are not the words "From of old," immediately followed by "From everlasting," [illegible] "From of old," [illegible] if so; but do they prepare us to hear that it is a synonym of everlasting? We think not? We think there is a reasonable solution of this matter. And first it is the language of prophetic poetry, which differs greatly from our matter of fact prose. Secondly, the terms rendered everlasting never mean eternal either in the Old or New Testaments. Thirdly we offer the translation of Isaac Leeser, a Jew, because it is in harmony with the many Scriptures adduced to disprove pre-existence. It is as follows:—"But thou Bethlehem Ephratah, the least (though) thou be among the thousands of Judah, (yet) out of thee shall he come forth unto me whose origin is from olden times from most ancient days."

The above refers the origin of this personage to a remote period it is true, but not pre-historic; not anterior to the infancy of the human race, but near to it the olden times most ancient days.

Dr. Robt. Young's translation reads in this way: "And thou Bethlehem, Ephratah, Little to be among the chiefs of Judah, from thee to me he cometh forth to be Ruler in Israel, and his COMINGS forth are of old, from the days of antiquity." The rendering of this Great Presbyterian Scholar and Biblical Critic is in beautiful harmony with that of the learned Jew. This "Comings forth," instead of goings forth gives us the key. His comings forth were as a stream from a spring or source; or, as the growth of a plant from the seed,—small at the beginning, of slow, but continual development till perfection is attained. Commencing with a solitary promise that the Woman's Seed should finally triumph; then typical sacrifices were instituted (Gen. iv. 4) then the Shemetic divisions of the human race was made by setting them apart as a tent for God to dwell in, and thus pointing to the quarter from which the promised Woman's Seed might be expected. Clearer then grows the light, for Abraham is selected as the federal head of the race through whom he is to come who is to both bless all nations and extirpate all [illegible] Then Judah is selected as the particular [illegible] (Gen. xlix. 10:) then the family of [illegible] (Psa. lxxxix. 19, 20,—then the Virgin, then the town of his birth, and at last all the scattered rays of prophetic light concentrate in the babe in the manger at Bethlehem, and angelic choirists [illegible] the grand event with "Glory to God in the Highest, and on Earth peace good will to men." [illegible] the beginning of the end [illegible] and the Serpent Crusher [illegible]

Antichrist. [illegible]

Daniel's [illegible] the events connected [illegible] development of Antichrist [illegible] clear in the Revised Version [illegible] in the Authorized. [illegible] is, "Then shall stand up in his place one that shall cause an exactor to pass through the glory of the kingdom: but within few days he shall be destroyed, neither in anger, nor in battle." The question [illegible] the twentieth verse the Syrian King who will be succeeded [illegible] ten-kingdomed Confederacy [illegible] been formed [illegible] break between the [illegible] twentieth verses. The Turkish power [illegible] typified [illegible] the Syrian King [illegible] decidedly the land of Palestine rising as it is at the present time, with its railways, [illegible] agriculture, the improved condition of the architecture of its towns and especially the City of Jerusalem, which is also reported as being [illegible] Jewish. [illegible] a rich field for a raiser of taxes. God in his providence will see fit to remove him. It would follow almost as a natural course, if this King of Syria died soon after the formation of the Ten-kingdomed Confederacy, that the Prince, who previously had made a covenant with the Jews, would seek his place or office. It is remarkable that the Jewish "prince of the covenant" is named in the twenty-second verse, and "the league" in the twenty-third, as though the covenant were already in existence. This suggests the possibility of a Napoleon making a Seven Years' Covenant while only a Prince, but occupying some responsible position. The "Vile" or "Contemptible" Person to whom "they had not given the honor of the kingdom" is said to come in peaceably, and to obtain the kingdom by flatteries. We read, "He shall come in a time of security," when ten kings had confederated together, and they would most likely be glad that the throne of the deported Syrian king should be occupied as quickly as possible.

The support of the nine Kings would more than outweigh any lack of interest manifested among the Syrian people; and the princely applicant or aspirant will lure them by flatteries. He would be little at first in general estimation in comparison with his predecessor and of other nine kings in the Confederacy but he would rise rapidly into power, and become eventually monarch of them all; first conquering three Kings; probably the Turkish, Greek, and Egyptian, so that with the kingdom of Syria already possessed, he would appear as a second Alexander the Great ruling over the four revived Eastern kingdoms, even as Alexander the Great did, and which were afterwards divided between his four generals. Dan. ii. 40, deals with him as a supreme head of ten kings, as seen in Rev. xiii., and hints at rebellion on the part of the Syrian and Egyptian Rulers at the time of the end of the time of trouble.

Some have thought that the King of the North in this verse refers to the supreme head of the Russian Empire, but there seems no reason why any departure should be made from the generally-received view that it refers to Syria's Ruler. Beside, he is to "enter into the countries," i. e., those represented by the kings of the North and the South and is to "overflow and pass through" them. Egypt will particularly receive punishment (verses 42 and 43.) It would be difficult to understand these words if one of the powers were the vast one of Russia, and the other that of England. The tidings of [illegible] might certainly [illegible] from Russia as well as from the East, where the tribes of the children of Israel are supposed to be.

If the King of the North [illegible] from Russia, then Ezekiel 38 and 39 would seem to intimate that [illegible] will convert a threatened enemy into an ally, and occasion a marshaling of forces around Jerusalem, as assuredly there will be on the occasion of the battle of Armageddon, for Zechariah xiv. 2, says, "For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle." And with such mighty forces surrounding him from all the nations of the earth, he plants "the tent of his palace between the seas and the glorious holy mountain." Yet in spite of his great power we are assured "he shall come to his end, and none shall help him." (Rev. xix [illegible] W. Whisker in Prophetic News.

Read for Personal Profit.

We should make a business of reading the Bible daily for spiritual [illegible] personal profit. Too often we read [illegible]

F. B. Meyer says: "Do not read the Bible for others, for class or congregation, but for yourself. Bring all its rays to a focus on your own heart. Whilst you are reading, often ask that some verse or verses may start out from the printed page as God's message to yourself. And never close the book until you feel that you are carrying away your portion of meat from that Hand which satisfies the desire of every living thing. It is well sometimes to stop reading and seriously ask, What does the Holy Spirit mean me to learn by this? What bearing should this have on my life? How can I work this into the fabric of my character?"

This is indeed good advice. It points to a duty of immense practical value. It is only as we are willing that the Bible shall face us as individuals and speak directly and faithfully that it can most freely fulfil its supreme mission among men. Only thus can it be to us the most precious, helpful and blessed of all books. Only thus can it do for us the best possible work, developing our characters, moulding our lives, giving high power to our capabilities and fitting us for broad usefulness. We must let it speak out plainly, pointedly and it may be piercingly concerning our personal faults, our deviations from rectitude, our remissness in duty and our secret and public sins. When we read in it of the sins of the Israelites, let us ask ourselves whether we be not guilty of similar sins, and, like them, need to repent and seek forgiveness. And when we read of Christ's rebuke to the disciples for their lack of faith, let us inquire whether we also do not deserve a like rebuke and for the same reason. In this way we may derive the highest profit from reading the Bible. It will both humble and exalt us and hasten the ripening of our characters. C. H. Wetherbe in Messiah's Herald.

Perilous Times.

The voice of the "false prophet" is heard on every hand uttering his delusive and life-destroying theories, and seeking to warp and distort the Word of God, so that its true light shall be obscured, and its teachings be made of "none effect." The divine behest to "preach the Word" is unheeded by the majority of teachers of the present day, and "another gospel" is proclaimed in the temples where wealth and fashion and carnal formality refuse to "endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears." Sermons, replete with rhetoric and oratory, fall upon the ears of the multitudes, like the tones of some grand melody, but alas, how utterly devoid of the solemn truths of the Bible. The threatening clouds of coming judgment may be seen in the heavens, the thunders may utter their prophetic warnings, but all is unheeded by those who throng the great highway of modern philosophy, and seek wisdom from every source but that fountain of all truth, the Word of God. Forms and ceremonies, and pagan rites, are observed with pompous zeal, and "bodily exercise that profiteth little" lends its aid in the grand display of so-called worship and alas, "my people love to have it so," indifferent to the inquiry which an insulted and sin-abhorring God sets before them "But what will ye do in the end thereof?" "Because, even because they have seduced my people, saying, Peace; and there was no peace; and one built up a wall, and lo, others daubed it with untempered mortar."

As we behold the great tide of humanity fast hastening on toward the ocean of apostasy, and employing "the oppositions" of false science to disannul the teachings of Holy Writ we are led, like the disciple of old, to exclaim, "Lord, are there few that be saved?" In view of the great evils with which frail humanity is surrounded at the present time, and the impetuous rush of the church toward every doctrine of vain philosophy, is it not almost a wonder that even a few have the moral courage to "earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints," and hold fast the "form of sound doctrine" amid such opposition by the unregenerate powers of modern theology? "On with the dance, and defiance to the Bible," is the motto of the present hour. "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall." "God is not mocked: whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." If we sow or aid and abet in sowing the seeds of death, how can we expect to reap eternal life? Is there anything in false theories that God approves, or even winks at, now that "light is come into the world?" "He that worketh deceit shall not dwell within my house," is the reply of the Lord. If we expect to be saved when Jesus comes, how careful we should be what we accept and teach; as the Lord does not promise to save those who do not accept and believe His Word. G. A. Creed in Herald of Life.

The indications about the land of promise and the prophecy are cheering to those who are entertaining that blessed hope, the glorious appearing of the great God, even our Savior Jesus Christ. Reader, can ye not discern the signs of the times? The intelligent man is inexcusable who shuts his eyes to these momentous and ominous times.

While They are Living.

When our loved ones lie dead before us, then we are apt to be stung with the deep regret that we might and ought to have done more for them while living than we did. It is then that we sorrowfully feel that we did not appreciate our friends, especially those bound to us by the ties of close kinship, as we now wish we had. Rev. R. H. Conwell of Philadelphia, in speaking of Mary's anointing Jesus at Bethany, just before his crucifixion, says, "Mary came in advance to anoint him. Suppose she had left it until after he was dead. But no, she said, 'I will do what I can, while he is living. I will do it to-day!' Oh, what an inspiration to every Christian! Do what you can for your friends, while they are living! Do it to-day! Do it 'against the day of burial!'

Mary must have been very glad indeed, hundreds of times, afterwards, that it was in her heart to perform that loving service to her Lord, at the very time that she did. True, she was severely criticised at the time, for doing such a thing, but the cold, harsh criticism was swallowed up and buried out of sight by the rich, refreshing sense and satisfaction of having done a timely, tender and unselfish service for her loved Lord. Others had reason to regret that they had not been thoughtful enough to do what she did, but she had no regret to torment her. Oh, there are many ways in which we can minister to our children and our friends, giving relief to their sorrows, making their burdens easier to bear and adding brightness to their daily lives, if we only would while we have them with us. Alas, that we so constantly fail to keep this thought and purpose before us, in our practical intercourse with our living ones! And not only such ones, but our neighbors and acquaintances and even our enemies should feel to-day the touch of our helping hand. C. H. Wetherbe in Crisis.

The Four P's.

Work for the ingathering of precious souls requires four qualifications.

First. In the first place is patience, willingness to toil a long while. Says the apostle, "Let patience have her perfect work."

Second, is painstaking; nothing is ever accomplished if we give up in the midst of our work. We are to spare no pains in our efforts to win souls for the Master. Our Savior took a long journey from Jerusalem to the coast of Tyre and Sidon, just to bring a blessing to the Syro-phenician woman.

Third. Following this, we need perseverance; if we see good results, we must have the stick-to-it principle, let come what will. As Paul testifies, "Be not weary in well doing."

Fourth, prayer. Without divine aid, we can never be successful; but with God's help we can gain perfect victory. "Be instant in prayer," is a word we should never forget.—Hannah E. Sawyer in Crisis.

Poetry.

The Ministry of Song.

In God's great field of labor
All work is not the same;
He hath a service for each one
Who loves His holy name.
And you, to whom the secrets
Of all sweet sounds are known,
Rise up! for He hath called you
To a mission of your own.
And, rightly to fulfil it,
His grace can make you strong,
Who to your charge hath given
The Ministry of Song.

Sing to the little children,
And they will listen well;
Sing grand and holy music,
For they can feel its spell.
Tell them the tale of Jephthah;
Then sing them what he said,—
"Deeper and deeper still," and watch
How the little cheek grows red,
And the little breath comes quicker:
They will ne'er forget the tale,
Which the song has fastened surely,
As with a golden nail.

I remember, late one evening,
How the music stopped, for, hark!
Charlie's nursery door was open,
He was calling in the dark,—
"Oh, no! I am not frightened,
And I do not want a light;
But I cannot sleep for thinking
Of the song you sang last night.
Something about a "valley,"
And "make rough places plain,"
And "Comfort ye;" so beautiful!
Oh, sing it me again.

Sing at the cottage bedside;
They have no music there,
And the voice of praise is silent
After the voice of prayer.
Sing of the gentle Savior
In the simplest hymns you know,
And the pain-dimmed eye will brighten
As the soothing verses flow.
Better than loudest plaudits
The murmured thanks of such,
For the King will stoop to crown them
With His gracious "Inasmuch."

Sing, where the full-toned organ
Resounds through aisle and nave,
And the choral praise ascendeth
In concord sweet and grave.
Sing, where the village voices
Fall harshly on your ear;
And, while more earnestly you join,
Less discord you will hear.
The noblest and the humblest
Alike are "common praise,"
And not for human ear alone
The psalm and hymn we raise.

Sing in the deepening twilight,
When the shadow of eve is nigh,
And her purple and golden pinions
Fold o'er the western sky.
Sing in the silver silence,
While the first moonbeams fall;
So shall your power be greater
Over the hearts of all.
Sing till you bear them with you
Into a holy calm,
And the sacred tones have scattered
Manna, and myrrh, and balm.

Sing! that your song may gladden;
Sing like the happy rills,
Leaping in sparkling blessing
Fresh from the breezy hills.
Sing! that your song may silence
The the folly and the jest,
And the "idle word" be banished
As an unwelcome guest.
Sing that your song may echo
After the strain is past,
A link of the love-wrought cable
That holds some vessel fast.

Sing to the tired and anxious
It is yours to fling a ray,
Passing indeed, but cheering,
Across the rugged way.
Sing to God's holy servants,
Weary with loving toil,
Spent with their faithful labor
On oft ungrateful soil.
The chalice of your music
All reverently bear,
For with the blessed angels
Such ministry you share.

When you long to bear the Message
Home to some troubled breast,
Then sing with loving fervor,
"Come unto Him and rest."
Or would you whisper comfort,
Where words bring no relief,
Sing how "He was despised,
Acquainted with our grief."
And aided by His blessing,
The song may win its way
Where speech had no admittance,
And change the night to day.

Sing, when His mighty mercies
And marvellous love you feel,
And the deep joy of gratitude
Springs freshly as you kneel;
When words, like morning starlight,
Melt powerless,—rise and sing!
And bring your sweetest music
To Him, your gracious King.
Pour out your song before Him
To whom our best is due;
Remember, He who hears your prayer
Will hear your praises too.

Sing on in grateful gladness,
Rejoice in this good thing
Which the Lord thy God hath given thee,
The happy power to sing,
But yield to Him, the Sovereign,
To whom all gifts belong.
In fullest consecration,
Your Ministry of Song,
Until His mercy grant you
That resurrection voice,
Whose only ministry shall be,
To praise Him and rejoice.

"There's an earnest, anxious longing
For the coming of his feet,
And the world is growing weary
While the pulses quickly beat;
For the air is full of murmurs,
And men's spirit of unrest,
Turning hither, thither, nowhere,
Sore bewildered and unblest."

Necessity of Obedience.

"Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." 1 Sam. xv. 22.

Law governs universal nature All things in the heavens or on the earth are placed under Divine law. Mind as well as matter is subject to the same order. The intellectual and moral nature of man, in connection with the physical, are under laws to God. Physical law cannot be broken without bringing punishment upon the transgressor; neither can the laws under which man's higher nature is placed, be disobeyed without great loss. All inanimate nature—all worlds and systems of worlds—the sun, moon, and stars which Jehovah ordained, shine and revolve in their appointed orbits according to his will.

"Forever singing as they shine,
The hand that made us is Divine;"

and all animate nature, inferior to man, follow out and fulfil the purposes of their being, in obedience to the laws of their organization. But man, made only a little inferior to angels, and to whom dominion was given over the animal creation, lost his sovereignty by transgression of the law of his Creator, and brought death upon himself and all his posterity.

Man being created in the likeness of the Elohim (Gen. i. 26, 27; ii. 7,) physically, intellectually, and morally but of a lower order, was placed under law, and was held responsible. As he was made lord of the animal creation, so it was right that he himself should become accountable to the power which created him, and invested him with this authority, thus crowning him with glory and honor. Psa. viii. 5. From the account we have in Genesis, there was only one simple prohibitory law given him to keep, with a penalty attached for disobedience—"in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die;" or according to the Hebrew, dying thou shalt die, Gen. ii. 16, 17. The serpent beguiled Eve, and deceived her; Adam was not deceived, for the law was given to him; he transgressed knowing the penalty. Hence the sentence pronounced upon him was—"Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it: cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth unto thee; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field; in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Gen. iii. 17-19. And in order that this sentence might be carried out, he drove the man out of the garden, to till the ground, and placed cherubim and a flaming sword to guard the way to the tree of life, lest man should have access to it, and eat, and live forever. Verses 22-24.

The Apostle John says, "Sin is the transgression of law;" and the Apostle James writes, "When lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin; and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death;" and Paul declares that "the wages of sin is death;" and that "by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men; because in him all have sinned;" and thus "by one man's disobedience many were made sinners." 1 John iii. 4; James i. 15; Rom. vi. 23; v. 12, 19. Death was in the world, and reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the likeness of the transgression of Adam; that is, they were under no positive law, such as was given to Adam, or through Moses to the Israelites, yet they died. They possessed the sin-nature of their progenitor, and sinned against the goodness and forbearance of God, which lead to repentance; therefore as many as thus sin, though not under positive law, perish or die. "The law entered, that the offence might abound;" and "by the law is the knowledge of sin;" for indeed the apostle says, "I had not known sin, but by the law: for I had not known lust, except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet." Rom. v. 20; iii. 20; vii. 7. The sinful character of all mankind is very tersely described in Rom. iii. 10-18, which shows that all the world is subject to the judgment of God; "because all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God." Paul told the idolators at Lystra, that God, "who in times past suffered all nations to walk in their own ways," now desired them to turn from idols to the living God; and when preaching at Athens, he said, that "the times of this ignorance (when they worshipped idols) God winked at; but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent." Acts xiv. 16; xvii. 30.

All mankind were not placed under law to the living God, when the descendants of Jacob were called out of idolatrous Egypt. Israel was chosen to be a peculiar people for Jehovah. He gave Egypt for his ransom. Isa. xliii. 3. Moses was told to speak unto the children of Israel these words—"ye have seen what I did unto the Egyptians, and how I bore you on eagle's wings, and brought you unto myself. Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people; for all the earth is mine: and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation." Exod. xix. 4, 5. And when Moses had reported all these words to the people, they answered, "All that the Lord hath spoken we will do." Then after the people had been cleansed, the Lord came down upon Mount Sinai, on the morning of the third day, and spoke to the people the ten commandments, out of the fire, with the noise of a trumpet, amid thunderings and lightnings and thick darkness. So dreadful was the sight that all the people in the camp trembled, and entreated that Moses might speak to them instead of God. Then Jehovah told Moses what to say unto the children of Israel; and he told the people. And Moses wrote all these words in a book, built an altar, erected twelve pillars, offered burnt offerings, and sacrificed offerings of oxen unto the Lord. "And he took the book of the covenant, and read in the audience of the people: and they said, All that the Lord hath said will we do, and be obedient." Then Moses sprinkled the blood of the sacrifice upon the altar, the book, and the people, saying, "Behold, the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you concerning all these words." Exod. xxiv. 3-8, Heb. ix. 19, 20. After this solemn covenant had been made between Jehovah and all Israel, Moses, Aaron, Nadab, Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel, went up into the mount, and saw the God of Israel; and did not die. Moses was called up into the cloud that rested upon the top of the Mount, to receive "tables of stone, and a law, and commandments" which Jehovah wrote, for him to teach the people; and "Moses was in the mount forty days and forty nights." Exod. xxiv. 9-18. But because Moses delayed to come down out of the mount, the people forgot their vows, and fell into idolatry, in the very presence of the cloud, out of which they had heard the voice of the Lord say, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." Such is the hardening and blinding nature of sin. Read the account of this in Exod. xxxii, and of Moses interceding with Jehovah for the pardon of the people, for the want of space forbids enlarging on this point.

The history of Israel as a nation illustrates the character of Jehovah as a "God, merciful and gracious, longsuffering, and abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin, and that will by no means clear the guilty; visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children's children, unto the third and fourth generation." Exod. xxxiv. 6, 7. And it also sets forth the character of the children of Israel as being always stiffnecked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, from the time of the exodus down to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. In Neh. ix. we have a short account given of their afflictions, rebellions, and mercies, from the beginning of the nation to their return from Babylon. Psalm cvi. may be profitably read in the same connection as illustrative of their character. Jehovah as their God and lawgiver claimed their homage and obedience, and punished them for disobedience. This he had a right to do; for the land was "defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance and broke the everlasting covenant." Isa. xxiv. 5. Therefore the curse came upon both land and people; for "they mocked the messengers of God, and despised his words, and misused his prophets, until the wrath of the Lord arose against his people, till there was no remedy." 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16.

We may learn something from the examples given in the Old Testament of punishment inflicted upon the disobedient, for the apostle Paul said, that "they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the ages are come," 1 Cor. x. 2. I will cite a few instances. On account of the idolatry of the people in the making and worshipping of a golden calf, while Moses was in the mount receiving the ten commandments, there were slain about three thousand men, by the sons of Levi, at the command of the Lord. Exod. xxxii. 20-28. Nadab and Abihu, the sons of Aaron, were devoured by fire, because they offered strange fire before the Lord. Lev. x. 1, 2. This fire was that which was not commanded. In Num. xv. 32-36, we have an account of a man being stoned to death for breaking the sabbath-law. If any person, whether a son of Israel, or a stranger, born in the land, did ought presumptuously, he was to die; "because he hath despised the word of the Lord, and hath broken his commandment, that soul shall utterly be cut off; his iniquity shall be upon him." Verses 30, 31. Through unbelief and disobedience, the whole congregation of Israel, men from twenty years old and upward, able to go to war, (Num. i. 46,) numbered in the plains of Sinai, in the second year after coming out of Egypt, 603,550, all died in the wilderness, with the exception of two persons. Read Num. xiii., xiv., for an account of this rebellion, and the reason for this punishment. Also, see Num. xxvi. 51, when the census was taken thirty-eight years after, that of 601,730 men of twenty years and upward, able to go to war, only two men were found that were numbered in the previous census—Caleb and Joshua, verses 64, 65. Many more examples might be quoted from the Pentateuch, but I will only refer the reader to what the apostle Paul quotes therefrom in 1 Cor. x. 1-12, Heb. iii. 15-19.

The case of Saul, the king of Israel, will illustrate the necessity of strict obedience to the commands of the Lord. Moses had been commanded to write in a book, as a memorial, that the Lord would utterly put out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven. Exod. xvii. 14-16; Num. xxiv. 20; Deut. xxv. 17-19. In this last reference Israel was commanded, that when they came into the land, and obtained rest from their enemies round about, "thou shalt blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven; thou shalt not forget it." Some 400 years after this, Saul is commissioned to execute this decree of Jehovah, to utterly destroy Amalek, and all that they have, and spare them not. 1 Sam. xv. Saul gathered a large army, and utterly destroyed the people, except Agag, their king, and spared the best of the flocks and herds, as he said, to sacrifice to the Lord. This act was accounted disobedience to the word of the Lord, and Saul was rejected from being king over Israel. The case of Uzzah in 2 Sam. vi. 6, 7, also shows with what strictness the law was to be obeyed. None but the sons of Levi were allowed to touch the ark. David also sinned greatly against the Lord, being guilty of adultery and murder. 2 Sam. xi. Nathan the prophet is sent to speak a parable to him, which convicts him of his heinous crimes: and also to pronounce sentence against him. 2 Sam. xii. 1-14.

We come now to a practical application of this subject to ourselves. We read that "if the word spoken by angels was stedfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward; how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation," etc. Heb. ii. 2-4. This salvation was first made known by Jesus, and then by his apostles, God confirming the word by miraculous power, and gifts of the Holy Spirit. The word which they proclaimed was the gospel—the glad tidings of the kingdom of God, and those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ. Acts viii. 12; xxviii. 23, 30, 31. Salvation or a deliverance from the power and dominion of sin and death is connected with the belief of these things. The gospel is "the power of God for salvation to every one that believeth." Rom. i. 16. "Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God," Rom. x. 17; but "faith without works is dead," James ii. 20. Faith is perfected through obedience. It is said that "Abraham believed God, and it was imputed to him for righteousness," (Gen. xv. 6,) when Jehovah said to him, "So shall thy seed be," viz. as the stars of heaven for multitude, when as yet he had no child. But his faith was not tried, or perfected, until he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar. He "accounted that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead; from whence also he received him in a figure." Heb. xi. 19. "Now it was not written for his sake alone, that it was imputed to him (for righteousness;) but for us also, to whom it shall be imputed, if we believe on him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead, who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification," Rom. iv. 23-25. Obedience to the gospel is required. The apostles were authorized to require obedience to their word. They received grace and apostleship from the Lord Jesus, "for obedience to the faith among all nations, for his name." Rom. i. 5. Jesus commanded his apostles to preach the gospel, and to baptize the believers, in order to their salvation. They fulfilled this commission wherever they went. They preached the gospel, which Paul declared was "by the Scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith." Rom. xvi. 26.

Repentance and immersion in water in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, is required of all believers of the gospel. This is the test of obedience for every one who hears the gospel. By this means the soul is purified by obeying the truth, 1 Pet. i. 22; and saved, iii. 21; sanctified and cleansed, Eph. v. 26; are made children of God, and put on Christ, Gal. iii. 26, 27: made free from sin, and become servants of righteousness, Rom. vi. 17, 18; and receive the spirit of adoption, and become sons and heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ, Rom. viii. 15-17; and as washed, sanctified, and justified sinners, we have peace with God and are free from condemnation, and also are free from the law of sin and death, having obeyed the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, 1 Cor. vi. 11; Rom. v. 1; viii. 1, 2.

The apostle Peter asks, "what shall the end be of those that obey not the gospel of God?" 1 Pet. iv. 17; while Paul says those "that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power," 2 Thess. i. 8, 9. We have also seen that "those who despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses," of which there are many examples given, then the apostle asks, "how much sorer punishment do you think he will deserve, who tramples on the Son of God, and esteems as a common thing the blood of the covenant by which he was sanctified, and insulted the spirit of favor? For we know him that hath said, vengeance is mine, I will recompence, saith the Lord," etc. Heb. x. 28-30. Those who enter into the new covenant are required to "serve the Lord Christ." "Ye are my friends," said Jesus, "if ye do whatsoever I command you." "If a man love me, he will keep my words." What has he commanded? For those who have become his disciples, he instituted an ordinance for a weekly remembrance of him, called the Lord's Supper. 1 Cor. xi. 20; Acts xx. 7. He requests or commands, "Do this in remembrance of me;" and the apostle Paul adds, "For as often as you eat this bread, and drink this cup, you do show the Lord's death till he come." 1 Cor. xi 26. And as the Father commanded to hear his Son, (Luke ix. 35,) so the Son says, "He that heareth you heareth me; and he that despiseth you despiseth me;" Luke x. 16: and the beloved John writes—"he that knoweth God heareth us;" (1 John iv. 6;) and Paul says, "He therefore that despiseth, despiseth not man, but God, who hath also given unto us his Holy Spirit." 1 Thess. iv. 8. Those who obey the apostolic word, obey both the Father and the Son. How important then that all who have entered into the new covenant, be careful to render obedience to all things commanded. Paul commended the Romans because their obedience and faith were spoken of throughout the whole world. Rom. i. 8; xvi. 19. Christ left us an example of obedience of suffering, even unto death, Heb. v. 8; Phil. ii. and by this means he has become "the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him," verse 9. May we all be found faithful and obedient children: and may our God "make us perfect in every good work to do his will, working that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom be the glory for the ages of the ages. Amen."

Briefs from Kansas.

The word immortal is found just one time in the Bible, and it is applied to God, and not to man. "Now unto the King, eternal, immortal, invisible, the Only Wise God, be honor and glory forever, Amen." 1 Tim. i. 17.

The word immortality is found just five times and no more. It is an attribute of the King of kings and Lord of lords. "Who only hath immortality dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto, whom no man hath seen, or can see." 1 Tim. vi. 16.

Paul says,—Jesus Christ who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." 2 Tim. i. 10.

God will give eternal life to them who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality. Rom. ii. 7.

This immortality or eternal life, as brought to light in the gospel, and sought for by the Christian, will be obtained, or put on at the resurrection time when this mortal puts on immortality. See 1 Cor. xv. 51-58. The resurrection time is the time of reward, the time when those who look for and love his appearing will be changed from mortality to immortality, receive that undying nature, be like unto the Lord, and die no more. Hail, happy day, soon may it come and set the prisoners free. Read the following Scriptures. Phil. iii. 20. 21. 2 Tim. iv. 6-8. 1 John iii. 1, 2. Col. iii. 3, 4.

Again, the word Reverend is found only one time in the Bible, and then it is applied to God. —"Holy and reverend is his name." Psa. iii. 9. It is very wrong for the creature man to assume those special attributes or titles that belong to God alone.

T. E. Adams.

At Lagrange, Wis. May 21, 1893, Geo. A. Prescott, aged 64 years.

The deceased was born in Franklin Co. Maine. He came to Wisconsin in 1866. He was in the army where he contracted a disease that caused his death. He became identified with the people that hold the hope of the promise made to our Fathers. He was a member of the Church of God at Tunnel City, Wis. He was held in high esteem by all who knew him, as he showed himself a man, and a Christian, as was evidenced by the large gathering that came to show their respect for him at the funeral. He was a member of the G. A. R. and was laid away to rest by them to await the final roll call by Him who will invite him to inherit the Kingdom.

He leaves a wife and two children to mourn the loss of a kind husband and loving father.

As we were to address many of the G. A. R. and of the faithful, we chose for our text 1 Cor. xv. 57. The burial service by the Post was quite impressive. Services at the house by the writer, assisted by the M. E. Pastor.

Conference Call.

There will be a conference of the Church of God, of the Abrahamic faith, at Lanark, Ill., commencing June 25, 1893, and continue over Sunday. Brother and Sister Woodward of Michigan, will be with us to labor for the interest of the meeting, and the good of all. We hope and earnestly entreat all who have an interest in the cause of the Master, and we are looking for His soon coming, to make a sacrifice if necessary to be at this meeting, as there will be some important business to act upon.

J. D. Renner, Sec'y.

To all whom this may concern:

Carns, Neb.—It will hereby be noticed by the brethren abroad that the Quarterly Conference of the Church of God, of Northern Nebraska, and Southern Dakota, which should have been held at Bassett, June 22, 1893, is a failure, as the committee has made a mistake in changing the above named place to Bonesteel, South Dakota, June, 22, 1893, and further let it be known that according to our Business Meeting held at Ainsworth Nebraska, March 4th, we could not move our Quarterly Conference from the North line of the State of Nebraska, according to the voice of the conference at that meeting as we were to see what we could do at once in the way of raising an evangelist fund for that purpose, and if we united with the State Conference the tent was to be moved on this north line of the state and work together this coming year, and after the committee had set the place Bassett, as above designated, the tent should have been shipped there as the brothers and sisters in this part had called a special meeting for the purpose of giving a helping hand in the way of entertaining the brothers and sisters abroad. I will now further give notice that I have been informed by Elder F. M. Clifton, that the people of Bonesteel, S. D. are not ready for the meeting set for that place June 22, 1893.

N. B. To this the brethren at our meeting at Ainsworth decided that at our Quarterly Conference here we were then to make arrangements to have our next meeting at Bonesteel, S. D. by request of Elder F. M. Clifton.

NOTICE.

Bonesteel, Dakota, Apr. 18, 1893.—We the undersigned citizens of Bonesteel, S. D., and vicinity agree to pay in to the Evangelist fund of the Church of God in the states of Nebraska and Southern Dakota, the amount set opposite our names, by the 15th of September, 1893. This is to defray the expenses of moving the tent to this place for the purpose of holding a camp-meeting here at that time. Number of names enrolled, 34, amount $34.50. This notice may appear again.

Now, brethren, it is high time that we wake up from our sleep and work for the Blessed Master's cause, that we may not be found wanting when He comes. From your brother in the work.

Wm. H. Denson, Sec'y.

The quarterly conference of the Churches of God of the Abrahamic Faith will meet northeast of Oxford two miles, in Brother Thomas Jackson's neighborhood July 21, 1893, College Co., Kansas, to continue over Sunday and longer if the brethren think best. We hope and entreat all who have an interest in the cause of the Master and are looking for his soon coming to be at the meeting, for we believe that all intend to be reached, yet there is a strong tendency to growing cold among the true church that precedes his coming.

We extend a cordial invitation to all the brethren in this and other states. There is some important business to transact and we would like all of the brethren to come that possibly can come. Brethren let us work while we have an opportunity for the signs indicate the near approach of the Master. Let us be up and doing.

E. F. Randolph, Sec.

Christ in the flesh is God manifested to us. The character of God is set forth in the deeds of love and acts of charity as manifested by Christ in the midst of suffering humanity.

Dear Restitution:

A goodly number of the readers of The Restitution express themselves as well pleased with the letter drawer, and I will here add my endorsement of the same, and regret that more do not write for it. In a great house there are not only vessels of honor and also some of dishonor. Let a person therefore purge himself so he may be a vessel of honor and fit for the Master's use. Purge yourself. Do not wait for some one else to do this for you. Purge out the old leaven of malice, and everything that is contrary to a pure life in Christ Jesus. Out of Him there is no promise of a life beyond the grave, for in that direction we are all fast traveling. There is no security of long life or of tomorrow. We have but the promise of today. Let us avail, for we know not what tomorrow may bring forth. We often bring calamities on ourselves by not being discreet. We grasp after too much of this world's goods and it brings disaster upon us. I do not think it is best to risk too much in a business way, so that others may be losers by our action. I think it would be a good thing for us, when the enemy does overtake us, to have enough to pay our debts, but the world is so full of speculation of all sorts and kinds, that men do not seem to care whether it is their money or not, just so they can get it. My advice to the brethren would be to pay all you owe. I think the endorser of a note is just as liable as the principal in the note. Some may ask "what has this to do with religious matters?" It has much to do. Gov. McKinley said, "All the paper with my name on it will be paid." He had no disposition to cover it up. That is the voice of honesty coming from a high source. Others than he would say the same. I signed some notes for my fellow men. I said they should be paid and they were. Some men try to screen themselves from their responsibility by turning their property over to their wives, and leaving their creditors go. This is one of the last day defrauding schemes to evade the law. Such persons are not held very high in my estimation. There is too much of such proceedings in the world. I do not think one of the "one faith," would stoop to such proceedings. It is degrading in the extreme. Dont think of doing it brethren, let everything go first. Be honest, be righteous, and whatever you do, do it to the honor and glory of God.

John S. Arnold.

Another important feature of the Kingdom, the animal creation are harmless and subject to man.

"And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice den, they shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."

There are sucking children and weaned children. Intuitive knowledge also. The church of the First-born neither marry or are given in marriage. Generation has ended with that order of redeemed ones. "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth. Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake." "Rejoice and be glad, for great is your reward in heaven."

How Much?

"I have made thousands of dollars during the last three months," said a saloonkeeper boastfully to a crowd of his townsmen.

"You have made more than that," quietly remarked a listener. "What is that?"

"You have made wretched homes women and children poor and sick and weary of life. You have made my two sons drunkards," continued the speaker with trembling earnestness. "You have made the younger of the two so drunk that he fell and injured himself for life. You have made their mother a broken-hearted woman. O, yes, you have made much more than I can reckon up. but you'll get the full account some day."

Duplicity sees only impurity, and doubts the very existence of God. Selfishness does not believe that there is such a thing as unselfishness in the world. Dishonesty questions every man's motive, and sees treason in disinterested tenderness. Hate refuses all offers of sympathy and aid. These malign feelings and affections carry with them their own sad sting and curse. Sin thus degrades a man in his own eyes and in the eyes of the slaves of sin, and impoverishes him. It robs him of true fellowship based on mutual confidence. It robs him of self-respect. It robs him of peace.

Sometimes a fog will settle over a vessel's deck, yet leave the topmast clear. Then the sailor goes up aloft and gets a lookout which the helmsman on deck cannot get. So prayer sends the soul aloft, lifts the clouds in which our selfishness and egotism befog us, and gives a chance to see which way to steer.

THE SPECIAL EVANGELIST FUND.

This fund is raised and controlled by the Sisters, for the purpose of placing some young man in the field as a proclaimer of truth. Sisters in making donations to this fund please say whether or not you intend to give a stated amount regularly each quarter. ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The annual meeting of the Church of God near Scholl's Ferry, will convene at the Flint Schoolhouse, on the evening of June 9, 1893, and continue over Sunday.

Bro. Corbaley is expected to be there, yet it is not certain. If it should so happen that he cannot be with us, we shall not be without preaching brethren. We have Bros. Prosser, Skeels, and Jaquith.

Dear brothers and sisters, another year has almost gone into the past, and what has been our record? Have we remembered all through the year that we are (or should be) "living epistles known and read of all men."

May we all attend this meeting fully determined to make it an interesting one to all. When we see destruction, misery and death on every hand, it behooves us to "put on the whole armor of God, and watch unto prayer, lest we enter into temptation, and the day of the Lord come upon us unawares."

There are a number of isolated brethren scattered throughout Oregon and Washington, from whom we would be glad to hear by letter, if they cannot be with us.

The 23rd quarterly conference of the Church of God, of the Abrahamic faith, in Indiana, will be held at the Antioch meeting house, five miles south of Plymouth, on Friday, June 9, at ten o'clock, A. M. and continue over the following Sunday.

Let us meet and enjoy one more good meeting at Antioch. Let as many of the churches send delegates as can conveniently. All lovers of the truth in Indiana are invited, and friends and brethren from other states will receive a hearty welcome.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.

VOL. XLII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 14, 1893. NO. 22.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

What is the Use of Preaching Doctrine?

[illegible]

It is not possible for any one to become a successful preacher of the righteousness which is by faith, unless in the first place he shall become [illegible] of righteousness, or in other words, appropriates the injunction of the Apostle: "take heed unto thyself." This should not be [illegible] a very important factor to a successful proclamation of the gospel. If his hearers are conscious that he does not practice what he preaches, his message will [illegible] power, neither can God bless [illegible] work. He must be "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed rightly dividing the word of truth." If his life is such that he does need "to be ashamed," he had better cease "dividing the word of truth" to the people, until he can enforce the same with a godly life.

Having accomplished this, "take heed unto * * * the doctrine." This advice is especially necessary at this day, for the time prophesied of, "when they will not endure sound doctrine," has come, and in place of this, they hire teachers which will please the ear, and the result is, they "turn away their ears from the truth," and are "turned unto fables." The apostle calls those hired preachers who aim to please the ear at the expense of the truth for "filthy lucre's sake," "vain talkers and deceivers, * * * whose mouths must be stopped, who subvert whole houses, teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake. * * * Wherefore rebuke them sharply, that they may be sound in the faith."

As a remedy he advises the "Holding fast the faithful word as he hath been taught, that he may be able by sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers."

Our text says: "Take heed unto * * * the doctrine," and "henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about by every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive." "The doctrine," is brought into comparison with "every wind of doctrine." "The doctrine" leads to salvation, while the "every wind of doctrine," is preached by crafty men, who "lie in wait to deceive."

A question of vital import is: What is "the doctrine?" See Acts ii. 41, 42: "Then they which gladly received his word (doctrine) were baptized, * * * and they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine, etc." It needs no great skill to discern the "apostles' doctrine," preached in that memorable sermon on the day of Pentecost. The doctrine of that sermon relates primarily to the fact "that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins according to his flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne." "The apostles' doctrine" then is life from the dead, and the incoming reign of the resurrected Jesus on the throne of David as sworn to by our blessed Father, and when "they gladly received his word ("apostles' doctrine") were baptized," "for the remission of sins." Those who heard believed, and obeyed, we read that they were firmly rooted in that gospel faith, "and they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine." And instead of decrying doctrine as many of our modern religionists do, the High Priest said: "Ye have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine." The High Priest said also: "Did we not straightly command you that ye should not teach in this name?" They then commanded them to be whipped, and let them go under a strict charge that they must keep still. This kind of treatment would be apt to seal the mouths of many of our so-call [illegible] charitable preachers of this day; [illegible] did not. Twice we read: "And daily, in the temple and in every house they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ." They went right to the temple, the most public place of worship, and from house to house. There was no sneaking around the corner with them. They were courageous soldiers of the blessed Christ. Duty, regardless of consequences was their motto.

"Ah!" says one: "Be charitable my brother, don't be so tenacious about doctrine, better far be broad and liberal in your views and teach that if we do that which is about right between man and man and all will be well."

My objection to the above is, that it is not true charity. Genuine charity will be faithful in warning people of real danger. This may be aptly illustrated in the case of a traveler who was anxious to reach the town of B—, which was situated at the end of a mountain pass. Arriving at the pass, he found two paths leading out from the same point, and the question arose with him, which is the right path? On making inquiry of two passers by, they replied, "that both paths led to B. but the left hand path was the shortest route." Mr. E. said: "Yes, that was so, but on the account of recent landslides the path was beset with danger." Mr. C. said: "that cannot be, for certain scientific reasons, a landslide was impossible," and advised the traveler to take it, saying that his friend's idea of danger was groundless. After a vehement protest from Mr. E., Mr. C. advised him not to be so positive, but be more charitable, and let the traveler take it as it was the shortest route, and night was fast approaching. The result was, the traveler concluded to take the advice of the so-called charitable false guide, and the result was disaster.

Thus it is with false doctrine. Says Jesus: "In vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. * * * Let them alone: they be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind both shall fall into the ditch." No amount of charitable ignorance will save a man from the "ditch." See 2 John ix., 10: "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son. If there come any man unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed: for he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds."

In these days of so-called charity, John would be roundly denounced as an uncharitable bigot. True charity consists in being faithful to God's Word.

W. H. WILSON.

John's First Epistle.
Chapter, 1

1. That which was from the first, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we were spectators of, and which our hands have touched of the word of the life:

2. And the life was made manifest, and we saw it and we testify and announce unto you the eternal life which was according to the Father and was made manifest unto us.

3. That which we have seen and heard, we announce unto you, that ye also may have a partnership with us; and our partnership is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ;

4. And these things we are writing unto you that our joy may have been made full.

5. And this is the love (or message) some [illegible] have of the promise which we have heard from him, and announce unto you, that God is light and that there is no darkness in him.

6. If we say that we have a partnership with him, and are walking in the darkness we lie and do not the truth:

7. But if we are walking in the light, as He is in the light we have a partnership with one another, and the blood of Jesus His Son cleanseth us from all sin.

8. If we say that we have no sin we make ourselves err, and the truth is not in us.

9. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to remit unto us our sins and to cleanse us from all wrong.

10. If we say that we have not sinned, we make him out a liar and his word is not in us.

CHAPTER 2.

1. My little children, these things I am writing unto you that ye may not sin; and if any one doth sin we have an advocate with the Father, namely Jesus Christ a justified One.

2. And he is favorably inclined concerning our sin, and not concerning ours alone, but concerning the whole cosmos.

3. And in this way we comprehend that we know him, namely if we are watching to guard his commandments.

4. The one who saith, I know him, and is not watching to keep his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him.

5. But if he is watching to keep his word, truly the love of God hath been perfected in him. In this way we comprehend that we are in him.

6. The one who saith he is abiding in him, ought himself to walk even as he walked.

7. Beloved, I am not writing unto you a new commandment, but an old commandment, which ye have heard from the first. The old commandment is the word which ye have heard.

8. Again a new commandment I am writing unto you, a thing that is true both in him and in you: because the darkness is being laid aside and the true light is appearing already.

9. The one who saith he is in the light and hateth his brother, is in the darkness until just now.

10. The one who loveth his brother is abiding in the light, and there is no cause of stumbling in him.

11. But the one who hateth his brother is in the darkness, and is walking in the darkness, and doth not know where he is going, because the darkness hath blinded his eyes.

12. I am writing unto you little children, because your sins have been remitted unto you for his name's sake.

13. I am writing unto you fathers, because ye have known him from the first. I am writing unto you, young men, because ye have overcome the wicked one. I have written unto you little children because ye have known the Father.

14. I have written unto you, fathers, because ye have known him from the first; I have written unto you young men, because ye are strong, and the Word of God is abiding in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one.

15. Do not love the cosmos nor the things in the cosmos. If any one loveth the cosmos the love of the Father is not in him. Because in the cosmos all the inordinate desire of the flesh, and the inordinate desire of the eyes, and the inordinate pride of life is not of the Father but is of the cosmos.

17. And the cosmos is being laid aside, and its inordinate desire. But the one who doeth the will of God abideth forever.

18. Little children, it is a last hour: and even as ye have heard that an antichrist is coming, so now many antichrists have come to pass. Whence we know that it is a last hour.

19. They have gone out from us; but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would have remained with us. But that they might be made manifest that they are not all of us.

20. And ye have an ointment from the sanctified One, and know all things.

21. I am not writing unto you because ye do not know the truth, but because ye do know it and that no lie is of the truth.

22. Who is the liar unless the one who denieth that Jesus is the Christ? He is the antichrist who denieth the Father and the Son.

23. Any one who denyeth the Son hath not the Father either; the one who confesseth the Son hath the Father also.

24. Let what ye have heard from the first abide in you. If ye are abiding in what ye have heard from the first ye are also abiding in the Son and in the Father.

25. And this is the promise which he hath promised unto us namely the eternal life.

26. These things have I written unto you concerning those who are leading you astray.

27. And the ointment which ye have received from him is abiding in you, and ye have no need that any one should teach you; but as his Spirit is teaching you concerning all things, and is true and is not a lie, and even as he hath taught you, abide in him.

28. And now, little children, abide in him: that if he appear (or be manifested) we may have boldness and not be shamed away from him in his presence.

29. If ye know that he is a justified one, ye know that every one who is doing justice hath been begotten of him.

COMMENT.

"From the first" instead of "from the beginning." R. V. This more idiomatic and unavailable for misleading theological conclusions.

"Of the Word of life" instead of "concerning the Word of life." R. V.

"Which was according to the Father" instead of "which was with the Father." R. V.

"Partnership" instead of "fellowship." R. V.

"And he is favorably inclined, etc.," instead of "he is the propitiation, etc." R. V.

"Cosmos" instead of "world." R. V.

"Watch to guard" instead of "keep." R. V.

"Is not watching to keep" instead of "doth not keep." R. V.

The two kinds of "watch" here meant, the "Exoteric" first used and the "Esoteric" the last mentioned. The first is an act upon something outside of the person who is doing the watching, the latter is an act which is reflex and upon the person himself who performs the act.

"Watch" is the primary thought in each word and "keep" is the secondary thought. The two thoughts combined in "watch to keep" or "watch to guard" removes the teaching from the domain of the impossible and infinite and brings the teaching where it ought to be within the sphere of the finite and human.

"The old commandment is the word." Why not begin "Word" with a Cap here and personify it as in the earlier part of this epistle the R. V. has done?

"The new commandment" so is made specific and easily apprehended namely to practice love as a virtue instead of hatred as a vice.

Look out for the tenses of the verbs here from the 12th to the 15th verses inclusive. They have been tampered with.

"Is being laid aside" instead of "is passing away." R. V.

"An ointment" instead of "an anointing." R. V. for grammatical as well as polemical reasons.

"Who denieth the Father and the Son" makes the caution against confounding the two personalities not only specific; but makes the one who does it an antichrist, and the argument is a reductio absurdum, which reaches any other conclusion than John means just this.

CHAS. GARDNER.

Man's Business and his Home.

"I must be about my Father's business."

These words are very suggestive, and full of meaning, though uttered by a youth only twelve years of age. Such obedience could only come from a pure unselfish heart, filled with the love of God, and an eye single to his glory.

If man was inspired with this spirit of love and obedience, all would be about their Father's business, and there would be no need of prisons, or detectives, or almshouses, for there would be no sorrow, no discord, no covetousness, no oppression, but all would be peace and prosperity.

When this Divine teacher, sent of God was grown to manhood, he was tempted of the devil forty days and gained a glorious victory. He then was baptized of John, after which he commenced his mediatorial work between God and man.

The first words of instruction he gave to fallen man, was, "Repent for the Kingdom of heaven is at hand." Repentance by man, through Christ the Mediator, is the only way of reconciliation. This command laid the ax at the root of the tree, and when obeyed from the heart, will fill the world with gladness.

As an inducement for repentance, an assurance was given that, the Kingdom of God was at hand. At this time three of the universal kingdoms of Nebuchadnezzar's image were past, and the fourth was in its glory, and the next one at hand was to fill the whole earth, and stand forever.

This teacher who spake as never man spake, went about preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom.

He commanded men to seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness. He taught them to pray for his kingdom to come and his will to be done on earth as it is in heaven.

On the second coming of Christ, and the establishment of his kingdom is founded the faith and the hope of the gospel. The meek are to inherit the earth, and it is to be filled with the glory of the Lord, and the knowledge of the Lord will cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. Christ was on the earth forty days after his resurrection, speaking of things pertaining to the Kingdom of God. The heavens are the Lord's but the earth hath be given to the children of men. Behold the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth, much more the wicked and the sinner.

No home is spoken of for man in the Bible, but the earth. Any theory that changes, or supersedes, or militates against it, must be another gospel, and climbing up some other way.

The saints are given the kingdom under (not above) the whole heavens. They are to take it, and possess it forever.

Christ is to have dominion from sea to sea, and from the rivers to the ends of the earth. His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed. Christ is to rule in the midst of his enemies. He shall speak peace to the brethren. All kings shall fall down before him. All nations shall call him blessed. The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ, and He shall reign on the throne of David forever.

Their selfish rule and power is to be broken in pieces like a potter's vessel, and they will be brought under the saving power of his grace, which will prove a savor of life unto life, or of death unto death.

The law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. He shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off, and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks. Nations shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. He maketh wars to cease unto the ends of the earth.

Abraham and his seed were promised the land for an everlasting possession, but he died without a foot for an inheritance, and is sleeping with a great cloud of witnesses, not yet having received the promises, but see them afar off, and are waiting for the better resurrection for their fulfillment.

The heavens are to retain Christ until the times of the restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began.

We read in the promises that the desert shall blossom as the rose the parched ground become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water, that the face of the earth shall be renewed and the curse be no more. The river and the tree of Life shall be there, and the ploughman shall overtake the reaper, and the treader of grapes him that soweth seed.

The wolf shall feed with the lamb, and the leopard lie down with the kid, and there shall be none to hurt or make afraid. The earth was not made in vain, it was formed to be inhabited.

God's great purpose in creating man, and his home, was not defeated by man's fall. Christ came to save that which was lost. The second Adam will restore what was lost by the first Adam. He manifested the love that we must possess, and gave us the example we must follow, and demonstrated the faith we must exercise to be saved.

To inherit the kingdom we must have the faith of Christ, and have an eye single to God's glory, and seek first his kingdom and righteousness (and not our own) and be about our Father's business. This will isolate us from the world and its honors and bring its frowns and persecutions, for they that live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. Persecution is a part of the warfare.

The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, but men choose the wisdom of this world and exalt its D. D's.

God reverses this order in his rulings, for he will have all the glory. Consequently he that humbleth himself shall be exalted, and he that exalteth himself shall be abased. Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called, for they will worship the creature more than the creator. God will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent.

He has chosen the foolish things of this world to confound the wise, for no flesh shall glory in his presence.

God will yet bring perfection out of imperfection and order out of confusion. When men are perfected, then the earth also will be perfected. When the Golden Rule, do as we would be done to, obtains, then all will be about their Father's business, and his will will be done on earth as it is done in heaven.

Tell the whole world these blessed tidings,
Speak of the time of bliss that nears:
Tell the oppressed of every nation
Jubilee lasts through endless years.
CHORUS.
Oh! for that reign so pure and holy,
Earth's jubilee so long foretold;
'Tis the glad day of peace and glory,
Prophets foresaw in times of old.

Editor Restitution:

1. Scripture says: "I shall put my Spirit in you and ye shall live." Popular Theology says, when God takes his spirit out of us, we shall live.

2. Scripture says: "I will cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the Land of Israel." Ezek. xxxvii. 12. Popular Theology says, part of man remains in the grave and part goes, direct to heaven without entering the grave; and has no desire to go to the land of Israel at all.

3. Scripture say: "We shall know the Lord." "Oh, my people when I have brought you up out of your graves." Ezek. xxxvii. 14. Popular Theology says, we shall know the Lord when we are put into our graves.

4. Scripture says: "That which befalleth the Sons of men, befalleth beasts, even one thing befalleth them." Eccl. iii. 19. Popular Theology says, "Man goes to heaven at death. If this be true, the beast goes there also—according to Scripture.

5. Scripture says: "Man hath no pre-eminence above a beast." Eccl. iii. 19. Popular Theology says that man hath pre-eminence, for he goes to heaven at death; whereas the beast perishes.

6. Scripture says of man and beast, that, "they are to go to one place." Eccl. iii. 20. Popular Theology says they go to different places.

7. Scripture says: "Who knoweth the Spirit of man that goeth upward and the Spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth? Eccl. iii. 21. Popular Theology says there is no doubt about the matter.

8. Scripture says: "If the dead rise not then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." Popular Theology says, not at all, they have conscious existence in heaven, and did not fall asleep.

9. Scripture says: "All that are in their graves shall come forth." Popular Theology says, all that are in its own mythological heaven and hell shall come forth.

10. Scripture says: "The righteous shall be recompensed in the earth at the resurrection of the just. Popular Theology says they will be recompensed in heaven immediately after death.

11. If God is in heaven, and the Spirit at death returns to God who gave it, and this Spirit is conscious man, why is not David in heaven?

12. If Popular Theology is right of what use are the Scriptures?

13. If Popular Theology is wrong would it not be better that it had a millstone hanged about its neck and be cast into the sea?

14. If the Scriptures require interpretation, where shall we find an inspired, infallible interpreter?

15. Whence do the self-styled "orthodox" derive infallibility?

Perhaps some one versed in the mystery of "Scriptural Interpretation" may be able to show that Popular Theology, while differing from Scripture does not contradict it, but teaches precisely the same only quite different; and why it is "Orthodox" to vehemently assert that the Scriptures usually mean something entirely different to what they say.

If the Almighty was not competent to say what He meant, how did our Orthodox Interpreters find this out and come to his assistance?

Dr. Newton says "Hope, Faith and Love are weapons, and weapons imply foes and encounters: and, relying on my weapons, I will glory in my sufferings." •

In Vol. 7, p. 3.. of Wesley's works he says that the whole language of the Romans, with all the improvement of the Augustan Age does not afford so much as a name for humility, nor was one found in the copious language of the Greeks, till it was made by the great Apostle. •

It was Richter who once said, "This Jesus, being the holiest among the mighty, and the mightiest among the holy, has [by anticipation we presume] with that pierced hand of his, lifted the gates of empire off their hinges;—has turned the stream of centuries out of its channel, and governs the ages." •

Bunyan said, "The river of life is pure and clear as crystal. Is the doctrine offered to thee so? or, is it muddy and mixed with the doctrines of men? What water is fouled is not water of life. Wherefore, if thou findest it not right, go up higher toward the spring-head, for the nearer the spring the more pure and clean is the water." •

We remember reading of a satirical poem once, in which the Devil was represented as fishing for men, and adapting his baits to the tastes and temperments of his prey, but the idler, he said, pleased him most, because he would bite at the naked hook. In our opinion the ruin of most men date from some vacant hour. •

Feed My Sheep.

Said Jesus to Peter three times, "Simon, Son of Jonas, lovest thou me?" [illegible] "Yea, Lord thou knowest that I love thee," Jesus said to him, "Feed my sheep." This would be the proof of his love to the Lord; this would be the same as doing it to himself. We know he did feed them, and we know what he fed them—the bread of life. He proclaimed the Glad Tidings of Christ—God's saving power, and all the commandments of Jesus. Jesus tells us plainly that his sheep know his voice and follow him, and Peter was one of Jesus, mouth-pieces after his departure for the far country,—the sheep readily discern those shepherds who have been with Jesus; and relish the food dealt out by them as if it came from the chief shepherd himself.

Our thoughts took this turn after looking over the Monday's paper, and found one of the great lights of the Presbyterian Church had preached the night before on "Human Nature—the [illegible] and dignity it is capable of, as illustrated by the patriotism [illegible] of our soldiers in the [illegible] What a theme for the pulpit! [illegible] many sermons on the dignity of human nature would it take to save a soul from death? We have no doubt that the D. D. referred to will receive in the neighborhood of a hundred dollars for that discourse. Crowds flock to hear him, fully aware that he repudiates Moses,—and all miracles except those of Jesus, and affirms that the Messianic prophecies are past due and unfulfilled—and never can be fulfilled.

The next article tells us that the Pastor of the First Congregational Church lectured on Victor Hugo, and declared he had noble blood in his veins, and paid a tribute to his genius and humanity." Is there any saving power in this? Will believers in Victor Hugo be saved, is the question? If not why preach him?

Next follows the pastor of The Spiritual Alliance with a discourse upon "Joan of Arc—showing clearly that amusement or entertainment is the principle thing. Of course moral instruction is worked into these discourses, but for salvation purposes they are utterly worthless.

Following the above is the discourse of Dr. Talmage, his text being the Song of Miriam, "Sing ye to the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously, the horse and his rider hath he thrown into the sea;" the occasion of their joyous day being the payment of the floating debt of $140,000. In the course of his remarks he gives us his idea of heaven. He expects to have a good laugh when he gets there, especially when he sees how in this world he got scared at things which ought not to have frightened him; and that it is a place where he can do as he pleases and have everything he wants. David will have his harp and Gabriel his trumpet, and Handel his organ, and Thalberg his piano, and the great Norwegian performer his violin, while the Archangel Michael will stand on the sea of glass mingled with fire swinging his scepter to keep time for the multitudinous chorus, "Sing ye to the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously." Poor man, he knows little more of God's purpose in creation and redemption than if God had never stooped down to us with a revelation, or than if he had been raised in the heart of a dark continent in utter ignorance of it. Would to God we could bring to his notice God's call to his kingdom and glory on earth. •

The Woman's Seed.
No. 12.

As some are quite anxious to know "what we are going to do with John i. 1-14" we have concluded to examine that Scripture without further delay. And first, we are going to do nothing with it but believe it, and rejoice in it, and show it to be in harmony with the great stream of truth running through the book of God on this subject. It is true,—the truth of God, and therefore full of divine consolation. If our readers still bear in mind that we are writing of the "Woman's Seed," and that the Lord God said "I will raise up a prophet from among their brethren, Deut. xviii. 15-18; and that the spirit in Isaiah said, "Behold a virgin shall conceive and bear a son," Is. ix. 6; and that Gabriel said to Mary, "Behold THOU SHALT conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son," Luke i. 31; and "The Holy Spirit shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee,—therefore, (because of this) also, that holy one that shall be born of thee, shall be called the Son of God, v. 35; also that it says, "And behold, thy cousin Elizabeth, she hath also conceived a son in her old age;" and that Jesus said, "I am the living bread which cometh down from heaven—he that eateth MY FLESH and drinketh my blood—this is the bread which came down from heaven." John vi. 48-58; and the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." Rev. xii. 8; and, "That was not first which is spiritual, but that which was natural," I Cor. xv. 48; and the book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the Son of David, the Son of Abraham; Matt. i. 16; and "Jesus himself" began to be about thirty years of age, being, (as was supposed) the son of Joseph, which was the son of Heli—which was the son of Adam, which was the son of God." Luke iii. 23-38.—Yes: if our readers receive this testimony and set to their seal that God is true, we shall at once be on good terms, and soon see eye to eye.

There is no use in mincing the matter whether we are en rapport with our readers or not; the fewer the advocates of truth are, the more distinct and strong the few must write.

John i. 1-14 is held to be the stronghold of those who believe in the Trinity. "The Incarnate Son of God" is the way they speak of Jesus. Says one of this class, "He gave his life—himself—as a sacrifice of infinite value, which value arose from the infinite dignity and worth of his person, the essential Incarnate Son of the Living God." This is a fundamental doctrine with Papists, Greeks, Protestants and we believe Mohammedans also. But what is it? What do they mean by Incarnation? We have no difficulty with the words "God manifested in the flesh," but manifestation and incarnation are by no means synonymous expressions, as they suppose. "God is manifested or seen in his angels, in the works of creation, in his saints, but most perfectly of all in his Son. By the incarnation of Christ, the sects teach that GOD was clothed with flesh, or took upon him a human body called Jesus of Nazareth. This is not taught in all the book of God. We challenge the proof that The "word" in John i. 1 means "Christ," one of the three persons of the godhead, or any pre-existent person whatever. The Word was made flesh; Christ was not made flesh; God was not made flesh; God was not born a helpless infant, and died; God the Eternal had no father,—the Father gave the Son to die.

Those who think differently from us assume that the Word is the Son. They have no right to do that, to sustain a pre-conception. The words are not of the same import. That assumption makes them say, personally, that a spirit-son was made into a fleshly-son, and thus plunge deeper than ever into mysticism; because if that be so, what was made of a woman? And, if, as the spirit says, "God sent forth his Son made of a woman did he come into existence when thus made, or did he exist before he was made? If so, when did pre-existence end? Was it at begettal or at birth? Honest searchers for truth will not slight these questions. If the pre-existence could end, of course it was not endless; and in that case there was no need of being made lower than the angels for the suffering of death. And if it be claimed that the pre-existent life did not end, then the Lord possessed two distinct natures, or was composed of two distinct persons, one of which could not die, and the other could. As it was Jesus of Nazareth born of Mary who died for us, we demand to know what part the pre-existent Son took in our redemption? If he did not die for us he was not raised again for our justification, and did not enter in the most holy place by his blood—indeed was not tempted and tried, and does not therefore succor us, and is not coming again. It will not do to say that he enabled the Son of Mary to live a spotless life, that was not so. It was the Eternal Spirit that enabled him thus to live (Heb. ix. 11).

But suppose it were so, that Jesus did possess both divine and human natures at one time, what then? Why, as he was made in all things like unto his brethren, we too are both human and divine—our souls are parts of God and can never die; and so we land again in the old serpent Pagan and Papal lie, we once escaped from.

It was the child begotten of God by the overshadowing power of the Holy Spirit, and born of Mary who was named Jesus, and so named because he was to be a Savior. As he had no personal existence before his birth, he had no name: Jesus of Nazareth was not in the beginning with God; and therefore did not make all things. The Word was with God, and more than that, the Word was God, just as a man's word is regarded as himself, when he is held to account for it.

No! Our opposers must not read John i. 1 as if said "In the beginning was the Son, and the Son was with God, and the Son was God." That involves two persons while the grammatical construction of the passage allows but one.

"In the beginning," doubtless refers to Gen. i. 1, and there it says "God created the heavens and the earth." John says, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God; the same (word) was in the beginning with God; all things were made by Him." Who does the pronoun Him represent? A believer in pre-existence will say, "Christ," without hesitation. But without hesitation we say, God. Our say-so is as good as theirs, and then we have Gen. i. 1 to support what we say. Besides, God is the last antecedent, and no Christ has been introduced yet.

After the creation of the heavens and earth they existed in a chaotic state. Did some other person, called the Word, bring order out of disorder and complete the work, or did God complete it? We read that the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. And God said let there be light, and there was light; but this word of command does not preclude the employment of agents, as we shall presently see.

Now, as to the "Word" in particular. It is from Logos, of which the learned say as follows: A word spoken, speech, eloquence, doctrine, reason, or the faculty of reasoning," Dr. Adam Clark.

"A saying, i. e., a declaration, assertion, affirmation." Greenfield. "Words as opposed to deeds,—a saying, speech, discourse, conversation," Parkhurst. "Skilled in words, speech,—the word by which the inward thought is expressed." Liddel and Scott.

"The usual Scriptural meaning of Logos is speech, or word—the logos of God is the creative declarative, injunctive word of God. The word is not an attribute of God, but an active reality by which the Eternal and Infinite is the [illegible] cause of the created and [illegible]." Alford.

It is the will of God spoken and given to us in language: his truth is His word—the Logos. His mind, or purpose spoken forth—enlightenment of the whole family" J. G. Cook.

"The spoken word of [illegible]" Benjamin Wilson, author of the Diaglott Translation.

Godet on John i. 1 says of the expression, "With God" it "expresses proximity, an active relation. The real translation would be "The word in relation to God."

Let our readers bear this learned testimony as to the import of the word logos in mind, together with the fact that the "Beginning" referred to was one, and the all things were once created, and then consider the numerous agencies employed in creation, as disclosed by the following Scriptures:

"By the word of the Lord were the heavens made, and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth." Psa. xxxiii. 6. Here we see the meaning of word is exactly what the learned have said. Words cannot be uttered by us without the expenditure of breath, and this teaches us, that it was not a person called word, that was with Him in the beginning; the breath of his mouth was not a person. It continues, "He (Jehovah) gathereth the waters of the sea together as an heap: he layeth the depths in store houses. Let all the earth fear the Lord; let all the inhabitants of the world stand in awe of Him, [why] for he spake and it was done,—he commanded and it stood fast." This we repeat, proves that logos is used to mean what it says, and what the learned say it means.

"By His Spirit he hath garnished the heavens; his hand hath formed the crooked serpent: lo, there are parts of his ways; but the thunder of his power who can understand?" Job. xxvi. 13, 14; v. 12, "He divideth the sea with his power, and by his understanding he smiteth through the proud!"

"I, wisdom, dwell with prudence and find out knowledge of witty inventions. . . . Jehovah possessed me in the Beginning, of his way, before the works of old. I was set up from Everlasting, from the Beginning, or ever the earth was. . . When he prepared the heavens, I was there." Prov. viii. 12, 20, 27.

"By wisdom hath (Jehovah) founded the earth; by understanding hath he established the heavens." Prov. iii. 19.

"I am the Jehovah that maketh all things,—that stretcheth forth the heavens alone, that spreadeth abroad the earth by myself." Is. xliv. 24.

Here we find the Word, the Spirit, the wisdom, the power, and the understanding of God as personified agents of the one Jehovah alone in creating the "all things" attributed to a pre-existent Christ never once mentioned.

We said the commands of God did not preclude the employment of agents in his creative work, and we may discover who his personal agents were, by reference to the 103rd Psalm and the 20th verse: "Bless Jehovah, ye his angels (messengers or agents—Dr. R. Young,) that excel in strength, that do his commandments, hearkening unto the voice of his word. Bless the Lord, all ye his hosts; ye ministers (servants) of his that do his pleasure; bless the Lord all his works in all places of his dominion; bless the Lord, oh my soul."

Do we not see these agents at work in the Beginning,—employing the power, the spirit, the wisdom and understanding of Jehovah in the formation of man in their own image, physically as well as morally; which they did, as we know from their visits to Abraham and Lot, and Jacob's experience, as well as the men in white on Olivet? They appeared like men, and the moral aspect is proven by the fact that man came to know good and evil as they did. Who, of our opposers, that think that Christ as the God who created man, will dare say that he knew good and evil as we do? Absurd as the idea is, that Christ as God could have once been on probation, it is the natural outgrowth of the doctrines or the legitimate conclusion of that argument.

We now call attention to the fact that a masculine pronoun has been supplied to agree with the assumption that the "word" means Christ: all things were made by him; while the Diaglott reads, "Through it" the word everything was done; and without it not even one thing was done, which has been done. In it was life, and the life was the light of men."

V. 4. "In Him was life." The him here is the same as the him of V. 3, by whom all things were made. "Out of whom are all things." I Cor. viii. 6; and "who is over all, and in all. Eph. iv. 6. There are not two fountains of life according to this.

V. 6 and 7. "There was a man sent from God whose name was John; the same came for a witness, to bear witness of the light, that all through Him might believe (if they would). He (John) was not that light but was sent to bear witness of that light." As the darkness comprehended not the light of God, it became necessary that it should be embodied, so the Word was made flesh, and dwelt amongst us, V. 14, as the light of the world—the manifestation of God in flesh was he of whom John witnessed;—the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world.

V. 10. "He was in the world and the world was (enlightened) through Him, and yet the world knew him not;" in the Diaglott rendering of this passage: with a foot note saying, "No Kosmos, the order, arrangement of things, the human race, where it evidently means the Kosmos of human beings which he came to enlighten and save." •

I thank God I Made the Start.

The start in what? The start where? You say: "The start in the Christian life." Very good. A start in the Christian life is an important step in our life. See here, brother, sister, did you start in harmony with the Bible when you started? If not, please dont say then, "I thank God," for God has nothing to do with sectarian starts. God is not the cause of unscriptural starts. We want to start with "thus saith the Lord." "Thus shall ye say every one to his neighbor, and every one to his brother. What hath the Lord answered? and what hath the Lord spoken?" Jer. xxiii. 35: Jer. vi. 17. "Thus saith the Lord, stand ye in the ways and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, we will not walk therein. I also set a watchman over you, saying, hearken to the sound of the trumpet, but they said we will not hearken."

Paul in 2 Tim. gives this solemn charge to Timothy. "I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom. Preach the word." He then proceeds to tell why he should preach the Word. "For the time will come when men will not endure sound doctrine, but will heap to themselves teachers having itching ears, and shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables."

Now, can we thank God for fables? I cant for one. I started out for once with fables and it has been one of the regrets of my life. I had all those false notions to unlearn and overcome. Never in my life can I thank God for that start. He had nothing to do with it. My first start was with the Methodists, that start was wrong. My second start was with the Campbellites, (or so-called Christians.) Both of those starts were not in harmony with the Bible. There are about one thousand denominations in the world and from the time I made my first start till now, if I had united with all those denominations I would have been out of Christ, an alien from the commonwealth of Israel, without God and without hope in the world. I would now have to learn the Gospel, the good news concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ. I have several times since I united with the "Church of God" heard our brethren, (some of them) in a large crowd, express themselves like this: "I started out in my young days with the Methodists, and later with the Campbellites, and then state that they thank God to-day that they started in the Christian life."

I can say it made me feel nervous, for I could see a smile of satisfaction play over the faces of those sects named, while the brother had made the statement, that he had got a good start with them. I was four years with the Methodists and thirteen with the Campbellites, and I have now to confess that in that seventeen years I never heard one Gospel discourse, and Paul tells us the Gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth.

I would much rather my children would not make any profession, than to start with any of the sects.

I remember, not many years ago, a man said in The Restitution, that he in his early life, had been sprinkled and received into the Methodist Church, and then said, "I thank God for it, it was a help for me to get a start." I can truly say that I want no more starts backwards. Let us be consistent with God's Word.

If the Gospel of Christ is God's power to save men, then we may know sectarianism is not God's power.

There is a definite gospel or there is no gospel at all, and if Christ and the Apostles did not define what the gospel was, then we have no gospel.

Paul says in Acts xx. "Now all you among whom I have gone preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom of God shall see my face no more. Philip preached the Gospel of the Kingdom. Acts viii. 12.

Jesus preached the Kingdom of God. He sent the twelve apostles and also the seventy, and told them to preach the Kingdom of God.

We get no Kingdom of God from the sects. Their gospel is the good news of going to heaven at death, and when death comes they do not want go, so their gospel is not good news, it is bad news. Dont tell me to join any of them is of any benefit whatever.

Let us all earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. This, I for one, will do.

DIED.

At his residence in Rockford, Iowa, at 7:50 p. m., on Wednesday, November 9th, 1892, Levi Lyons, aged 82 years, 6 months, and 18 days.

Deceased was born in Caledonia Co. Vermont, April 22, 1810; was married in Union Co., Ohio, Sept. 1st, 1831, to Mary Burnham, who survives him. He settled in Clayton Co., Iowa, in 1855, and has resided in Rockford since 1872.

Levi Lyons was a type of the plain, old-fashioned, honest man, rigidly upright in all his dealings with all mankind, and had the respect of all who knew him, or all who were capable of appreciating genuine, sterling worth. He had been for a considerable time in failing health, but was slowly recovering from a dangerous illness when, on the first of the present month, he received a wound in the head, the result of a fall. This injury would not under ordinary circumstances, have been serious, yet in his enfeebled state, he was unable to rally from the shock. He was buried from the family residence on Friday, Rev. C. E. Taggart officiating. Of the children residing away, there were present Mrs. Benham and Mrs. Ware, of Minneapolis. Having far outlived the ordinary allotment of three score years and ten, he was ready, and shrank not from the change. A good man has fallen. Peace to his ashes.—Local Press.

"There is that scattereth and yet increaseth." Mark how He has said, "Honor the Lord with thy substance and with the first fruits of all thine increase. So shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine."

Prehistoric Ruins in Texas.

A Texas correspondent writes to one of the scientific departments of the Government of a strangely interesting prehistoric wall discovered on the frontier of the Lone Star State. This marvelous ruin surpasses in interest all the other wonderful remains hitherto found of the people who once inhabited the whole Mexican plateau and attained a high state of civilization. It passes through Milano and has a total length of about 20 miles. It is built of solid masonry 10 to 15 feet high and as many feet thick.

Its height and thickness are thus almost as great as the famous Chinese wall on the north of China. The direction is northeast and southwest. It is for the most part underground and this is one of the curious things that puzzle those wise men who are supposed to know all about prehistoric remains. It is undoubtedly very old. One might suppose it to be the sole foundation of a gigantic fortress which rose above the ground many feet.

The towers and other means of defense which it might have been provided have had time to crumble away in the years that have passed. The long fortress may have been pulled down by the conquering invaders. As the people died out from the land the debris of the old wall would in either case cover its foundation.

The Aztecs probably built this wall. They have left some inscriptions upon it, but since their language is entirely lost, no scholar can ever hope to decipher them. One covers a space of eight feet square. The characters are kindred to Indian inscriptions, but not so closely allied that their mystery can be penetrated. There was undoubtedly a populous village or city in the vicinity, for on a high hill the remains of a mighty temple of worship are found. This was supported by more than 200 lofty pillars.

Some of them are still standing. They were made of clay, which was well burned. This gave them the appearance of stone. In this temple were placed many idols, broken parts of which are preserved. One shaped like an owl is preserved entire. Human sacrifices were made to these, as well as sacrifices of birds, beasts and reptiles. Skulls and bones have been preserved in the clay. Some of these belonged to very large animals.

Some are petrified, and it is thought that those early Aztecs may have understood the art of assisting petrification and thus preserved the bones of their sacrifices. The idols are all curiously marked. Around each pillar small stones are piled up in circles or squares, and inside each circle, underneath the pillar, there is a center or foundation stone, fashioned to represent the godhead. Near the wall there are also furnaces in which the natives smelted iron.

The locality and direction of the wall are not easily accounted for. Perhaps it marks the boundary of certain tribal territory which was exposed to the attacks of the enemy. An enormous amount of labor and material must have been required for its construction if built above the ground on the same gigantic plan as the foundation. Although there were toward a million of people then living in that vicinity, the work must have extended over a considerable period of time.

Unless it was some strategic point it is difficult to understand how but a few thousands could be interested in its construction. An old tradition says that the Aztecs were one of the seven powerful tribes that emerged from the seven caverns in a region called Aztlan, or place of the heron. They wandered away from their fellows after a great confusion of tongues and settled in the region they are known to have inhabited. This tradition may be partly fabulous, but it is sure that the Aztecs settled the country before the 11th or 12th century.

All the tribes lived in peace for a considerable time, until the strong began to encroach upon the territory of the weak. Then a fierce war for supremacy over the whole territory ensued and lasted many years. Under the leadership of their military chiefs the Aztecs obtained control of the territory and established a very enlightened form of government. This was consummated in 1324 or 1325. It is likely that the fortress was built during this period of war.

Military System of Germany.

The accompanying map from The Chicago Tribune of Dec. 6, shows the German empire ready for any emergency, being fortified at all vulnerable points. The map cannot be given, but shows the location of the different forces in the positions for immediate action. The battles will come soon.

The advocates of the German army bill are mistaken if they think that by their specious arguments they can persuade the rank and file of their countrymen that there exists at present, or is likely to exist in the near future, any necessity for strengthening the German army. Statistics are indisputable, and there is an abundance of statistics to show that Germany was never stronger from a military point of view than she is at present, and was never better prepared to defend her own territory and attack the territory of a hostile neighbor. The map which is published in The Tribune today shows where Germany's forces are stationed, and one need not be much of a geographer or military expert to see that on all vulnerable points the Fatherland is amply protected against foreign assaults. Such being the case, then, what need is there, ask the opponents of the bill, of such a drastic measure as the proposed army bill, the inevitable result of which would be to retard the development of the country and render military service distasteful to thousands of young Germans?

It is argued that the peace strength of Germany is inferior to that both of Russia and France, and, if the number of men only be taken into account, that is true. According to a present report Germany maintains during peace 538 battalions of infantry, 465 squadrons of cavalry, and 434 field batteries, whereas France maintains 501 battalions of infantry, 420 squadrons of cavalry, and 480 field batteries, and Russia on her part maintains 1,029 battalions of infantry, 678 squadrons of cavalry, and 405 field batteries. On the other hand, it must be remembered that every German is liable to military service, and, as no substitute is allowed, the army is really a people's army. By law all members of reigning or of former sovereign houses are exempt from military service, but the royal Teutons disdain to avail themselves of this prerogative, and even the greatest of them take part in military exercises, and deem that no greater honor can befall them than to be called upon to lead their countrymen into battle.

From their boyhood all Germans look forward to an army career. Some may be in active service for only a year or so, but all who are not criminals or incapacitated by physical infirmities must hold themselves in readiness to defend their country at a moment's notice. Herein lies one secret of Germany's success in warfare. All her children are soldiers, and, being soldiers, are animated by an esprit de corps and a love of country which is not to be found among those who are only soldiers by profession.

All Germans are liable to military service from the completion of their 17th year to their 45th year—the time being divided between service in the ranks and in those reserves which are maintained for the defense of the country. Service in the ranks generally begins with the 20th and ends with the 39th year, and this period is subdivided into active service in the Landwehr and Ersatz reserves. As a rule German soldiers serve three years in the ranks, four years in the reserve, after which they belong for five years to the first levy of the Landwehr, thence up to their 39th year to the second levy of the Landwehr, whence they are removed to the Landsturm, which is especially organized for the defense of the country and there they remain until their 45th year. To this rule there is one notable exception. The time of active service in the ranks is reduced to one year in the case of young men of education and means on condition that they pass a certain examination and pay all the costs of their equipment and support. An exception is also made in the case of graduates from teachers' seminaries. After receiving instruction in the use of arms for a period of six weeks they may be allowed to join the reserve also. The reason why this privilege is granted is that such graduates are nearly always men of high attainments, and the government very properly considers that they will be able to serve their country better as teachers than as soldiers. Again it is to be remembered that not all those who are enlisted for three years' active service are kept under arms for that time. The government is not slow to reward proficiency, and the result is that a select number of the young soldiers are discharged during the second year of service or the close of the fall maneuvers.

Because the peace strength of Germany has been constantly increasing since the Franco-German war seems to the advocates of the army bill a reason why the army should be strengthened still further. After the Franco-German war the peace strength of Germany was placed up to Dec. 31, 1881, at 405,-659 non-commissioned officers and men, not including officers and one-year volunteers, and this number was increased after April 1, 1882, to 427,274; after April 1, 1887, to 468,409, and after Oct. 1, 1891, to 486,983. If to this number we add 22,000 officers, surgeons, and bureau officials and 7,980 one-year volunteers we have a total strength of 516,000. The number of Frenchmen kept constantly under arms is in excess of this by over 30,000, but only the most bigoted champions of the army bill maintain that this is a valid reason why the peace strength of Germany shall be still further increased. If there is ample evidence that Germany is able to protect herself at all vulnerable points—and the map published in The Tribune today purports to be conclusive on that point—what reason is there for still further strengthening the army and making still heavier the burden of taxation, which is already too oppressive on the German people?

The German land forces consist of twenty army corps, of which Bavaria furnishes two and Wurtemburg and Saxony one each, while the other sixteen are drawn from Prussia and the remaining states. For military purposes the territory of the empire is divided into nineteen corps districts, the Prussian Guard corps recruiting through the whole kingdom of Prussia. By the law of 1870 all parts of Germany except Bavaria are formed into a federation so far as military action is concerned. The Bavarian troops too, though not subject to this law, are pledged to render in war time implicit obedience to the commander of the Federation, and the Bavarian Government is also bound to expend for army purposes the same amount proportionally per capita as is appropriated for the remainder of the imperial army. Of the entire army the Emperor is the head, and he determines each year how many recruits are to be raised, being guided on this point by the demands made by the different divisions of the army.

The training of the troops is thorough, but not severe. The reserves have to take part in two field exercises of eight weeks duration each; the Landwehr men of the first levy take part in two of two weeks each and the Ersatz reserve takes part in three exercises, covering altogether a period of twenty weeks. In regard to the one year volunteers the charge has been often made that the system is the result of class legislation. There is apparently, however, no ground for this charge, and disinterested persons must admit that in granting a privilege of this kind to men of culture and scholarship the government shows that it has the best interests of the people at heart.

The privilege of enlisting as one-year volunteers is granted to young men who have either passed a scientific examination or who have secured certificates from the specially authorized educational institutions attesting their ability to enter the upper classes in the high schools or colleges. The volunteers at their option may serve during this year either in the ranks of troops of their own choice or among the pharmacists of the sanitary corps. Medical students who desire to enter the sanitary corps are bound to serve six months under arms, and after this graduation six months more as non-commissioned or under surgeons. They are subsequently elected military surgeons, and may then be passed into the reserve. All other one-year volunteers are trained to become officers of the reserve or Landwehr. The expenses which one-year volunteers incur are estimated at 1,500 marks in the infantry, and from 1,500 to 2,000 marks in the cavalry and artillery, the increased expense in the two latter branches of the army being caused by the maintenance of troop horses.

The administration of the German army is in the hands of the War Ministries at Berlin, Munich, Dresden, and Stuttgart and of the chiefs of the various departments. In time of peace most of the general staff officers are employed at the great general staff of the army at Berlin, which is divided into a department of military history, four departments for the study of foreign armies and seats of war, and the railway division. With the great general staff are also connected the railway brigade, the survey of the Empire, and the War Academy at Berlin. The survey comprises the trigonometrical, topographical, and cartographical divisions, and at the War Academy officers of exceptional ability are carefully trained for three years in the military and auxiliary sciences, after which they usually obtain positions on the general staff as aides-de-camp or teachers.

The position of the various army corps can be seen from the accompanying map. The Prussian regiments and independent battalions are known by the name of the province from which they are recruited, and by order of the Commander-in-Chief several of them bear the names of Princes and distinguished Generals for the purpose "of honoring and keeping alive for all time the memory of his (the King's) ancestors resting in God, and of such highly merited men as stood by their side in peace and in war, and by their distinguished services acquired just claims to a grateful remembrance by King and fatherland." A few regiments also bear the names of such notable families as have contributed a large number of members to the army.

That each branch of the German army is admirably organized can easily be seen. Of infantry there are 538 battalions, of which 519 are comprised in 173 regiments, while 19 form independent jager battalions. The regiments, though bearing different names, are alike in armament and training, this uniformity extending even to the rifles. The Prussian rifle battalions are mainly composed of professional rangers and foresters, who usually engage for eight years' active service, their aim being to eventually obtain employment in the government forestry service. In order to enter the infantry a soldier must be muscular and healthy and at least 61.8 inches in height. Each battalion has the power to draw from 200 to 230 recruits annually for active service under arms.

The German cavalry consists of ninety-three regiments, or 465 squadrons, and it is worthy of notice that this branch of the army has not been increased since the Franco-German war. Even thus, however, Germany has forty-five squadrons more than France, and, indeed, has more cavalry than any other European power except Russia. The various regiments are divided into light, medium, and heavy cavalry, but are uniform so far as drill, tactics, and employment are concerned. In each regiment there are five squadrons, of which, however, only four take the field, the fifth remaining at home to form the depot. The regiment altogether contains twenty-five officers, 687 men and 792 horses. As training schools for the cavalry must be mentioned the military riding academies at Hanover and Munich and the Equitation Institute at Dresden. The Royal Veterinary School at Berlin provides instruction for veterinary surgeons, and similar training schools have also been established for the benefit of farriers.

In time of peace leaders furnish horses for the cavalry, the animals being bought in Prussia by commissions composed of army officers.

Instruction in the use of artillery is given in two schools, which are maintained for the field and garrison artillery. During the last twenty years the strength of the artillery has been greatly increased, but still it is somewhat inferior to that of the French army, which has in peace forty-six field batteries more than Germany. The German field artillery consists of forty-three regiments, which are formed into twenty brigades, and the total number of batteries since April 1, 1890, is 434, of which forty-six are horse batteries. The foot artillery consists of thirty-one battalions, of which Prussia furnishes twenty-four, Bavaria four, Saxony two, and Wurtemberg one.

The railway troops consist of the Prussian railway brigade and the Bavarian railway battalion, their duty in war time being the construction of new railroads, the repairing of lines destroyed by the enemy, and, when necessary, the destruction of other lines. These troops are thoroughly trained and in time of peace the management of a military railroad running from Berlin to the rifle range at Kummersdorf a distance of about thirty-three miles—is under their charge.

In the armament of the German army no important change has been made of late years. The infantry still carry the rifle model of 1888 and side arms, which can be attached to the rifle and bayonet. Officers and Sergeant-Majors also carry swords and revolvers. The cavalry are armed with steel-tube lances, carbines, and swords, and the field artillery are armed with what are known as the heavy field gun and the field gun proper, the former being used by field artillery and the latter by horse batteries.

One great excellence of the German army is that the soldiers are not regarded as mere machines. Hence their training is not confined to the mere drill, the aim of the officers being to transform raw recruits into perfect men, who will quickly see that it is to their interest to render implicit obedience to their superiors.

The expense of maintaining an army of this magnitude is necessarily great, as will be seen from the fact that the army appropriation in the imperial budget of 1890-'91 amounted to 387,000,000 marks for regular expenses and 206,500,000 marks for contingent expenses. During the following year the Reichstag was asked to increase the amount for regular expenses by 25,000,000 marks and to reduce the amount for contingent expenses by 225,000,000 marks. These figures seem large, but the champions of militarism claim that they cannot be reduced, as Germany, owing to her geographic position, is liable to be forced into war at any time. In reply it may said that at all her vulnerable points Germany is thoroughly guarded against hostile forces today, and, while it might be impracticable just at present to appreciable reduce the peace strength, there is, in the opinion of many Germans who are qualified to speak, no shadow of an excuse for strengthening the army and thus increasing the burden of popular taxation. France and Russia may be able to put more men in the field in case of war, but in these days, when military science is making such gigantic strides, mere numerical strength is not necessarily an advantage, and as long as Germany is practically a nation of soldiers, who are true patriots and exceptionally intelligent, there is no reason why in these "piping times of peace" a larger number of men should be kept under arms than is absolutely necessary. If the growing youth of Germany's neighbors were as intelligent as hers the case might be different. Statistics, however, show that while the percentage of recruits who have little or no schooling is infinitely small in Germany, it amounted in France in 1888 to 9.8 and in Russia in 1880 to 70 per cent. "Moreover," says an authority, "the military efficiency of a country is influenced by the strength of her population, and especially by the number of her young men liable to service, and census statistics show that the population of Germany during the five years beginning Dec. 1, 1885, increased 5.7 per cent, which is not surpassed by any other country. The increase in Italy was 4 per cent, in Austria-Hungary 2.5 per cent, and in France only 1.6 per cent.

In view of all these facts the opposition of the German Radicals and of a large portion of the German people to the proposed army bill is not surprising. They know that the country is amply fortified against invaders; that in case of necessity the whole nation would rise as one man and do battle with the foe, and they insist, therefore, that any further aggrandizement of the military power is entirely uncalled for. The young Emperor thinks otherwise, and, as he is a resolute man who seems bent on having his own way, it is hard to say how the matter will end. To attempt to force a measure of this kind on an unwilling people seems certainly an unwise policy. The Germans love their country and would do battle for it to the death, but patriotism has its limits, and a sure way to render a nation unpatriotic is by fostering militarism and thus hampering commerce and other aids to national prosperity.

Conference Report.

Another record made in God's great memory book of one more gathering in his name. Very sweet and encouraging has this communion of saints been. The social meetings were spiritual, inspiring, restful. The sermons mostly by Brother L. C. Chace, were instructive, helpful words to all. At the business meeting an effort was made to bring about some permanent method of supporting the gospel more liberally, but on the part of the brothers nothing was done. A vote was carried by the sisters to give one-tenth of all monies coming into their hands for gospel work. We expect to see much done by them the coming year, for a good many littles make much. Sisters let us try this method, strictly, honestly, for one year, and see what the result will be.

The evangelists reported 203 sermons, 5002 miles traveled, 18 precious souls have been immersed by our labors, and 27 added to the church. $82.51 was paid out for evangelistic work, $53.40 is still due. All the officers were reelected, as follows. Horace Hammond; President, Wm Moses, Vice-President, Amasa Richardson, Treasurer, M. A. Woodward, Secretary. B. W. and M. A. Woodward, evangelists.

M. A. Woodward, Sec'y.

The Third Quarterly Conference of the Church of God, of Nebraska was held at Fairview, June 2nd to 4th, 1893.

This meeting was attended by a larger number of brethren from a distance than any ever held before in the state. Our hearts were made to rejoice at the interest taken in the work. Rain prevented the holding of any meeting on Saturday night, but on Sunday people came and returned in the rain, and the house was quite well filled.

The business meeting at two o'clock on Saturday, was called to order, with the president in the chair. The minutes of last meeting were read and approved.

The treasurer reports $95.56 received. $90.56 paid to evangelist, balance in treasury $5.00.

The evangelist reported having received $50.50, expenses, $5.06, amount less expenses, $53.00.

Sermons preached in this quarter, 30, additions to the One Faith, 13, miles traveled by rail and team, 513. One church organized at Tracr, Kan. with 11 members, Bro. Wm. Adams Elder.

Brother Prime visited one point, that of Fair Haven, Kansas. Was absent 3 days, preached one sermon, and received $15.00. He thinks no other evangelist ever made a report just like the above.

Letters of greeting were received from Brother J. L. Herriman, of Ainsworth, Neb. and Brother A. J. Eychaner, of Iowa. The latter was received too late to be read at the meeting.

On motion Brother Frissle, the Annual Conference is to be held in the Park at Cambridge, Neb., commencing Sept. 15th. carried.

Brethren, commence at once to make arrangements to attend this meeting. Cambridge is a convenient location, and easily reached, and we expect over 100 brethren to tent on the grounds all through the meeting. Further notice will be given in due time.

After the president had appointed several committees to perfect arrangements for the annual conference the meeting adjourned.

J. J. Cady, Sec'y.

Another new cannon has just been invented in Germany which is expected to revolutionize the artillery of Europe. Krupp, it is reported, has offered 3,000,000 marks for the exclusive right to the invention, and the inventor, Herr Ehrhardt, has refused the offer. He proposes to establish a plant for his own for turning out his guns. It will be the most rapid firing cannon in the world, so far.

Whatever pertains to true religion, comes to us while humbled under a sense of our spiritual poverty.

An Accomplished Fact.

The new service on the Nickel Plate Road went into effect on Sunday, May 28th. Three trains are now run in each direction daily, leaving Buffalo going west at 5:30 A. M., 12:05 noon, and 11:25 P. M., and leaving Chicago for the East at 7:35 A. M., 2:30 P. M., and 9:30 P. M. No change of sleeping cars between New York, Boston and Chicago in either direction. Superb Dining Cars are a feature of the new service.

GLEANINGS.

Duty is the path that all may tread.

The way to love God more is to try to help him more.

A man's heart must either be broken for sin, or by sin.

It takes dark days to show us that we do really trust in God.

God's power to assist us is circumscribable by our faith in him.

Faith knows, and is just as sure of a thing before it gets it as afterward.

Take Christ as your guide. He will lead you into a new haven—the haven of rest.

When we pray in accordance with the will of God, and believe what we pray for, it is so.

To be ignorant of God's character as manifested in his law, is to be ignorant of his righteousness.

A spiritual mind is a much safer guide although not always able to give a reason, than one purely logical.

Often when we think we have the mind of Christ, we are simply walking in the sparks of our own kindling.

Like a beautiful flower, full of color, but without scent, are the fine but fruitless words of him who does not act accordingly.

A good many people to-day are like Lot, they just want enough religion to save them. They make religion a fire escape.

When the word of God and faith come together, a miracle is performed, as in the case of Moses at the rock of Horeb- Ex. xvii. 6.

Christ, manifested in us, is God's living illustration of himself to the world to-day, that is, when we are wholly imbued by his Spirit.

What a difference there is between the kind of headache people have on rainy Sundays and the kind they have when the circus is in town.

Do not be afraid of the Bible. Its triumphs are certain. The owls may hoot at the rising sun, but, the sunshine creeps on notwithstanding.

Let the day have a blessed baptism by giving your first waking thoughts unto the bosom of God. The first hour of the morning is the rudder of the day.

It does not require great learning to be a Christian and to be convinced of the truth of the Bible. It requires an honest heart and a willingness to obey God.

The promises of God span the path of the follower of Christ like a bow of hope. In trial they are his encouragement, in weakness they become his strength.

The literary beauty of the Bible has won it many admirers, but it is its divine authority which makes it what it is. It demands belief and obedience, and not mere admiration.

Why should one be content with being half a Christian, devoted partly to God and partly to the world? He hath bought, hath redeemed the whole, and let him take the purchase of his blood.

No man or woman, even of the humblest sort, can be strong and pure and good, without the world being better for it—without somebody being helped and comforted by the very existence of that good.

Believe your beliefs, and doubt your doubts, but do not make the fatal mistake of doubting your beliefs and believing your doubts. "Give me your beliefs and not your doubts, as I have enough doubts of my own."

We too often forget God in our little troubles; a thorough trust in him and we should not repine, as is too often the case; but over each difficulty surmounted feel the stronger and more ready to cope with the next.

The stars never change for astrologers or astronomers. They roll calmly above storms and above opinions. So man's nature does not vary for circumstances or conflicting views, but still wants God above, and fellow-man below.

Remember, that he is indeed the wisest and the happiest man who, by constant attention of thought discovers the greatest opportunity of doing good, and with ardent and animated resolution breaks through every opposition, that he may improve these opportunities.

The Whys and Wherefores.

Let us take up the whys and wherefores,
The questions doubts and fears,
That are [illegible]
Like a [illegible]

Let us take up and be [illegible]
All we can [illegible]
And [illegible]
In our Heavenly Father's love.

'Tis a proof of his own great [illegible]
That we, [illegible]
Cannot always [illegible]
He reads [illegible] from the [illegible]

When we stand with [illegible]
All we who are [illegible]
For all [illegible]
He alone [illegible]

Selected.

At the Bottom of the [illegible]

At the depth of about [illegible] feet waves are not felt. The temperature is the same, varying only a trifle from the [illegible] to the burning [illegible] at the equator. A mile down the water has a pressure of over a ton to the square inch. If a box six feet wide were filled with sea water and allowed to evaporate under the sun, there would be two inches of salt left on the bottom. Taking the average depth of the ocean to be three miles, there would be a pure layer of salt 230 feet thick on the bed of the Atlantic. The water is colder at the bottom than at the surface. In many bays on the coast of Norway the water often freezes at the bottom before it does above.

Waves are very deceptive. To look at them in a storm one would think the water traveled. The water stays in the same place, but the motion goes on. Sometimes in storms these waves are forty feet high and travel fifty miles an hour — more than twice as fast as the swiftest steamship. The distance from valley to valley is generally fifteen times the height, hence a wave five feet high will extend over seventy-five feet of water. The force of the sea dashing on the Bell Rock is said to be seventeen tons for each square yard.

Evaporation is a wonderful power in drawing the water from the sea. Every year a layer of the entire sea, fourteen feet thick, is taken up into the clouds. The winds bear their burdens into the land, and the water comes down in rain upon the fields, to flow back at last through rivers.

The depth of the sea presents an interesting problem. If the Atlantic were lowered for 6,564 feet, the distance from shore to shore would be half as great, or 1,500 miles. If lowered a little more than three miles, say 19,680 feet, there would be a road of dry land from Newfoundland to Ireland.

This is the plain on which the great Atlantic cable was laid. The Mediterranean is comparatively shallow. A drying up of 660 feet would leave three different seas, and Africa would be joined with Italy.

The British Channel is more like a pond, which accounts for its choppy waves. It has been found difficult to get the correct soundings of the Atlantic. A midshipman of the navy overcame the difficulty, and a shot weighing thirty pounds carried down the line. A hole is bored through the sinker, through which a rod of iron is passed, moving easily back and forth. In the end of a bar a cup is dug out and the inside coated with lard. The bar is made fast to the line and a sling holds the shot on. When the bar, which extends below the ball, touches the earth, the sling unhooks and the shot slides off. The lard in the end of the bar holds some of the sand, or whatever may be on the bottom, and a drop shuts over the cup to keep the sand in. When the ground is reached a shock is felt, as if an electric current had passed through the line. Ocean.

Endure to the End.

The word rendered endure signifies to stand one's ground, stand firm, permanent; to stay or abide when others have departed. The only ground of assurance that we shall receive the crown of glory in the coming kingdom is that we endure. Paul declares, "We are made partakers of Christ if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end." If we continue in the faith, grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel, then will Christ present us holy and unblamable and unreprovable in his sight. Christ warns us by calling our attention to Lot's wife. She [illegible] and never reached the place of safety. "He that looketh back is not fit for the kingdom of God."

[illegible] stand firm. Through all [illegible] of life; [illegible] and [illegible] through all the [illegible] will be [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] he was asked to play [illegible] which was completed [illegible] the Duke, "play a retreat." "Na, na," cried the Scotchman, "I never learned to play a retreat." If every professed Christian would say that and carry out these principles in his life, how different [illegible] be the church of Christ. In place of many inglorious defeats and the trailing in the dust of the banner of Christ's cause, and the rejoicing of the hosts of Satan, there would be the shout of victory in the camp of the saints and the [illegible] of the Lord would be many. Never learn to play a retreat. Be [illegible]. Endure, and victory will come as surely as God has spoken. "The saints in all this glorious war shall conquer though they die." He that stands to his post of duty and is loyal to the divine government, obedient to all the commands of God; he that is true to the sacred trust committed to him, will have not only the satisfaction of an approving conscience but will also secure to him the approbation of God and will hear it said at the end of time, "Well done."

Remember that endurance will not always be called for. The battle will not always rage. The hosts of sin will not forever exist. There will come a day of eternal triumph, and all is calculated to call for a giving up, a going back, a retreat, will be among the things that were. And we are almost there. Soon the last battle will be fought. Have no thoughts of running away from duty here. Remain just where God has placed you, holding up the standard of the cross, holding forth the word of life, keeping the faith, bearing the cross through [illegible] and pain. Never learn to play a retreat. Then with the Apostle Paul you will be able to say, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." And surely a crown is yours.—Lester in Crisis.

The Lord's Appointment.

I say it over and over, and yet again to-day,
It rests my heart as surely as it did yesterday;
It is the Lord's appointment;
Whatever my work may be,
I am sure in my heart of hearts
He has ordered it for me.

I must say it over and over, and yet again to-day,
For my work is so much different from yesterday;
It is the Lord's appointment,
It quiets my restless will
Like a voice of tender rebuke,
And my heart and will are still.

I will say it over and over, this and every day,
Whatsoever the Master orders, come what may;
It is the Lord's appointment,
For only He can see
What is wisest and best and right,
What is truly good for me.

The Remnant of Israel.

"The remnant shall return, even the remnant of Jacob, unto the mighty God." Isa. x. 21

The words Jacob and Israel are used interchangeably in the Bible, and applied to the same people. When Jacob, the son of Isaac, came out of Padanaram to Bethel, God appeared to him again, and blessed him, and said. "Thy name is Jacob: thy name shall not be called any more Jacob, but Israel shall be thy name; and he called his name Israel." Gen. xxxv. 10; xxxii. 28. Hence his posterity are spoken of as "the children of Israel," the "house of Israel," the "house of Jacob," the "children of Jacob," etc. When these terms are used the whole nation, or the twelve tribes are included. At the revolt of the ten tribes under the reign of Rehoboam, the nation was divided into two kingdoms, afterwards known as "Israel" and "Judah." The ten tribes ceased from being a nation, and were carried away by Shalmaneser to Assyria, about 720 B. C.; and the two tribes - Judah and Benjamin—were carried captive to Babylon about 580 B. C., by Nebuchadnezzar, and returned to their own land 70 years afterwards, but have been subject to Gentile rule ever since.

The word "Jacob" and "Israel," in the Scriptures, always refer to the old patriarch, or his posterity. It is a very common thing, however, to hear the term "Israel" applied to the Christian Church, as though it was scripturally correct. It is true that all the sons of Jacob are not "Israelites indeed;" nor "are they all Israel, which are of Israel," but that is no warrant for Gentiles to usurp the name, and apply it to themselves. The exalted Jesus sent by John to the congregations at Smyrna and Philadelphia, about some of them claiming to be Jews—he says, "I know the blasphemy of them which say they are Jews, and are not, but are the synagogue of Satan," Rev. ii. 9; iii. 9. It is a very common thing for some professing Christians to quote what the apostle Paul wrote to the Romans, to prove that they themselves now are God's spiritual Israel—"He is not a Jew who is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision, which is outward in the flesh: but he is a Jew, which is one inwardly," etc. Rom. ii. 28, 29. Paul, by using this language, did not say, as many do, that God had cast away his people. For otherwise. The apostle was proud of his nationality. He said, "I am verily a man, a Jew, born in Tarsus, in Cilicia" Acts xxi. 39; xxii. 3; "I also am an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin;" Rom. xi. 1; "circumcised the eighth day, of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, an Hebrew of the Hebrews," Phil. iii. 5. And in answer to the question, "What advantage then hath the Jew?" he says, "Much every way: chiefly, because that unto them were committed the oracles of God," Rom. iii. 1, 2; "Who are Israelites; to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises; whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God be praised into the ages. Amen." Rom. ix. 4, 5. "God hath not cast away his people which he foreknew." Elijah thought that he alone was left in Israel as a servant of God; but the Lord informed him that there were seven thousand men in Israel who were not idolaters, 1 Kings xix. 10, 14, 18; Rom. xi. 2-4. These composed the righteous remnant of that time found among the ten tribes. The nations were carried away captive to Assyria. The two-tribed nation—Judah and Benjamin, with the sons of Levi continued in possession of the land for awhile longer, "because the Lord had compassion on his people, and on his dwelling-place; but they mocked the messengers of God, and despised his words, and misused his prophets, until the wrath of the Lord arose against his people, till there was no remedy." 2 Chron. xxxvi. 15, 16. Then the king Nebuchadnezzar came against Jerusalem, slew many of the people, burnt the temple, and the palaces of the city, and broke down the walls of Jerusalem, and those who escaped from the sword were carried captive to Babylon, with the vessels and treasures of the house of the Lord, of the king, and of his princes. Yet there was a remnant—a godly seed who feared the Lord, and kept his commandments, amidst the general departure from his law. We read of Isaiah, Jeremiah, Daniel, the three Hebrew captives who refused to worship the golden image, etc. And of others who after the seventy years captivity in Babylon, returned with such men as Zerubbabel, Joshua, Haggai, Zechariah, Ezra, and Nehemiah, to Jerusalem, cured of their idolatry, and resolved to serve the Lord their God. Yet within one hundred years of the return from Babylon, we find Malachi, the last of the prophets, complaining of the sons of Levi, having departed out of the way, and by their evil practices causing many to stumble at the law. Still there was a remnant that "feared the Lord, and thought upon his name," whom the Lord promised to remember in that day when he makes up his jewels. Mal. iii. 16-18. But unto those who fear the Lord, the Sun of righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings; and they shall tread down the wicked, for they shall be ashes under their feet in that day. Chap. iv. 1-3.

When Jesus was born there were some who "looked for redemption in Jerusalem," and were "waiting for the consolation of Israel," Luke ii. 25, 38 Among this remnant were Zacharias the priest and Elizabeth his wife, the parents of John the Baptist, and Mary the mother of Jesus, and the shepherds to whom the angel announced his birth; also old Simeon, and Anna, a prophetess, and others of similar character. When both John and Jesus were about thirty years of age, God sent them with a message to the children of Israel, proclaiming the near approach of the kingdom of heaven, and calling upon them to repent, and believe the good news. Those who believed the message were immersed in water for the forgiveness of their sins, and were exhorted to bring forth fruits meet for repentance. It is recorded that many came to John's baptism, and confessed their sins; also that multitudes followed Jesus, and heard him gladly; but it was more for present benefit, than for that which endured unto everlasting life. When he showed them the true nature of repentance, and what they must do in order to obtain the kingdom of God, and the life of the coming age, "many of his disciples went back, and walked no more with him." John vi. 66. The parable of the fig tree in Luke xiii. 6, well illustrates the condition of the nation when Jesus appeared amongst them. For three years he sought fruit, but found none. The owner said, cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground." But the vine-dresser said, "Lord, let it alone this year also, till I shall dig about it, and manure it; and perhaps it may bear fruit: and if not, then after that thou mayest cut it down." The parable of the vineyard of Isa. v. 1-7, and Matt. xxi. 33 also forcibly sets forth the character of the people, and the longsuffering, kindness and mercy of Jehovah towards them. "The vineyard of the Lord of hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah his pleasant plant: and he looked for judgment, but behold oppression; for righteousness, but behold a cry." The culmination of wickedness was reached in the rejection and murder of their own Messiah. The traditions of men had so blinded their minds that they knew not the time of their visitation, nor the things which were for their peace. Luke xix. 41-44. Messiah would have gathered them under his protection, even as a hen her brood under her wings, but they would not. Therefore their house was left desolate until they shall acknowledge him as the Blessed One of Jehovah. Luke xiii. 34, 35. And even after they had crucified their King, mercy still lingered, and forgiveness was offered to them, if they only would repent, and be immersed into his name, with the assurance that God would send again Jesus the Christ at the times of restitution of all things. Acts ii. 38; iii. 19, 20. Some accepted the terms, but the nation refused. Then salvation was offered to the Gentiles, in order to take out of them a people for his name. Acts xv. 14-18. The apostle Paul gives a true description of the Jewish character, when he says, "who killed the Lord Jesus, and their own prophets, and have persecuted us; and they please not God, and are contrary to all men: forbidding us to speak to the Gentiles that they might be saved, to fill up their sins alway: for the wrath is come upon them to the uttermost," 1 Thess. ii. 15, 16.

"Israel (as a nation) hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election (remnant) hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded." Rom. xi. 7. The royalty of God's kingdom was promised to Israel on condition of obedience, Exod. xix. 5-6. They promised obedience, but very soon broke the covenant they had made with their God. They have always been a disobedient and stubborn people. But have they stumbled that they should fall forever? By no means. Through their fall salvation came to the Gentiles. "Now if the fall of them be the riches of the world, and the diminishing or loss of them the riches of the Gentiles, how much more their fulness?" "For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead?" "Behold therefore the goodness and severity of God: on them which fell, severity; but toward thee, goodness, if thou continue in his goodness; otherwise thou also shall be cut off. And they also, if they abide not still in unbelief, shall be grafted in: for God is able to graft them in again." "For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits; that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, (Isa. lix. 20). There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins." Rom. xi. 11. 12; 15, 22, 23, 25-27. Is Paul writing about the nation of Israel his kinsmen according to the flesh, or about the church, as some ignorantly believe? Certainly, of fleshly Israel; for he says, "as touching the election, they are beloved for the fathers' sakes. For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance," or change of purpose.

All the descendents of Jacob have not been worthy of their parentage, nor faithful to the God of their fathers. Only a remnant have served him, in all ages. And so it will be to the end, or "the times of restitution," spoken of by the prophets of Israel. That such a restitution is promised is certain. Moses foretold this, even before they entered into the promised land. He told them of the blessings they would enjoy in the land while obedient, Deut. xxviii. 1-14; Lev. xxvi. 3-12; and of the curses which would come upon them, both in the land and out of it, if disobedient. Deut. xxviii. 15-68; Lev. xxvi. 12-39. But Moses foretold also, that after the blessing and curse had come upon them, that if they confess their sin, and return unto the Lord, and obey his voice, he will turn their captivity, and gather them from the nations; then the Lord will remember his covenant with the fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and will also remember the land. Deut. xxx. 1-6; Lev. xxvi. 40-46. This prophecy is yet unfulfilled; but Isaiah confirms it when he says, "Though thy people Israel be as the sand of the sea, yet (only) a remnant shall return." Isa. x. 22; and that it is yet future is evident from Isa. xi. 11, where it is said "that the Lord will set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people which shall be left," etc. "In Mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance, as the Lord hath said, and in the remnant whom the Lord shall call." Joel ii. 32. Then in the following chapter the return of Judah and Jerusalem from captivity is mentioned, and the gathering of all nations at that time unto the valley of Jehoshaphat, that Jehovah may plead with them there for his people and his heritage Israel. In Micah iv. 7, Jehovah says, "I will make her that halted a remnant, and her that was cast far off a strong nation; and the Lord shall reign over them in Mount Zion, from henceforth, even for ever." The remnant here spoken of is not the one body, the church, composed of believing Jews and Gentiles, as some believe and teach; for the church in union with Christ the head, will rule over Israel and the nations. The remnant will be composed of those who will look upon him whom they pierced, and who will mourn for him as for an only son. See Zech. xii. 9-14 They will discover that Jesus was their Messiah, who was wounded in the house of his friends, and manifest deep repentance. But these will be persecuted by their brethren. "Hear the word of the Lord, ye that tremble at his word; your brethren that hated you, that cast you out for my name's sake, said, Let the Lord be glorified: but he shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed." Isa. lxvi. 5. Then will the remnant say of him when he appears—"This is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation." Isa. xxv. 9. There are those Jews spoken of in Dan. xi. 35 and xii. 10, who will be tried, and purged, and made white, at the time of the end. Jehovah says that two-thirds of those in the land shall be cut off and die; "and I will bring the third part through the fire, and will refine them as silver is refined, and will try them as gold is tried: they shall call on my name, and I will hear them: I will say, It is my people; and they shall say, The Lord is my God." Zech. xiii. 8, 9. The priesthood—the sons of Levi will also be purified and refined, as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness." Mal. iii. 3. The people will serve the Lord with one consent in a pure language; bring a pure offering; be repentant for past transgressions; the proud will be taken away; and an afflicted and poor people who trust in the name of the Lord will be left. "The remnant of Israel shall not do iniquity, nor speak lies," etc. Zeph. iii. 9-13. Neither Judah nor Israel will be allowed to inherit the land until they repent, and seek the Lord. Jer. iii. 12-19; Hoshea v. 15; vi. 1-3; iii. 4, 5; xiv; Ezek. xx. 33-38. The remnant of the nation will be a righteous people." Their seed shall be known among the Gentiles, and their offspring among the people; all that see them shall acknowledge them, that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed." Isa. lxi. 9. "Thy people also shall be all righteous; they shall inherit the land for ever." Is. 21.

We have in the apocalypse a representation, in symbol, of the sealing of 144,000 of the tribes of Israel. There seems to be a residue or remnant of Israel, who will be saved during the coming time of trouble. See Dan. xii. 1. "Alas! for that day is great, so that none is like it, it is even the time of Jacob's trouble; but he shall be saved out of it." Jer. xxx. 7. It is only the sealed ones those of Daniel's people who shall be found written in the book the remnant, that will be delivered. When Jerusalem was doomed to destruction by the Lord, in Ezekiel's time, the prophet heard the order, "that a mark be set upon the foreheads of the men that sigh and cry for all the abominations that are done in the midst thereof." These constituted the remnant of that day, and were not to be slain with the wicked. Ezek. ix. So in the coming day of the Lord, the righteous, whether Jew or Gentile, will not perish with the wicked.

"God hath not cast away his people whom he foreknew." We have seen from the prophetic word, that Jehovah will remember the covenant he made with the fathers of Israel, concerning their posterity, and the land. "They are beloved for the fathers' sakes." "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" Rom. xi. 33.

A Lesson in Giving.

A Methodist minister says that in one of his charges a good man regularly gave, every Sabbath, five dollars for the support of the church. A poor widow was also a member of the same church, who supported herself and six children by washing. She was as regular as the rich man in making her offering of five cents per week, which was all she could spare from her scant earnings. One day the rich man came to the minister and said that the poor women ought not to pay anything, and that he would pay the five cents for her every week. The pastor called to tell her of the offer, which he did in a considerate manner. Tears came to the woman's eyes as she replied: "Do they want to take from me the comfort I experience in giving to the Lord? Think how much I owe to him! My health is good, my children keep well, and I receive so many blessings that I feel I could not live if I did not make my little offering to Jesus each week." How many young men there are who know nothing of the privilege of regularly giving something to the Lord's work, because they have never tried it!—The Treasury.

Rowland Hill used to say that his aim in every sermon was "to make a short and lusty call to sinners, to quicken saints, and to be a blessing to all." It would be difficult to put more into fewer words, or better to express the true purpose of the gospel ministry.

Creed and Life.

During our Lord's sojourn here on earth there were many of His hearers who knew all about the Kingdom: where it was to be established, its extent, its glory, its King their own Messiah. Very likely they could have quoted passage after passage from their own prophets and singers to support their beliefs as to its location, its center, and the sway it was to exercise over all other nations; and, as they quoted, their hearts would leap with joy to think of the splendid recompense for all their servitude and the cruelties connected therewith.

But we do not read much of inward searching of heart to see if they were fit to inherit this Kingdom. "We are the children of Abraham, and heirs of promises made to the fathers. The Kingdom is ours by right; and when the time comes we shall enter therein." So spoke many, we may be certain, besides the self-righteous Scribes and Pharisees.

And in our own time we have to guard against similar error; for we may come to think (or seem to think) that knowledge will usher us into that Kingdom which cannot be moved; that intellectual perceptions will confer on men the right to eat of the Tree of Life which is in the Paradise of God; that a correct understanding of the revealed purpose of God will give to men the crown of life; that the ability to refer at once to a long list of passages directly affirming the mortality of man, for example, will be accepted for righteousness; that the Scripturalness of the doctrines professed will excuse an unholy life; that, in short, if the head be right, the heart may be filled with anger, pride, jealousy, or anything you please. For in the same individual there may be clear judgment, a logical Biblically-informed mind, and an unchanged stony heart that produces no fruits of the Spirit; and how can they be produced if the Spirit be absent?

Though a creed should consist of ten thousand propositions, and every one of them true, yet these may all be accepted by men who are aware of no change in their hearts, who cannot point to any transformation—to any passage from self to God; but men who, nevertheless, call themselves Christians because they have joined a particular church and thereby expressed their acceptance of its creed. Their names are on its roll; their subscriptions are entered in its books; and their pews are regularly and decorously filled. What more can be expected?

It is, alas, the old and ever-new story of a pure creed and an unsanctified life. It is a plentitude of the knowledge that puffs up and a scarcity of the love that builds up. It is the divorce of faith and works. It is the endeavor to be fashionable and religious at the same time. It is an attempt to pass muster as a Christian without a knowledge of self and sin, and the renunciation of the world. It seeks to keep Christ in sight, but at a distance—not close at hand, for it would ofttimes be exceedingly inconvenient to take Him with them in all their ways, to their theatres and balls and parties. And the end of all such will be utter disappointment.

"Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand," was the startling cry that rang through Palestine at the opening of our Lord's ministry. Why repent because the Kingdom of Heaven was at hand? What is the connecting idea? Repentance was enjoined and demanded because the Kingdom could not be entered by all and sundry (even of the choosen race) irrespective of character. "Forsake your sins if ye would enter the Kingdom. See its purity and your own defilment. With your guilt clinging to you, an entrance can never be to such as you. Wrath is coming on the sinner; so yield now to God; wash away your sins in Jordan, and rise to the life of righteousness, walking therein until by His grace you reach the everlasting Kingdom. Repent, therefore, ere it be too late, ere your doom is fixed, and escape impossible."

"Repent, repent," is still the cry! Leave your sins, whatever they are, for they are dragging you down to the fires of Gehenna, and you cannot flee from the wrath of the Lamb when there. The Kingdom comes; but you dare not, you cannot, enter it, for you are laden with sin; that heart is a sink of iniquity. They that are to see the King in His beauty are clad in royal robes, white and shining; but yours are tattered and travel-stained and filthy; you cannot enter as you are, and you know it. But, polluted though you be, there is pardon and cleansing even for you. Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool, for

"There is a fountain filled with blood
Drawn from Immanuel's veins,
And sinners, plunged beneath that flood,
Lose all their guilty stains;"

and He provides the robes of righteousness. He has stood in your room, and borne your sins in His own body on to the tree. God is waiting to pardon you for His own dear Son's sake, to cleanse and justify you, to keep and sanctify you from day to day if you will give Him your heart that He may dwell there, working in you both to will and to do what He knows to be best; and then the Kingdom, with its glory, honor, and incorruptibility!—J. Mill in Messenger.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

In Season.

A lady once, writing a letter to a young naval officer who was almost a stranger, thought, "Shall I close this as anybody would, or shall I say a word for My Master?" and, lifting up her heart for a moment, she wrote, telling him that his constant change of scene and place was an apt illustration of the words, "Here we have no continuing city," and asked if he could say, "I seek one to come." In trembling she folded it, and sent it off. Back came the answer: "Thank you so much for those kind words. My parents are dead, I am an orphan, and no one has spoken to me like that since my mother died long years ago." The arrow shot at a venture, hit home, and the young man shortly after rejoiced in the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of peace. Christians, how often do we close a letter "as anybody would," when we might say a word for Jesus?—Christian Witness.

A good religious paper has become a necessity in these days. A Christian family that receives the secular papers, without a church paper as an antedote and corrective, is in great peril of being carried away with the drift of sensationalism and skepticism. The hope of the nation lies in the pulpit and religious press. Every Christian must have the preaching of the gospel, and he needs a church paper to drive out the poison which the sensational secular paper is constantly disseminating. A good religious paper is an angel of light to the home that appreciates it.—Lutheran World.

Before any one can be successful in the Lord's work, he must, in the words of Paul, present his body "a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to the Lord." That is a gift, each one owes to the Lord, and it is one that is not without reward. Faithful consecration has the promise of a "hundred fold in this life and in the world to come, life everlasting."

To talk truth and believe what you say, is the best eloquence a man can have.

ONE great object of the Christian should be to prevent the introduction of sinful thoughts;—and to expel those which have intruded without the consent of the will.

IF God be no respecter of persons, how can he save some without baptism, when he prescribes obedience to all in the commission, and his Son has declared that the Scripture cannot be broken?

BULWER, the novelist, once wrote to a friend in Boston that he had closed his career as a writer of fiction:—was gloomy and unhappy, having exhausted the powers of life chasing pleasure where it was not to be found. Readers of fiction take warning.

WE have the plain testimony that man was made of the dust of the ground, and that a living man is a living soul, in Gen. ii. 7. and 1 Cor. xv. 45-49. In addition to this we have the positive testimony that the spirit of man is not a living soul, but the CAUSE of man's becoming a living soul, and causing him to remain a living soul as long as it is retained. Gen. ii. 7 and Gen. vii. 22.

READER, "does the Spirit's Word beget people to a hope of what he has never promised?" When it begets and quickens, does it leave them in disobedience? We are thinking of some far away as we pen these questions; some who know much of the truth, so much of the truth, indeed that they have admitted its claim upon them, but have not yielded. Oh, loved ones, we may never see you again, but God heard that promise you made. Only those who are ready go in.

WE were in a meeting recently where "feeling" seemed to stand on the very pinnacle of Christian character, in their estimation. They thanked God because they were happy, and they were happy because they felt that their sins were forgiven just for the asking, and without reference to the Gospel of the Kingdom of God and Name of Jesus Christ. Oh, but this is counterfeit virtue, and a deception. It is next to impossible to show people what the righteousness of God is; but will try once more, by saying, that God has defined on what conditions he will reckon us righteous; and we solemnly aver that feelings are no part of his plan. If men would search out the conditions imposed by God and from the heart obey them, they could let their feelings take care of themselves. If they would joyfully accept what is graciously offered, they would rejoice in hope evermore.

The Era of Peace.

As sure as that God has spoken, the time shall come when men shall learn war no more. Some think this will never be, and point to the fact that the art of killing is more and more studied; and the greatest killers are the most highly honored. Others think that universal and lasting peace will obtain;—and that the religious machinery now in operation will achieve that long looked for and to be desired end. Alas, they reckon without the Great Disposer of human events. Strange that those who hold the Oracles of God in their hand do not get some of its revelations into their heads, and so be apprised that this preparation for war will go on till the backbone of human governments is broken in a conflict that will entitle it to be called "the battle of God Almighty." As the smoke of this battle clears away nothing will be seen to oppose the setting up of God's King upon the holy hill of Zion.

What a glorious era that will inaugurate. In order to appreciate it, go over the history of the past written with blood; count, if you can, the millions who have found their last resting place on gory battle plains. Think of the great drops of anguish that have gushed from affectionate hearts; and hearken to the wail of the widows and orphans that come down through the ages to our own times, and then the advent of the Prince of Peace will be looked forward to with intense interest. Glorious announcement from the court of heaven, "They shall learn war no more," but this is after and results from a battle in which the Prince of Peace takes a hand—so decisive that sin in the flesh dares not risk another battle for a thousand years. If we heed the sure word of prophecy, we shall be able to trace the directing hand of God in current events, so be prepared to meet the Prince when he comes to organize his cabinet for an offensive campaign. And then, too, it will ever be ours to be at peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, and have the peace of God which passeth understanding, the peace which is a fruit of the Spirt, peace in believing.

The Woman's Seed. No. 13.

Col. i. 15, 16, 17, 18 and parallel passages are frequently, and with much confidence referred to as strong proof of the pre-existence of Christ. We are obliged to say they furnish no direct testimony to that effect; at most only inferential testimony is furnished by them. "The proper translation of the Greek particles en and dia will harmonize these passages with all the Scriptures," as well as with the history, character, and prophecies concerning Jesus also. En ought to be rendered "in respect to," instead of "by;" and "dia" will give a better and truer sense if rendered, "because of" instead of "by." The passage would then read, "For in respect to him all the things were created, those in heavens, and those on the earth, whether thrones or dominions, or principalities or powers, (authorities) all things were created (dia) because of him and for him."

Parkhurst says it denotes a cause of almost any kind; . . . . The final or impulsive cause, "For," "on account of;" "by reason of;" "In respect of;" "with regard to;" so that the harmony of the Scriptures does not require any straining of parts; and while it is true that other meanings are given by lexicographers which exonerate the translators from blame, inasmuch as they selected the terms which harmonize with their ideas of the truth; at the same time we cannot accept their rendering, because by God's favor we know his grand purpose in creation and redemption, they did not. We know man's nature and destiny, they did not, and therefore did not, could not, see how their renderings of these passages clashed with those foundation truths.

The Diaglott rendering of the passage is as follows, v. 15, "He is a likeness of the invisible God,—First-born of all creation; because in him were created all things,—those in the heavens and those on the earth; the visible and invisible, whether thrones, or lordships, or governments, or authorities; all things have been created through him and for him; [we showed BY whom in our last] and he precedes all things, and in him all things have been permanently placed. He is also the Head of the Body of the congregation; who is the Beginning,—the First-born from the dead, that he might become pre-eminent among all; because in him it was thought that the whole fulness should dwell; and through him to reconcile all things for him, having made peace by means of the blood of his cross, whether the things on the earth or the things in the heavens." "The inference drawn by those not informed relative to the two creations will necessarily appear as clear as it was to the translators of the common version; but to those who understand that two creations are clearly recognized in God's revealed purpose, and that the first Adam stands at the head of the first creation; and the second or spiritual Adam stands at the head of the second or new creation, the inference is wholly inadmissable." Because First, what is said of Jesus in this relates to the Body of his flesh, see vs. 20, 22; and could not have been born before Adam was created; and 1 Cor. xv. 46, clearly shows that the natural preceded the spiritual.

Secondly, "because it involves the absurdity that the Spirit Son of God was not only born,—but involves generation and birth in the throne of the Eternal," or else, that he was only a created Son; which would place him on a level with myriads of other sons; but turn to Heb. i. 4. and then tell us to which of them he ever said, "This day have I begotten thee." We challenge criticism when we say the Bible recognizes no births, natural or spiritual before the conception and birth of Cain. Gen. iv. 1.

Thirdly, Because he who is spoken of as the first-born is Christ Jesus the Anointed Jesus; which all should know only applies to him after his anointing at his baptism. We offer Acts iv. 27. and Acts x. 38. as absolute proof that God made a Christ of the holy child Jesus, born of Mary at Bethlehem: and by his own confession before Pilate we have positive proof that he was not only a Christ, but the Christ of Moses and the prophets, the Christ of God. If the Holy child Jesus became the Anointed of God, by virtue of his anointing at his baptism as clearly taught Acts x.37, 38, there was no Christ before that: we mean that The Christ did not exist before Jesus was Christed.

Fourthly, Because the idea we combat involves the absurdity of a pre-existent mother, which of itself would make the Son the second creature. To try to avoid this absurdity, the claim has been set up, that, "begotten, birth, born, etc., are not proper terms to express the origin of the Son of God." We squarely deny this assertion, because the Spirit uses them for this purpose: let those who object believe these words of the Spirit and there will be no further contention, because they are infallibly applied to Jesus of Nazareth, and to no one else.

Fifthly, Because the verses 17-20 make is so clear that only the new creation is referred to. The expressions, "the hope," "the new inheritance," "the kingdom of his dear Son," "the beginning, the first-born from the dead," "to reconcile all things unto himself," "to present you holy and unblamable," "if ye continue in the faith," "and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel," "the Head of the Body of the church," "the first born from the dead that in all things he might have the pre-eminence," and "peace through the blood of the cross."— Yes: in all these expressions we see a fitness of things, and means to an end, if applied to the new creation: but where is the fitness if the first creation be meant?

The only plausible objection ever presented to us, is this: The apostle uses the past tense. "By him were all things created;" and that "he IS before all things." It will be hardly necessary to say to the intelligent student of the Bible, that very frequently the past tense is used to express the certainty of something to happen in the future; for instance, we read in Rom. iv. 17, that God said to Abraham, "I have made thee a father of many nations, before him whom he believed, even God," who had said this to him before he had a son: and then the principle on which the statement is made is given in the usage of the Spirit, thus:—"Even God, who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not (yet) as though they were;" Rom. iv. 17. so that that kind of evidence cannot be relied upon, especially when other Scriptures present insuperable objections to it.

In further considering this subject, will our readers turn to Rev. xxi. 5, where it says:—"And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold I, (Jesus Christ, see v. 1 of i.) make all things new." This was a revelation of something to be done in the future; and does not the message come from him of whom Paul speaks in our text as the first-born from the dead, the first-born of every creature, the beginning? And do not the words first-born imply the birth of others like him? Very well, then; he is the head, and pre-eminent, and our last quotation shows what a wonderful pre-eminent his is, when he can say, "Behold I make all things new;" but it is only a reassertion of what is taught of him most abundantly in the Scriptures of truth, as the Great Restorer of all the prophets has said. It is safe to say, then, that the "all things" he is said to precede, do not yet exist; when they do, Rev. xxi. 5, shows by what means they exist.

We would have our readers understand that although Jesus has not yet brought life to those who are his, much work preparatory to the new creation has been done, and is still being done. Those who will partake of his Divine nature have something to do in this life. They hear, believe and obey the Word of truth, and are thus begotten; and the work will only be completed when like he who was the beginning, the first-born from the dead, they too shall be born again. Remember, it does not say he was before all things, but is before all things.

After another suggestion or two on the words, "Who is the image of the invisible God," we must pass to other passages. As we cannot expect to arrive at a correct understanding of a passage without the correct words, it is important to know that Paul said Jesus was an image, not the image. "No created being could be the image of the invisible God. Man, as the head of the woman is an image of God. In what then, does the likeness consist—i. e., the likeness to the invisible God? It is in relation to the new creation we have referred to. He is the Beginning of that, as the Deity was of the Beginnings referred to in Gen. i. 1. This is by appointment, "for it pleased the Father that in him all the fulness should dwell;" just as all things are said to out of God, so all things of the new creation shall be out of Christ, agreeing with his own announcement, "Behold I make all things new." And in our opinion Heb. i. 10. relates to the same stupendous work. Rotherham's rendering of this passage is helpful, "And thou, by way of beginning, Lord, the earth didst found, and works of thy hands are the heavens." The common translation doubtless suggests the beginning of Gen. i. 1, which again suggests the beginning of all things, and is very misleading. We suggest that reference is here made to a world, Kosmos, arrangement whose foundation was laid by Christ, and that reference is made to this in John xvii. 24, where Jesus says, "Thou lovedst me before a laying down of a world," Diaglott word for word, or "Thou lovedst me before an arrangement's down-laying," as Nesbet renders it. If this expresses the mind of the spirit in the words, then indeed we may understand how Paul wrote to the Philippians (chap. ii. 15, "Ye shine as lights in an arrangement;" and "believed on in an arrangement," 1 Tim. iii. 16; and of "the Lamb killed from an arrangement laying down;" Rev. xiii. 8, but we do not presume to pass upon the correctness of these renderings.

Cholera and Drought.

LONDON, June 17.—Cholera reports from the south of France are distinctly bad. During the last week the disease spread more than during the last eight weeks since it first found lodgment in those squalid towns. Special reports furnished by consuls to the Local Government Board here say that during the last eight weeks there have been 500 cases in Southern France and 178 deaths. This week the plague has infected Limogues, Toulon, Frontenan, and other French places, slowly working its way up towards Paris. The towns of Cette, Nimes, Alaias, and Montpelier are in a bad way and the number of deaths in each varies from three to sixteen daily.

To add to the evil one case of choleraic diarrhea occurred Tuesday here in London. It was that of a young girl, and presented all the symptoms of true cholera. The doctors speak of it as choleraic diarrhea, say the case was purely sporadic, and that there is no danger of its spread. However, with cholera fighting at fifty ports to get into the country, it is difficult to keep it out.

The weather, too, has been abnormal in the way of drought and heat. For the last three days the thermometer in London has reached 84 degrees. Today it is 85 degrees. From every part of the country goes up a wail for rain. Hay and clover grass are so dried up they will hardly pay to cut.

The drought is affecting towns also. In Glasgow the town council announces that there is danger of water famine and a proposal has been made to shut off the supply at night from 11 until 5 o'clock. At Plymouth there is only one day's supply in the reservoir, while the amount flowing in is constantly diminishing and is not equal to the demand. The Clitheroe authorities have prohibited unnecessary washing of windows and all waste of this kind. In parts of the continent much the same condition of affairs prevails. A letter from France says that if America could send forage rapidly over to that country it would find a splendid market for it. The pastoral districts of France are threatened with the extinction of their flocks and herds. Farmers are selling their cattle for anything they will bring simply because fodder cannot be bought to keep them alive. The result is a glut in the market. The price of beeves has gone down and the Paris household is fighting with the retail butcher because the butcher will not reduce his prices according to the plethoric supply.

In London the omnibus companies are wondering what they shall do for fodder. The price of hay is rising by leaps and bounds. It is already 50 per cent higher than last year or the year before. One bus company has sent an agent to Australia with power to purchase up to £25,000. Speculations have been opened on a big scale in foreign hay and large purchases have been made in the United States, Canada, and even Russia.

Nor is agriculture the only thing affected. The Lancet points out the danger of this drought, saying that it will probably lead to an unusual amount of sickness.

The Door Was Shut.

"And while they went to buy the bridegroom came, and they that were ready went in, and the door was shut." The parable of which this is a part is quite familiar to Bible readers. There are many lessons to be drawn from it that are profitable to all. While at a certain point they were all asleep (wise and foolish), yet when the cry came one class was all ready and went into the wedding. So we need to be sure, if we go to sleep that we have oil in our lamps. There can be no question as to what the lamp and the oil mean. Nearly all agree that they refer to the Word and the Spirit. It will be plain to all that these were all professors, so this becomes of greater importance to professors, than any one else. They all had lamps. Some of them had oil, or the Spirit.

It is plainly to be seen that it required both to fit them to enter. Here is a lesson all do well to learn, that dry theories or dogmas, no matter how much they savor of truth, unless accompanied by the power of the Spirit will not fit us to enter the Kingdom. There is much danger of holding the truth in unrighteousness; and that I understand to be to have the truth, or the lamp, without the oil, or the Spirit.

So we do well to look at our own personal condition. It will do us no good to talk about Jesus' coming and show the evidences of the event and the promised blessings to those who are ready, unless we have the oil. I heard one man say, who smelt very strong of liquor, "Brethern, if you would talk and sing more of Jesus' coming you would do me more good." Real spiritual religion disturbed him.

Others are drunken with the care of this life, but when they get to meeting—which is not often—they want to hear about the glories of the world to come. If you rein them up to the present experience they do not enjoy it. The trouble is, they have no oil in their vessels. There is much of parrot talk today. Some who perhaps had something once, have let it leak out, and now when they talk or pray they try to work themselves up to the same pitch of feeling that they had once but the oil is gone. One may hold the doctrine of holiness of heart, or a clean heart, as a religious dogma, and dispute about it, and flatter himself that he has it, and nearly all the rest are void of it, and be destitute of the real spiritual life. The fruits of the Spirit are very clearly defined, and it is the fruit that the Master calls for, not leaves. "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit." "He that abideth in me and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit."

"They that were ready went in and the door was shut." "When once the Master of the house rises up and shuts the door." It makes a great difference which side of the door we are on at last. If shut in, we are all right, if outside how sad. We have before us the finality of human destiny. A separation is coming, and nothing but a proper fitness will answer. How many are shutting the door of their hearts against the entreaties of the Spirit of God and the pleadings of his people, putting far away the evil day. Should these lines meet the eye of a friend unsaved, I beg you to stop and think. Are you ready to go into the marriage of the Lamb? It is soon to take place.

Nothing but the garment of Christ's righteousness will answer. Faults of others will be a poor covering then. This is our dressing-room for glory. It would not do to appear there without a wedding garment on. If we should try we should be cast into outer darkness, speechless before the Lamb of God. "And to her was granted that she be clothed in linen clean and white, for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints" (holy ones). Nothing less than holiness unto the Lord will do. Let there be a trimming of lamps, but be sure and have oil in the vessels. Some are represented as going to buy while others went in, but they could find no oil. This wipes out any future chance. Today is the day of salvation.—L. F. Baker in Crisis.

Dear Restitution:

As it has been some time since I wrote to the letter drawer, I thought I would let you hear from me once more. I have gone entirely blind, ever since the 20th of March I have not seen the first ray of light, but O, how it cheers my heart to hear the good letters read in THE RESTITUTION from the brothers and sisters scattered all over the land. Therefore lift up your heads for redemption draweth nigh. Now brethren, as the signs of times indicate the soon coming of our blessed Master, let us stand firm, having on the wedding garment without spot or wrinkle that we may be worthy to go in to the marriage supper. Now brethren and sisters, I ask your prayers for me that I may in my blind affliction and poverty strive to enter in at the strait gate, that I may hear it said of me and all the rest of God's dear children, well done thou good and faithful servants, enter into joys of thy Lord, for thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things.

WESLEY R. for ISAAC T. FOSTER.

Editor Restitution:

In my article which appeared in THE RESTITUTION of May 24, which will be found on the last page, first column, I find a mistake. It reads,—"But the destruction of the wicked should be preached as a result of believing the gospel." Will you please correct by making it say, "But the destruction of the wicked should be preached as a result of not believing the gospel after it, (the gospel) had been preached." Yours truly.

ALMIRA BROOKS.

That instrument will make no music that hath but some strings in tune. If, when God strikes on the strings of joy and gladness, we answer pleasantly; but when he touches upon that of sorrow and humiliation we see it not; we are broken strings that make no melody unto God. A well-tuned heart must have all its strings, all its affections, ready to answer every touch of God's finger and will make everything beautiful in its time. Sweet harmony cometh out of some discord.

Poetry.

Christ is Coming.

Christ is coming, coming quickly,
In the fulness of his power;
When the heavens shall glow with splendor,
In that welcome, solemn hour.

Every eye shall then behold him,
[illegible] we'll all be gathered then,
By the reaper of life's harvest,
[illegible] the golden grain.

Welcome hour to all God's children,
Who have waited long for him;
For we then shall be delivered
From temptation, pain and sin.

Then the wicked shall forever
Cease from troubling any more,
For they never shall inherit
Life on the eternal shore.

Only Yesterday.

Only yesterday, a small congregation gathered at a little church in a quiet grove and listened as they had listened many times before to solemn words of warning from God's holy Book.

Numbers were there who were yet out of the ark of safety, but they heeded not. One dear woman who had long before made up her mind to enlist on the Lord's side, was immersed into the one and only name whereby we can be saved, and went joyously homeward. Others looked on, but took no step forward, seeming not to realize the terribly solemn issues involved, and the fearful risk of putting off obedience to God until to-morrow. One halted, waiting for her husband, another, because she was not good enough to come into the holy family.

It is so human-like to make excuse! But where eternity is at stake, and God's commands are stretched like a bar across our path, no excuse is valid; no excuse will shield from the day of destruction that is coming upon the disobedient. How can any one wait? "The horse may be prepared for battle but safety is of the Lord."

It is just like this,—God has pronounced sentence upon all who refuse to come unto him through the appointed advocate and High Priest, Jesus Christ, the righteous One. No one can escape that sentence who in wilful, stubborn rebellion, remains under the banner of Satan, fighting against God. For there are only two masters, only two great armies in this wide world of ours.

There is no neutral ground between these armies. To choose between the two, we must,—because the mighty sovereign of the universe has so commanded in his Word. If we obey not his commands, what are we but wilful breakers of his law? We cannot say the truth when we excuse ourselves by the plea that we are trying to do the best we know how, that we are living honest, upright lives.

God requires more than this, our loyalty to him must be proven by positive acts and by open confession of his name. No general would accept a soldier from a hostile army, unless he would properly enlist according to the rules and regulations of the country for which he was to fight. To say that he was going to fight, or that he was fighting, when he was at the same time pursuing his own pleasure, and seeking for gain in his own way for a foreign country giving at the same the time of his means to the enemy, would not convince the captain that he was a loyal soldier to the good cause of this republic.

God has nowhere said we may wait for another, no matter how dear that other may be, but he everywhere warns us to "escape for our lives, to stay not in all the plain." Now, now, now, is the time to come. The storm of wrath is coming. I cannot bear that any one for fault of mine, should "die in their sins." I see the sword coming and I must warn. It will smite down thousands upon thousands. There is only one place of safety. How foolish to stand still right in the path of the flood. God is not in fault. He is not the cruel one. He has sent men and women to tell you that the awful tide will soon come rushing down upon you. He has prepared chambers into which you will be taken if you are ready. Like Noah and his family, you can be shut in until the indignation is overpast.

It looks fearful—a picture of the helpless victims of the flood—climbing up the hills, and at last all lying stark and dead. At first thought it seems horrible. But there those ante-diluvians stood. They only laughed at the message. They made no move to get out of the way of the waters. As it was in the Johnstown flood, they would not believe. They would not leave the fair homes and beautiful lands for a year's sojourn in ships. It was a small matter to get out of the way of danger, but they choose—and choose death. Cyclones are coming, pestilence is coming, civil war is coming,—escape now. If you die in your sins, all is lost, eternity is gone out of your grasp forever.

No one can ever become good enough to take the name of Jesus, we must come just as we are; poor, burdened, undone sinners. Time will not wait, judgment will not wait. God requires a living sacrifice—our lives must be given to him. Jesus will soon be here. He will call, be ready to answer.

S. Roxana Wince.

John's First Epistle.
Chapter 3.

1. Ye see what sort of love the Father hath given us that we might be called God's offspring, and we are. Therefore the cosmos doth not comprehend us, because it hath not comprehended him.

2. Beloved now are we God's offspring and not yet hath it been made manifest what we shall be. We know that if he shall have been made manifest we shall be like him, because we shall see him even as he is.

3. And any one who hath this hope in respect to him is purifying himself even as he is pure.

4. Any one who is the author of the sin is also the author of the transgression; and the sin is the transgression.

5. And ye know he was made manifest that he might take away the sins: and then is no sin in him.

6. Any one who is abiding in him is not sinning; any one who is sinning hath not seen him nor comprehended him.

7. Little children, let no one lead you astray. The one who is authorizing the righteousness is a justified one even as he is a justified one.

8. The one who is authorizing the sin is of the Diabolos, because the Diabolos sinneth from the first. To this end was the Son of God made manifest, that he might unloose the doings of the Diabolos.

9. Any one who hath been begotten of God, doth not authorize sin, but his seed abideth in him, and he cannot sin, because he hath been begotten of God.

10. In this way are the offspring of God and the offspring of the Diabolos manifest. Any one who is not authorizing righteousness is not of God, and he who doth not love his brother.

11. Because this is the message which ye have heard from the first, that we should love one another:

12. Not even as Kain was of the wicked one and slew his brother. And for what reason did he slay him? Because his deeds were wicked and his brother's justifiable.

13. And wonder not, brethren, if the Cosmos hateth you.

14. We know that we have passed over from the death to the life, because we love the brethren. The one who is not loving is abiding in the death?

15. Every one who hateth his brother is a man-slayer, and ye know that no man-slayer hath eternal life abiding in himself.

16. In this way have we comprehended the love, in that he disposed of his soul for us; and we ought to dispose of our souls for the brethren.

17. Whoever moreover hath the livelihood that is of the Cosmos and beholdeth his brother in need, and shutteth up his feelings of compassion from him, how is the love of God abiding in him?

18. Little children, let us not love with word or with tongue, but in deed and in truth.

19. In this way will we comprehend that we are of the truth, and persuade our hearts in his presence.

20. Because if our heart knoweth anything against us, God is greater than our heart and knoweth all things.

21. Beloved, if our heart knoweth nothing against us we have assurance toward God,

22. And the thing which we may ask for we receive from him, because we are watching to keep his commandments, and are authorizing the things pleasing in his sight.

23. And this is his commandment that we have faith in the name of his Son Jesous Christ, and love one another, even as he hath given us commandment,

24. And the one who is watching to keep his commandments, is abiding in him, and he in him. And in this we comprehend that he is abiding in us, from the spirit which he hath given us.

COMMENT.

"That we might be called God's offspring" instead of "sons of God" C. V. This was corrected to "children" in the R. V. But see how misleading this translation has proved, this passage being constantly quoted as a proof-text to show that John taught the divine sonship to be complete in the flesh, whereas Paul shows that even the heathen poets had apprehended this much, and correctly asserted it as to the truth of man's origin, while he goes on to teach and assert the absolute necessity of a regeneration in order to attain to the sonship or a participation in the divine nature, which Christ came to bring.

"Lose" instead of "destroy" R. V. not unimportant as a polemical distinction.

"Disposed of his soul (natural life)" instead of "laid down his life" R. V. Christ argues this whole polemical question himself. So that we do not need to misunderstand it. He would have had no moral right to either "lay down" or "dispose of" his life unless God had especially instructed him in this regard and officially empowered him so to do. It would have been simply suicide. But he says this "official-power have I received from the Father," and not merely to lay it down without a specific purpose in view; but within the limitations of this specific purpose lies this "official-power." He could make a disposition of his soul (or life) to carry out this good purpose, and this is just what he does, and this is the rational significance of Calvary—one innocent soul under God's sanction surrendering itself for a guilty world "for the joy that was set before him." Here is an object in view and a disposition with a view to the accomplishment of this definite object, no mere "laying down" and "taking up again" any more than there would be in my disposing of a dollar to make two dollars. Christ did what he did with a deliberate purpose because there was something to gain commensurate with the loss to be incurred.

"Persuade" instead of "assure" R. V. not the same thought to my mind.

"Because if our heart knoweth anything against us, God is greater than our heart and knoweth all things," instead of "whereinsoever our heart condemn us; because God is greater than our heart, etc." R. V.

"Assurance" instead of "boldness" R. V.

"And the thing which we may ask for we receive because we are watching to keep his commandments" instead of "whatsoever we ask we receive because we keep his commandments" R. V. A great difference of statement I think. In the first place the best we can do is "to watch to keep" and this will be an imperfect "keeping" we are told and know of ourselves, and in the second place we are not to ask for everything, but what we are to ask for is made specific in the Word.

"Have faith in the name" instead of "believe in the name" R. V. Faith is one step further than belief.

"From the spirit" instead of "by the spirit" R. V.

Editor Restitution:

It might be that some of the waiting ones would like to hear from this part of God's vineyard, and of our labor done.

On Friday before the third Sunday in May, I left Parsons at 9 A. M. and took Nahum's Chariots for Blue Mounds, Mo., to hold a meeting in the Christian, or Campbellite Church. At Dawn I met Brother A. T. Pursell an old veteran in the cause of Christ. He took me to his home where I met Sister Pursell and daughter. After resting awhile we started for Blue Mounds where we stopped at Brother Morris, then went to church, but on account of the threatening rain not many came out, still we preached them a short discourse. On Sunday we had a large and well filled house. There are quite a number of our faith at this place. There are others that think that it makes no difference what a man believes so he is honest, but we think faith comes of hearing, we must first hear and then obey. The result of this meeting was that five came out and put on Christ by baptism, two of the number being 65 and 67 years of age, who had all their lives been Methodists. They were all of one family, father, mother, two sons, and one daughter-in-law. While baptizing the children the parents came. The children were a little afraid that it would hurt or make their mother sick, but before the week was over she said she felt better than at the beginning of the meeting. Others kept coming one or two at a time until ten had put on Christ. Two more expressed themselves with us which made 12. I told these two that I would prefer being baptized after I had received or heard the gospel and make sure of the crown. This was one of the best meetings I have held in a long time.

One of the elders of the Campbellites challenged me to debate on The Kingdom. These men affirm that the Church is the Kingdom, and was set up on the day of Pentecost. I said I would not debate this subject. I asked him whether Christ had selected the Apostles and set them in the church before Pentecost or afterwards? He could not tell. I told him to read Eph. iv. 1 Cor. xii. the whole chapter, and especially verses 27, 28. Acts ii. 41, 47. Acts i. 15, added to them the 120.

We had two Bible readings well attended, and a good interest all the way through. I left them with a promise to return again.

May the good Lord bless them and keep them faithful until the Lord comes. I remained over two Sundays, and preached 14 discourses. I left for home May 29. I found all well.

June 3, I started for Medoc, Mo. Had a good meeting, preached three discourses. On Monday morning I baptized one of Brother Morrow's daughters in the same beautiful water that I baptized her mother some four years ago, but the mother has gone to her long rest, but when Jesus comes she will meet her children.

God bless the brothers and sisters scattered abroad, and pray for me that I may prove faithful till the Master comes. I think it will not be long. I remain as ever in the hope of eternal life.

John Foore.

Editor Restitution:

I see that Brother Hart wishes to know something about Samuel and the Witch of Endor. Perhaps some good brother will also be kind enough to give me a little light on the subject.

Did the Lord send Samuel down from heaven to accommodate the Witch of Endor, or was it to accommodate Saul after he had refused to answer him by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by the prophets? Why did Samuel have to go down into the earth? was it to get his old body? If so who killed and buried him again? and if his body was only raised up, how could he talk without a soul? How was Saul with Samuel the next day? Did the Lord take him up to heaven, when he was too wicked to live on the earth? or, is heaven and hell so near together as to be considered the same place? or, was his body carried and hung on the wall of Bethshan with Saul's, if neither body or soul were united, how could Saul and Samuel have been together the next day?

Why did Saul ask the witch what form he was of if Saul saw Samuel? and if Saul could not see Samuel, how do we know but the whole thing was a piece of jugglery? Do you really think that the Witch of Endor could raise the dead, (for that is the job she undertook) and if not does not the whole thing strongly savor of that old falsehood, "Thou shalt not surely die."

Respectfully submitted.

Walter Wells.

The next age will be an age of restitution instead of destruction.

Conference Report.

I had nearly forgotten that it falls on me to send you a report of a conference held at Suspension Bridge, N. Y. June 2, to the 4th.

Brethren were present from Fonthill, Selkirk, Salina, Iroquois and Toronto, Ontario, Canada, and from Buffalo, Tonawanda, Alfred Centre, Salamanca, Sanburn, and Auburn this state.

The seven sessions of the meetings, each concluding with preaching, either by Geo. Elton of Collinwood, Ohio, Jacob Brinkerhoff of Alfred Centre, N. Y., or S. C. Gove of Auburn, N. Y., were pronounced by the gray-haired men to be the best they have attended since the early days of Adventism.

Brother Skinner of Toronto, who was one of the number expecting the Lord in 43, was with us to assure us that hope deferred was not hope destroyed.

It was pre-eminently a meeting of the brethren, and dozens tenderly expressed their love for the truth and their desire for the return of the Man of Nazareth. A deeper feeling has seldom been witnessed than was manifested at our social meetings, some of which lasted two hours.

It will be of interest and encouragement to the readers to know that the writer with some twenty-five others were dismissed from the Disciple denomination, Dec. 4, 1892, for preaching "Jesus and the Resurrection." We at once began to build a house. One Sister Herron for this purpose, donated a lot. We did the mason and carpenter work ourselves, so that our only expense was the material.

We have a cozy building 30x40, with 18 foot ceiling, accommodating 200 people.

In this house we held our meeting, and here this little band hope to meet till the Lord comes. We are not counting on dying, but expect to be among those "who are alive and remain," for the Kingdom of God is nigh at hand.

In this city is the old home of Brother R. V. Lyon, who fell asleep just before I came here to preach for the Disciples, Sept. 91., and here his esteemed widowed companion, whose words of cheer and good counsel are highly prized, still resides.

There is one sad feature as the result of this gathering. Brother Hogarth aged 78, with his daughter Laura, and grand-daughter, came from below Toronto. The heat was intense. He took cold, and has since been prostrated with pneumonia at the home of Sister Lyon.

We anxiously await the time when the tabernacle of God shall again be with men, that sorrow, sighing, sickness, pain and death, may be no more. Four are to be baptized here to night in the Niagara River.

We expect to have another meeting in the fall at Fonthill, Ontario.

G. O. Black.

Later.—June, 18, 1893. Brother Hogarth, of whom I made mention, died at noon today.

G. O. B.

What Do You Think?

"Whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" 1 John iv. 17.

The above question is of vital import to us all. If we cannot reciprocate the love of God shown to us, our heart is not right before God. If we minister to the needs of God's faithful ones, Christ accepts it as done to him personally. If our Christianity does not take a practical turn, it will be of little account to us.

Our beloved Sister, Mrs. H. V. Reed is in receipt of information that our well-known and respected brother "H. H." now in England, (said to be over eighty years of age) is in distress. If aid does not reach him soon, he and his aged wife will have to end their days in a British poor house.

This must not be. I am sure the loving hearts of our brethren and sisters will not permit it.

Sister Reed desires you to send your remittances to me, and I will see that it is sent our brother at once. Please respond immediately that they may all be sent him together.

I do not think it necessary to make any special appeal, as I feel assured that the love which dwells in you will lead you to do your duty.

Conference Report.

The Church of God in Indiana, met at Antioch meeting house according to announcement, June 9, 1893.

At the meeting on Saturday there was no business before the conference.

The treasurer reported, Amount on hand $209.12. Amount received, $18.00. Paid out $66.22. Remaining in treasury $160.90.

The report of the committee on Sunday School Quarterlies was heard but nothing had been done in advance of our last report. It was suggested by some that the quarterly be issued and depend upon donations for its support, but this was met with opposition, and there being no encouragement to push the matter the report was accepted and the committee discharged.

The report of the ministers present was next heard. Brother Wagoner not having arrived we failed to get his report.

Brother Conner reported his time mostly taken up with the churches at Rensselaer, and in Warren and Blackford Counties. Number of sermons preached 98, accessions to church 21.

Brother Geiselman has three regular points of preaching. Plymouth, Argos, and North Union, and has done some evangelical work at Lapaz and Noblesville. Preached 114 discourses and received 11 additions since last report.

Brother Wince being so situated that he could not devote much of his time to ministerial work, but devotes a great deal of his time writing for different periodicals, has preached 26 discourses since last report.

The ministers present were J. L. Wince, J. F. Wagoner, N. H. Geiselman, L. E. Conner and R. C. Railsback.

The weather during the meeting was all that could be desired. A heavy rain Saturday evening laid the dust and cooled the air making it all the more pleasant for Sunday, when, as usual, there was a large concourse of people, the house being crowded both in the fore and afternoon, many being unable to get inside. The preaching was well received by an attentive audience. During the meeting three were baptized into the all-saving name of Jesus; may they prove faithful to their trust that they may reap the rich reward due all those that love his appearing and kingdom.

Sister Willard of New Jersey was there and did much to encourage us by her cheering words. Brethren and sisters let us take courage and be faithful the little time that we have, for we have not long to wait.

Our next conference will be in Warren Co. The church at that place extend a cordial and pressing invitation for those who can to come.

J. F. Wagoner, Pres.
A. C. Roberts, Sec'y.

Let the words we use in prayer be our own. Many who would never think of reading their private prayers from a book might as well, so far as any real employment of their own mind in the exercise is concerned. They float along on a current of stereotyped phrases and dead words, which have become so familiar by long habit, that no thought is awakened, no energy put forth, no impression produced. It is the laziest of performances, empty of any definite meaning or actual benefit. If we have fallen to any extent into this vicious custom, we should bring ourselves up with a round turn, and make a change. We should carefully and deliberately choose expressions that mean something to us, that bear the stamp of our intellect, that originate with the need of the hour. It is better to say ten words in this way, slowly, and hesitatingly, than to pour forth one hundred in the fluent fashion that indicates neither feeling nor reflection.

Never is a time that a man needs to pray more than when elated with apparent success.

For the Glorious Fourth.

Chances of Peace Diminished.

Paris, June 17.—All European political interests now center in the results of the German elections, which are impatiently waited for in all the capitals of the Old World. There are two disquieting symptoms. The first is the defeat of the Emperor, who unnecessarily took personal part in the electoral struggle, and the second is the constant progress of socialism, which is gaining ground everywhere in Germany, both in the rural districts and in the cities.

The question everybody is asking is: "What will the Kaiser do?" This nobody can answer, probably not even the Kaiser himself. Advices from Berlin state that the Emperor has been deeply affected by what he calls the ingratitude of the people. In addition it is now an open secret that his Majesty is on bad terms with his grandmother, Victoria, because of the projected marriage of the Czarowitz. These facts are giving statesmen much anxiety, because they are well aware that personal motives have always an influence over the Emperor. But more especially does the progress of socialism increase their disquietude. All are convinced that William II. is of a pacific temperament, but nearly all believe that if socialism continues to advance, and more especially if it extends to the army, the Emperor will be forced to resort to a war in order to win, by military glory, all those who are not yet attacked by socialistic ideas. All the great cities are already lost. If the rural regions are attacked in their turn a revolution will break out in Germany inside of twenty years.

The situation has been so changed by the success of the Socialists that no one talks about the adoption of the army bill, the adoption or rejection of which has become a matter of no importance. All realize that the very social fabric of the empire is at stake. It is the general opinion that the army bill will be rejected.

As if it had been done purposely, the Franco-Russian treaty of commerce was signed at Peterhof yesterday by the Czar. This is the first treaty of the kind signed by Russia with France since that of 1859, and is especially significant because Germany is making great efforts to secure a similar treaty with Russia, and is doing so unsuccessfully.

To sum up the situation, the result of the elections diminishes the chances of peace, because it has increased the general anxiety, and yet everybody, the people, their sovereigns, the Socialists themselves desire peace.

MARRIED

By the writer, May, 18, at Dutton, Mich., at the home of the bride's parents, Brother and Sister McCrodon; Mr. Charles A. Anderson, and Miss Eliza J. McCrodan.

After the congratulations and good wishes of their many friends assembled, and a sumptuous wedding feast, they started for the "World's Fair." May they enjoy their visit there, and be counted worthy of the far greater "World's Fair" that will soon open in the "City of the Great King." The Nobleman has gone to the far country to receive the kingdom long ago appointed him, and will soon return, as it is written, "after this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up; that the residue of men might seek after the Lord." The Lord God will fulfill the promise made at his birth, and "give him the throne of his father David, and he will reign over the House of Jacob forever." "And the Lord shall be King over all the earth." Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed when the Lord of Hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously" Isa. xxiv. 23.

May our young married friends, "by a patient continuance in well-doing" seek the future "glory, honor and immortality," and God will give them a hundred fold in this time, and in the "age to come, eternal life." See Mark x. 30.

The one who rests the most in Christ leads the most active life.

Mary J. Keeney, April 23, 1893.

Sister Keeney was born in Canada, Feb. 10, 1845, was baptized into Christ about eight years ago, by the writer, and has since lived trusting and believing in the blessed hope of the Abrahamic Faith. She was a great sufferer with that terrible disease, cancer, but she was wonderfully patient and died believing that she would have a part in the first resurrection. She leaves a husband and seven children, with many other relatives and friends to mourn her absence. The writer spoke to a very large audience on the hope of the resurrection.

B. W. WOODWARD.

Jared Whittam, May 22, 1893, of consumption.

Brother Whittum was baptized into Christ by the writer some eight or nine years ago, and he has ever since been a faithful Christian. I also baptized the one he afterward chose to be his wife and united them in the holy bonds of wedlock. They have lived these few brief years, devoted, faithful Christians. He leaves his young wife and a babe seven weeks old to battle with life a few years longer, two brothers and a sister, and friends, but leaves them all with the sweet hope of a grand meeting when the Master calls for his faithful ones. I spoke from the text "Thy brother shall live again," surely there is hope in these words.

B. W. WOODWARD.

John B. Wood, June 3, 1893, born Jan. 1819, in the state of New York.

Thrown out upon the world when a mere boy, an orphan, finding a home here and there until reaching manhood he came to Michigan, and enduring many hardships amid the wilds of a new country, by steady perseverance he made for himself a home. He embraced the Adventist Faith some 35 years ago under the labors of J. B. Frisby, which doctrine he held to the time of his death. He leaves an aged wife and many other relatives and friends. Words of hope were spoken from John xii, 22.

B. W. WOODWARD.

Caroline M. Terrell, May 25, 1893.

The subject of this sketch was born in the town of Waterbury, New Haven Co. Conn. June 18, 1810. When seven years old she with her parents removed to Trumble Co. Ohio, and from thence to Loraine Co. Ohio, in 1820.

October 11, 1832, she was married to Alonzo P. Terrell, who survives her at the advanced age of 83 years. They resided in Loraine Co. until May 1854, when they removed to Byron Township, Kent Co. Mich. where they have since resided.

They were the parents of five children, two of whom are now living, and of twenty-two grandchildren, and twenty-eight great grand children, only two have died.

Sister Terrell was converted in 1834, and united with the Church of God in the Abrahamic Faith, and has been faithful until death, never wavering one moment from the hope of the gospel. She has been a help and strength to all about her. The text chosen at her funeral services was "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord," and blessed indeed has been this dear "Mother in Israel."

She was conscious of her approaching change, and quietly laid her head against her rocking chair in which she had been obliged to sit for weeks, and fell asleep in Jesus, without a struggle, with the sweet consciousness of an awakening when the trump of God shall sound.

O, how lonely the dear old home will be now with the empty chair, the ever hopeful words and smile of love, never more to be heard, or felt. May God help us to live to meet this dear faithful child of God in the coming kingdom. Funeral sermon by the writer.

Conference Call.

There will be a conference of the Church of God, of the Abrahamic faith, at Lanark, Ill., commencing June 23, 1893, and continue over Sunday. Brother and Sister Woodward of Michigan, will be with us to labor for the interest of the meeting, and the good of all. We hope and earnestly entreat all who have an interest in the cause of the Master, and we are looking for His soon coming, to make a sacrifice if necessary to be at this meeting, as there will be some important business to act upon.

J. D. RENNER, Sec'y.

The quarterly conference of the Churches of God of the Abrahamic Faith will meet northeast of Oxford two miles, in Brother Thomas Jackson's neighborhood July 21, 1893, College Co., Kansas, to continue over Sunday and longer if the brethren think best. We hope and entreat all who have an interest in the cause of the Master and are looking for His soon coming to be at the meeting, for we believe that all intend to be reached, yet there is a strong tendency to growing cold among the true church that precedes His coming.

We extend a cordial invitation to all the brethren in this and other states. There is some important business to transact and we would like all of the brethren to come that possibly can come. Brethren let us work while we have an opportunity for the signs indicate the near approach of the Master. Let us be up and doing.

CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to THE RESTITUTION office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount set to credit, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who, being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

Poetry.

Misunderstood.

How seldom we are understood,
In this cold world of ours;
Our friends ne'er see the thorns, but think
Our path is strewn with flowers.
How seldom are we understood
By those who know us best;
How many times we hide our thoughts
Within the silent breast.

The world is far removed from us
We make a world our own;
We sit within its narrow walls,
And suffer there alone.
The busy world moves on and on,
We stand aloof and sigh
For that which never can be ours,
That flits forever by.

And those we call themselves our friends
Can never see the strain
Upon the strings, nor hear the sound,
Nor feel the awful pain.
The workings of the soul are hid
From careless, cruel eyes,
The [illegible] of the [illegible] to them
Is but a [illegible] sigh.

Because we do not always smile,
Nor seem forever gay,
They say we're angry, haughty, proud,
Nor understand our way;
The unkind thrust they sometimes give,
The thoughtless things they say,
Cut deep within the tender heart,
And stay with us alway.

If they could see within our hearts
The wrecks upon the strand,
Perhaps they'd love us in our moods,
Perhaps they'd understand.
Some time we may be understood,
Somehow the clouds shall rise;
Somewhere the mists shall clear away,
Perhaps in Paradise.

I Am Afraid of You.

"Ye observe days, and months, and times, and years. I am afraid of you lest I have bestowed upon you labor in vain." Gal. iv. 10, 11.

It seems that the Apostle had considerable trouble with some of the converts from the old Jewish law. He speaks of them as "Foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you?" and declares to them that "as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse," and "that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God," and adds: "Whereunto ye desire again to be in bondage? Ye observe days, and months, and times, and years. I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labor in vain." It seemed so difficult for them to realize the fact that their weekly and yearly sabbaths, new moons and feast days had all ceased at the incoming of the new covenant, although God had distinctly affirmed through the Prophet Hosea: "I will also cause all her mirth to cease, her feast days, her new moons, and her sabbaths (weekly and yearly) and all her solemn feasts."

Methinks if the Apostle was alive at this day, he would have occasion to say to some professed Christians: "O foolish Christians, who hath bewitched you?" Don't you know that "he taketh away the first, that he may establish the second?" Heb. x. 9. Both cannot exist together either as a whole or in part. A correspondent writes as follows:

DEAR BRO. WILSON:—I have received three letters from Bro. N.— Our correspondence was started by my sending him a little money to help him go down into Virginia to preach the gospel. He opened up on me with the Sabbath question and is firing some pretty strong shots. He holds that the ten commandments are still in force and quotes, "Thou shalt not kill," and asks why abolish that? "Thou shalt not steal," and says why abolish that? He quotes from Christ's sayings, "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets, I came not to destroy but to fulfil. For verily I say unto you, until heaven and earth shall pass not one jot or tittle shall pass from the law till all be fulfilled."

Our Sabbatarian friends lay so much stress upon Christ's words: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I came not to destroy but to fulfil."

The words "the law," is a generic phrase which covers the entire Mosaic system of law. This is capable of the clearest Scripture proof. But suppose we limit the phrase to the ten commandments, as our Brother's correspondent evidently does, what difference does it make to believers, when compared with the following Scripture: "For Christ is the end of the law to every one that believeth." Rom. x. 4. What have we to do with that which has come to an end? Let me give another Scripture of like import: "Shall we sin because we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid. Again, the law has run out by reason of limitation: "Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added, because of transgression, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made." Gal. iii. 19. When the seed came the law was fulfilled (not destroyed) and passed away. Again, "the law was our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ," and when Christ came the schoolmaster was discharged, he had brought his work to completion, was "fulfilled." What is the use of observing the law, if it cuts no figure in our justification? I pity our Sabbatarian friends if they trust the law in part or as a whole for their justification. It is certainly a serious matter when compared with the following Scriptures: "Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law, ye are fallen from grace." Gal. v. 4. It is dangerous to observe that which nullifies the effect of Christ's death. The Sabbath was one of the prominent "works" of the law, and was indeed essential that it should be observed when the law was in force. But how is it now? "By the works of the law shall no flesh be justified." Gal. ii. 16. Why then observe the works of the law, and spend so much time to convince others that they should observe the law? Paul says: "if righteousness come by the law, then Christ is dead in vain."

The apostle further adds: "that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law." The apostle excludes all "the deeds of the law" from the Christian system as far as being connected with our justification, in fact if we do so trust it he says we "are fallen from grace," and "Christ is become of no effect" unto us, in fact "Christ is dead in vain," or to no purpose whatever to those who seek justification in part or as a whole from the law. Why observe "works" or "deeds" required by the Sabbath law if it places our salvation in danger, and renders Christ's death vain?" In Paul's day some thought they must observe one of the "deeds of law," as for instance—circumcision; but he adds, such an one is "debtor to do the whole law." and "this applies also to Sabbath keepers with the same force. "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things (not a part) that are written in the book of the law to do them." "The book of the law" contains hundreds of commandments in addition to the ten, and these you must keep unless you wish to be "cursed."

Our Brother's correspondent, like other Sabbatarians who are so loth to give up all the "deeds of the law," quote Christ's words: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law and the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil." The following verse says, "that not one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled." He then refers to the danger of breaking the commandments of the law, which indeed was a very serious matter before their fulfilment. Following this our Savior quotes promiscuously from the numerous commandments of the law, besides the ten commandments, and shows that many of them are not now in force, having been fulfilled; for instance: "Ye have heard that it hath been said in the law: An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth: but I say unto you resist not evil." "Ye have heard that it hath been said (in the law) thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you love your enemies." These things have passed from the law. This chapter is rather a strange one to use in support of Sabbatarianism, as it deals with the law as a whole, not as a part. The "commandments" referred to, are selected from the whole law and not confined to the ten. The sabbath commandment is not even hinted at in this Scripture.

Our Sabbath observers seem to think that the words, "destroy" and "fulfil" used in this Scripture are synonymous, and mean the same thing. This is a mistake. A promise may be fulfilled and pass away, because it has come to fruition, but it would be improper to say the promise was destroyed because it had been fulfilled. It would be highly improper to say the law was destroyed because fulfilled. Instead of being destroyed, it has fulfilled its mission, accomplished its purpose, and consequently has ceased to be of force. Verse 18, shows that a time may arrive when every "jot" or "tittle" shall "pass from the law," and that is not "till all be fulfilled," then it shall "pass from the law," because fulfilled. The only question now to settle is, how much of the law has been fulfilled? I will now cite a positive Scripture proof which shows how much of the law has been fulfilled, and that which is fulfilled must of necessity "pass from the law," being fulfilled. See Gal. v. 14: "All the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." No portion of the old law has been incorporated into the new covenant unless love is at its root. Such portions which allow a man to retaliate upon a man for an injury have become obsolete, passed away, and portions retained in the new covenant don't even exist as a part of the old law.

In closing I wish to give one more testimony that proves beyond all question that the Sabbath law ceased with the old covenant. Please read Deut. iv. 13; Exod. xxxiv. 27, 28, and you will learn just what is termed the "old covenant."

"And he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform even ten commandments, and he wrote them upon two tables of stone." "And the Lord said unto Moses, write down these words: for after the tenor of these words I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel. * * * And he wrote upon the tables the words of the covenant, the ten commandments."

Now the "ten commandments," written upon tables of stone are here called "the words of the covenant." Now in this covenant of "ten commandments" is found the Sabbath law. This covenant was made at Sinai. Now read Gal. iv. 21-23; and you will learn what has become of this covenant. "Tell me ye that desire to be under the law do ye not hear the law? For it is written, that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bondmaid, and the other by a free woman." Verse 4 represents the two covenants the old and the new. "The one from Mount Sinai which gendereth to bondage." "Nevertheless what saith the Scripture? Cast out the bondwoman and her son. For the son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with the son of the freewoman." The bondwoman and her son was cast out to make room for the freewoman and her son, which in other words the old covenant (bondwoman) was "cast out" to make room for new covenant (son of the freewoman, "the children of promise"). The two cannot harmonize or unite together. "The son of the bondwoman (the ten commandment-covenant) shall not be heir with the son of the freewoman." Does not this clearly teach that those who adhere to the ten-commandment-covenant of Exod. xxxiv. 27, 28, cannot at the same time have an interest in the new covenant? "For the son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with the son of the freewoman." See Gal. v. 4: "Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace."

W. H. WILSON.

Finance. A Word of Warning.

The subject of finance the science of raising and investing money, is claiming the time and attention of most all men nowadays. So much so, that the mind has become surcharged with "how shall I get more Money?"

Politicians harp on this pet theme—"How to have money flow as a river, and every man, woman, and child have great loads of it, and times be good and easy for everybody, to sway the minds and lead the people into their pet and well planned schemes, so that they can get the prominence, the offices, and the money.

I am no politician, and have no aspirations in that direction, yet, if such frantic reformers would illustrate their wonderful plans by telling us that two boys could place a board on the fence, and both teeter up at the same time. I would believe it just as readily as to believe their fine spun theories of a jubilee for every body at the same time.

The secret of the trouble is found in the fact, that times have been good and money plenty so long, that men have become more and more reckless, and like the poor, silly, prodigal son, are wasting their substance in riotous living, while they cry "hard times." They make it themselves,—it is the harvest of their own sowing.

There is a Satanic wave of unrest rolling from shore to shore, and men and women too, are caught in its delusive and destructive meshes, as in a cyclone, are hurling and whirling themselves down to destruction as fast as time can roll.

I for one do not expect to see better times of millennial glory until our long absent King comes from heaven in person, to rule the world in righteousness, and speak peace to the troubled ocean. And instead of praying, and planning, and scheming with this deadly doomed world for a better system of finance, we had much better be carefully and prayerfully inspecting our lamps, and seeking for more oil, the spirit of our Master, to prepare and fit us for his reception when he comes to judge this unbelieving and wicked world in righteousness.

Instead of being converted to, and mixing in with the world, as nearly all the sects in their blind zeal are doing to convert the world, God's people, wherever they are, should be at their post of duty warning the world of coming danger, and kindly and earnestly entreat them to flee from the wrath, to come by fleeing to the ark of safety, and laying hold upon the hope set before them in the gospel, before it is too late, and the door of mercy is closed, and the great day of his wrath has come, and who, O who will be able to stand? Perhaps some good brother is ready to say. I am in debt, and I want to get out and be a free man when the Master comes, which is surely commendable, but what prompted you to contract this indebtedness? Was it necessity, and could you enjoy this freedom if you had it? You and I cannot change this spotted leopard a whit, but we can sell our birthright for less than a mess of pottage.

Now as a brother and friend, one that has travelled this rough and thorny road for many years, I would kindly suggest to you and to all others in embarrassed circumstances, to trust in the Lord more, and do good, and verily thou shalt be fed, and leave the poor, old stranded political wrecks, all of them, and pull for the shore. Come out of this Babylon, and trust in, and preach more Jesus able to save from sin, and less finance.

The Master says, "The cares of this life, and the deceitfulness of riches choke the word." He also tells us it is the "Gentiles that seek after these things." He admonishes his disciples not to "do as the world does"—that is let the mind be engrossed with the cares of this life.

It may be that other brethren have been seduced and led off into other dangerous traps, and have joined some secret, oath-bound order, and what for? O, for mercenary purposes of course, the very thing they swore they were not doing, that they may be able to leave a thousand dollars or two for their poor family when they are dead and gone. Now my brother, did you ever stop to think that you have sold yourself to the world for some money, to run your chances of ever getting anything out of this potter's trap which is worse than hungry Esau did. First bind the bundles or bands, and what for? The Master says, "to be burned, but gather the wheat into my barn,—the kingdom of God."

In conclusion, let us be admonished, and be not conformed to this world which will soon pass away, but let us awake from this dangerous stupor. The night is far past, and the day is at hand. Let us arise and pray Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. Abandon us not to temptation, but deliver us from evil. Amen.

T. E. ADAMS.

Dear Restitution:

I should be glad if there is room in the paper, to address my new brotherhood, just one time if no more permitted, I want to say to you all that I am only an infant in the gospel, although I have lived for 25 years, most of which time I was without hope, and without God. About two months ago I and my wife and three others came to the knowledge of the truth realizing the purpose for which we were created, and we then pressed forward out of darkness into Christ Jesus, with the aid of Father G. W. Herron, who has been preaching the gospel of Christ for many years.

Any one wishing to write to me, I would be truly glad and will answer promptly. My address is Deerfield, Mo.

We ask an interest in the prayers of the righteous, that we may be faithful to the end, that we may receive the promises made to Abraham and his seed, which we are to gain through faith, repentance and baptism into his name.

We have a body [illegible] seven, who assemble together each Sunday at 11 o'clock, where the gospel is preached by Bro. G. W. Herron, who has [illegible] the one faith will stand.

May the time soon come when all evil shall be cast down, and the Word of God have a hearing on earth. May we be remembered in all prayers. We remain in hope of a home in the kingdom of God.

JAMES J. HERRON.

Afflictions and persecutions are the tests by which Christian character is tried.

Prophetic Anticipation.

The prophet Isaiah in his foresight of coming events saw the former things passing away and the promised future restoration taking place. He then gets his eye upon the canvas, and seeing the watchmen rushing the good news of coming glory from hill to vale, he breaks out in stirring appeals, "Awake, awake, put on thy strength, O Zion, put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city, for henceforth there shall come no more into thee, the uncircumcised and the unclean." "Shake thyself from the dust." Rejoice, rejoice, the jubilee is coming. The trumpeters have got the cry and they are sounding the alarm and repeating the grand message of glad tidings of the soon coming change. Then he gives a glowing description of those that bear the heavenly message. "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation, that saith unto Zion Thy God reigneth."

Then the prophet identifies the watchmen. "Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice, with the voice together shall they sing. For they shall see eye to eye when the Lord shall bring again Zion." The watchmen must bear the call to duty and they must also see the coming events that they are to herald in order to fill this mould in bringing in the results of this prophecy. And when the inquiry comes, "Watchman, what of the night," the answer comes, "The morning cometh and also the night." They see eye to eye, or alike relative to the coming glory and the reign of Jesus Christ upon the throne of his father David. To this end have we not seen and heard this harmony in the proclamation, "Behold he cometh?" And have not the watchmen voiced it together? And have they not together sung the same cheering words, "You will see the Lord coming," and all the expectant believers have united in the song. Has not this been our experience in our half-century warfare with this specific message?

Then does it not tally with the prophetic program, and is it not in the very right time to usher in the restoration and bring about Paradise restored? And does it not show that we are with the prophet in the fulfilment of his anticipation, when he says. "The redeemed of the Lord shall return and come with singing unto Zion, and everlasting joy shall be upon their heads; they shall obtain gladness, and sorrow and mourning shall flee away." Now comes Isaiah's shouting time for all nations. "Break forth into joy, sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem, for the Lord hath comforted his people, he hath redeemed Jerusalem." "And all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God." It is soon coming. The Scriptures cannot be broken. So we harmonize with the prophet and break forth into joy, with the hope of soon seeing the redeemed of the Lord coming to Paradise restored, their Eden home.—L. Boutelle in Crisis.

Cowardice finds little mercy in the final judgment. In the Christian life there is reason to fear that men may be controlled by it. Our Lord warned his disciples of their danger in this respect—"Whosoever shall be ashamed of me and my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy angels." It is possible to profess discipleship to Christ and be ashamed of his "words." There are doctrines he proclaimed that are repulsive to human wisdom which there is a temptation to ignore. Silence, when his "words" are assailed, may be the token that we are ashamed of the gospel.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Dead Christians are Asleep.

Editor Democrat: Dr. Briggs is wrong and Dr. Birch is right. In the debate on the floor of the general assembly of the Presbyterian church, Dr. Briggs quotes Dr. Birch as saying: "There have been those who taught the sleep of pious souls. For in his argument he said, 'all dead Christians are asleep.'" The assembly laughed aloud at this. Nevertheless, if this statement of Dr. Birch is clearly proved by the Bible, it is the strongest argument that was used or could be used to overthrow Dr. Briggs' theory of sanctification, or purgatory at death. The testimonies of prophets and apostles and the Son of God are very numerous and plain that "dead Christians are asleep." Let us look at a few as a sample of many. "And the Lord said unto Moses, behold thou shalt sleep with thy fathers,' Deut. xxxi. 16. What was King David's hope? "As for me I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness (Psalms xvii. 15). Peter, in his memorable speech on the day of Pentecost, said "Let me freely speak unto you of the Patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, for David hath not ascended into the heavens." (Acts ii. 29-34.) "So David slept with his fathers and was buried in the city of David." (First Kings ii. 10.)

Take the testimony of Job, another patriarch. "So man lieth down and riseth not; till the heavens be no more. They shall not awake nor be raised out of their sleep. If a man die shall he live again? All the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change come. Thou shalt call and I will answer thee. Thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands." (Job xiv. 12-14). The testimony of Isaiah is similar: "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise." "Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust; for thy dew is as dew of the herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead." "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself, as it were, for a little moment until the indignation be overpast. For behold the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity; the earth also shall disclose her blood and no more cover her slain." (Isa. xxvi. 19, 20, 21). Paul writes: "For the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and the trumpet of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we be forever with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words." (1 Thes. iv. 16, 17, 18). The apostle would not have his "brethren ignorant concerning them who are asleep that ye sorrow not even as others who have no hope."

What did he say was their hope? Let the next verse answer. "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also who sleep in Jesus, will God bring with Him," or as "He brought again from the dead the Lord Jesus." "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life." (Dan. xii. 2). The eternal life promised will be after the awaking from the sleep of death, if the prophet was told the truth by a holy angel. If Dr. Briggs had understood his Bible as well as Dr. Birch, he could have shown his opponents were in a great fog, too. We commend to both parties Psalm cxlvi. 3-4: "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."—*E. CHRISTIANITY alone can give to man two great sources of inward joy;—The exercise of love towards a deserving object, and the exercise of hope terminating on some high and assured happiness! *

THE Church of God scattered abroad are introduced to Bro. and Sister Fretwell, of Danville, V., whom we were privileged to baptize into Christ at that place on the 18th inst. May they prove faithful, and guard the sacred name they have taken till the Master calls for those who are his. We trust, too, that they will water the seed of the kingdom we sowed there, whenever they have an opportunity, not forgetting there are several others who are convinced of the truth and will be condemned by it if they do not forsake all and follow Christ through evil report and good. *

The Woman's Seed. No. 14.

Our readers are requested to bear in mind that we are not writing about some pre-existent person, but the Son sent forth by God, made of a woman, in fulfillment of the promise that her Seed should crush the head of the Serpent. If there be anything revealed concerning any other Son we have not seen it. In Rom. i. 1, Paul says he was called, and became a servant of the promised one, and gives his origin. He was made, created, came into existence. Of what was he made? Ans., of the spermatos—seed of David, and therefore a legal heir to his throne. And being thus made by the direct power of God he was God's Son, and therefore legal heir of God also; heir of all things, promised all things set before him. This is the character he sustained in the flesh, or position he occupied as a Son of God in flesh. But he laid down his life; death had dominion over him for a short time, and then he lived again: and what of his resurrection life? Was it according to flesh? No! in Rom. vi. 10 we read that he lived by God; and death could no more dominate him; and the 4th verse of chapter one says he was declared the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness (i. e. according to the Scriptures inspired by that spirit) 1 Cor. xv. 4, by the resurrection from the dead. If words mean anything he was not the Son of God in that sense before. In 2 John vii. we are told that many deceivers went forth into the world who confessed not that Jesus Anointed came in the flesh; and that this constituted them antichrists. We believe and confess what they did not. This is followed by the admonition to "look to yourselves, that we lose not those things which we have wrought, but that we receive a full reward." We are sorry to know that many only believe a part of the truth, that Jesus the Anointed came in flesh. By this we mean that they believe a part of Jesus Anointed came in the flesh, and part did not. This is a serious matter in the light of this Scripture; for the 9th verse says: "Every one who goes beyond, and does not abide in the doctrine of the Anointed One, has not God." Diaglott. The testimony is clear that he was made of a woman, and it is God's testimony of his Son, and he expects us to believe it.

John viii. 58 is often brought up as a proof that Jesus pre-existed; "Verily, verily I say unto you, before Abraham was, I am." As Paul in Gal. iii. 16 says Christ is the seed of Abraham, that would make the child exist before his father; a most unnatural construction. Let us take the Diaglott rendering of the 56th verse and see how it helps remove the difficulty. "And Abraham ardently desired that he might see my day, and he saw it and was glad." As the day of Christ has not yet come Abraham did not really see it, except by faith in what was disclosed by revelation or promise. The intense blindness or darkness of the Jewish audience of our Lord caused them to suppose he meant that he existed before Abraham and Abraham saw him. The puzzle is, how those who near two thousand years later know the Lord's day has not yet come, can be deluded as were the Jews who did not know what day he was speaking of. It was Jesus, he of Bethlehem and Nazareth who uttered the words in question, or rather the original, rendered, "Before Abraham was, I am;" and we know Jesus of Nazareth descended from Abraham and did not exist before Abraham; indeed the seed was added because of transgressions on the part of Abraham's children, to hold them together so that the coming one should be Abraham's Seed and David's Seed as well as the Seed of the Woman. It remains with believers in pre-existence to prove WHO pre-existed as a person, in view of all the testimony that points to Bethlehem and Nazareth and Calvary and Joseph's New Tomb. Plainly Jesus was not before his father Abraham; and hence he did not say he was before him, as the common version makes it appear that he did. This is the way it is rendered by C. F. Smith of Edinburgh, a Bible critic of no mean ability: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, before Abraham is born, I am;" (born from above,) of necessity this must be so; because he is the Beginning of the Creation of God—the new creation, and as he derived his natural life from Abraham, Abraham will derive his spiritual life from his Seed the Anointed, the first-born from the dead.

Mr. Thos. Nesbet, of Glasgow, Editor of the Investigator, renders John viii. 58 as follows, to show his sense of the force of the original, and not as an absolutely literal rendering. "Before Abraham-comes-about-for himself (genesthai) I am existing." And adds: "By Jesus' use of the aorist here we are asked to look at Abraham at that point in his experience when he enters upon his reward; but prior to this Jesus exists, hence his superiority. If Jesus had wished to say, "Before Abraham was," instead of genesthai, he could have said egineto, imperfect indicative, middle—was existing. The fact that he did not say so is proof that he did not wish to speak as the translators and their revisers alike have made him do."

And it is with no little pleasure that we now give our readers the rendering of Dr. Robt. Young, author of the Analytical Concordance. It is as follows: "Verily, verily, I say to you, before Abraham's coming I am." Yes; he is already,—Abraham is not yet, and will not be till all the faithful are. This is the divine arrangement. see Heb. xi. 39, 40. As Dr. Young was a profound scholar, and a Presbyterian, his rendering is peculiarly valuable, inasmuch as it testifies against his own creed, and harmonizes with that of Nesbet, who understands the truth as it is in Jesus, and is a classic authority besides.

Our attention is called to 2 Cor. viii. 9, and the question asked, "In what did the riches and poverty of Christ consist?"

It is assumed that the words was rich refer to ages before he was born, and that he laid them aside and submitted to abject poverty. We have again and again proven that as a person the Lord Jesus did not exist before he was born of Mary, and was, therefore, previous to his birth neither rich nor poor; and the wealth of testimony to this effect is such that this one passage cannot be in conflict with the rest of the Scriptures on this subject. And we submit, first that both the riches and the poverty are in the same tense; and the sentence word for word would read this way: "For you know the favor of our Lord Jesus, that on account of you he lived in poverty, being rich, in order that you by his poverty might be enriched."

Secondly, the learned tell us that the word ptochos (poor) is not used, but a verb in the aorist tense and active voice, showing that while he was doing something which indicated an abject state of poverty, he was then rich, eptocheuse, plousios oon. And the Greek verb ptocheuo having no equivalent in English as a verb, we are obliged to use both the noun and the verb to express the action of practising self-denial in living a life of poverty, while he was rich; so there is not the shadow of proof of a pre-existent state of wealth.

But to the question, "In what did the riches and poverty of Christ consist?" First, of power; although he had no place to lay his head, and was hungry, and thirsty, and moneyless he could feed hungry thousands, could open the eyes of the blind, unstop the ears of the deaf, could raise the dead to life, obtain money for taxes from a fish, could rebuke the winds and the waves. All the powers of nature were entrusted to him. Secondly, by birth he was the King of Israel and Son of God. Surely never was one so rich, and no one could take a lower place. He was among them as one who serves; at last he was even stripped of his clothes and his life, everything was he stripped of but his own integrity and his Father's promise.

John vi. 46, is produced as proof of Christ's pre-existence, because he had seen the Father. To get to the truth here we must remember what is said in chap. i. 18, "No man hath seen God at any time, the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him;" so Jesus while on earth was in the bosom of the Father; and our own experience and usage of words teach us how he was in the Father's bosom. The Gentiles are now in Abraham's bosom, and we often speak of bosom friends in the same sense as Jesus does of himself and the Father. He whom the Father sent spake the words of the Father, and hence he said to Phillip, "Henceforth you know him, (the Father,) and have seen him," John xiv. 7. But how had they seen him? Had they seen the Father's person? No! And the person of Jesus who was speaking was not the person of the Father, so we let Jesus explain to Phillip, "Believest thou that I am in the Father and the Father in me, the words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself, but the Father who dwells in me does the works." So that Jesus was the temple of the Father, who dwelt in him by the Spirit which was given to him without measure. His mentality was thus divinely magnetized so that he lived in God, although his eyes had not seen the Father he saw him in a more exalted sense, and the words of Jesus to Phillip teach us that if we listen to his divine teachings we shall also see the Father in the same sense.

Phil. ii. 6-8, is supposed to teach pre-existence; but in order to make it teach pre-existence it is necessary to assume that a pre-existent son in the form of God was made in the form or likeness of men; but Paul says it was the anointed Jesus, who, we know, was born of Mary. Secondly, it is necessary to assume that a pre-existent son humbled himself and became obedient unto the death of the cross. This is a great mistake, for the eighth verse shows that, "being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto the death of the cross," and because of this God hath highly exalted him, so that the argument for pre-existence crumbles, and falls, having no foundation save assumptions. We direct our readers to the 11th verse where they may see that nothing is said of confessing him to be the pre-existent spirit son of God, but that the anointed Jesus, born of Mary is Lord. This localizes, defines, limits, and identifies him as the promised woman's seed.

John vi. 62, is considered to be an invulnerable text, "What and if ye shall see the Son of Man ascend where he was before?" Before what? Before he was born? Was that what Jesus meant? We think not. By beginning back at the 47th verse it will be seen that he discourses of life, and the means of attaining to it. He was the living bread; but the Jews were perplexed and asked, How can this man give us his flesh to eat? When he told them he would give his flesh for the life of the world, He was telling them of his death of course, and assured them that if they partook of him they would live by him, (v. 57) and not only live, but live forever (v. 58). Even his disciples thought this a hard saying, and murmured to this effect: so he said to them, "Doth this offend you? What and if ye see the Son of Man ascend up where he was before? It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing. The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life." Note, he spake of his death and now their life depended upon it, but their minds were too obtuse, they did not comprehend his meaning, could not understand how they could live by him after he was shed his blood; so he says to them, "Doth this offend you?" "What if you see the Son of Man ascend up where he was before? the Jews. It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh that profiteth nothing." He expected to be quickened by the Spirit, and he was; God raised him, and the life was [illegible] by him. And he [illegible] with them for forty days, and ate and drank with them, and was identified by them, so that [illegible] Peter all [illegible] say they [illegible] to a hope [illegible] by his resurrection. This [illegible] of their faith [illegible] that they could so clearly see [illegible] of death for themselves. "The words that I speak unto you are spirit and they are life" were comprehended at last. Then the phrase, "What and if ye see the Son of man ascend up where he was before?" [illegible] furnish the key to the subject for all. We [illegible] never might have possessed, [illegible] the Son of Man had not pre-existed. He was the woman's seed.

What we have written on this subject has been written with the hope that others may see God's Truth as a harmonious whole, and have clearer conceptions of the Great Redemptive Scheme, and praise God more and more for the exceeding riches of His grace and the vastness of his love in sending forth his Son made of a woman to live a suffering life and die a sacrificial death, that we might have everlasting life through him. And be assured if we ever do obtain the crown of life we will ascribe to him all the praise. Blessed Jesus. *

Selected.

The Cost of Care Taking.

There are very few among the working people of the present day, who have much conception of the cost of anything in the way of labor, except physical strength and skill. With some there is a determination to avoid all care, they want to know what their work is, and do it and have it done with. They wish to work just so many hours, and then to be through and stop.

Of course if men work in this way someone must look out for them, must find them work to do, a place to work in, tools to work with, materials for their work, must take charge of the establishment when they go away at night and have it ready for them when they return in the morning, must take the product of their labor to market, sell it, collect the pay for it, run the risk of loss, swindling, and bad debts, must have the wages ready every week, must keep hands employed in slack times or else find them missing when wanted, must run the risk of falling markets, buying something at a high price and selling at a low price; and to accomplish all these things there must be a certain amount of capital, either invested at first or accumulated in the lapse of years without which it is impossible to carry on such a business.

It follows therefore that whoever undertakes to do business, must allow a certain margin of profit to cover losses, provide against contingencies, weather storms, and carry work successfully along; and the larger the business is the larger the investment of surplus must be. The capital is ordinarily gathered through gradual accumulations; and if a small amount is gained every year eventually the business comes to stand upon a secure basis.

But here we encounter difficulty, for there are men who say, "We want what we earn; here is a man who does nothing but sit in his office and manage affairs, he lives in an elegant house while we live in poverty; he has leisure, while we toil incessantly; he has luxury, while we can hardly find the necessities of life; and we demand that he increase our wages, and allow us a more equitable division of the results and profits of our labor. Our work gives him his comforts and his luxuries, labor produces all these things, and labor should enjoy its reward."

This is all simple, plain and specious; but there are difficulties even in the way of carrying out such a plan as this. These men as a rule refuse to care for themselves; they have never started to build up a business however small; they have never saved the pennies and shillings which would furnish them with the capital to start even in a small way, and they are unwilling to bear the care that is involved in any such undertaking. The men who take the care have a right to be paid for it. No man is bound to find work for another man; no man is bound to furnish men tools, or a place to work in; no man is bound to take the products of another man's labor, pay him in advance for it, and run the risk of selling it and getting his pay; consequently if a man does this for one man or for men, he must take something from what they have earned to cover the expenses of transacting the business and provide against the risks therewith connected.

The writer was conversing once with a venerable man who had spent most of his life in a certain business which, founded by his father, managed by himself, and continued by his sons, had been carried on without interruption for about eighty years. It was a useful business, the manufacture of an article of universal demand, it was a legitimate and reasonably safe business, and had been conducted without disaster by three generations, and was affording a support to the different persons who were connected with it. The help employed had usually served for long periods of time, and in old age had been cared for when they were no longer able to earn wages as in their more vigorous days. The results of the business were an extensive plant, rent free, and, so far as could be seen, a business as permanent as could be expected in ordinary cases. The venerable man who for years had conducted the business, stated that during his father's life he had sometimes thought that they might have paid larger wages to their employees; but when he came to have charge of the business himself he entered into a careful calculation concerning the matter, the result of which showed that if from the beginning they had paid twelve and a half cents a day more to each of the employees, the result would have been to have absorbed the entire capital, consumed the plant, and wiped out the whole business.

And yet twelve and a half cents a day would have been regarded as a very moderate advance in wages. Doubtless many of their employees, if they had desired an increase of wages would not have been content with so small an addition as that; but had their wages been increased by that small amount, the result would have been no business, no manufactory, and no wages for anybody. This result is frequently reached. A large majority of the men who engage in business fail, and frequently their failure is brought about by the rash and unreasonable demands of persons who want more pay, spread discontent, get what they can, and spend it in dram shops, while the employer, struggling against fate, strives in vain to meet his bills and continue his business, and at last yields to the inevitable, goes into bankruptcy and into the grave.

It is not likely that workingmen intend to cause such ruin by their demands, but they are ignorant of business, and often are not inclined to learn. The great object in life with them is more wages, and no matter how great the amount of wages they may recieve, they spend every penny as they go and then want more. The more care people take of themselves, the less care others must take of them: this reduces the expense of care taking, and gives the laborer a larger share of the fruits of his productive toil. But persons who decline to take care are liable to act unwisely, and rashly, and finally to drag themselves and others into trouble and poverty, from which they find no way to escape. Temperance, frugality, contentment and fidelity, bring better rewards in the end than wastefulness, murmuring, envying and covetousness.—The Safeguard.

If a man be compassionate toward the affliction of others it shows that his heart is like the noble tree that is wounded itself, when it gives the balm.

A Day of Reckoning.

There comes in every life a time of reckoning; it may be to-day, it may be to-morrow, it may be long hence, but it is sure to come. To-day one may be gay, light-hearted, thoughtless, unteachable, wilful and frivolous, and full of whims, notions and fancies; but the time will come when all this will have passed away, and when strong, solemn, and distressing realities will confront the soul.

The man who hates instruction and despises reproof, will by and by end, when it is too late, the folly of such a course. The giddy and light-hearted girl who makes light of danger, and heeds no admonition may in the time to come know the bitterness of shame and sorrow, the anguish of a weary heart and a blasted life.

How many are there who look back on wasted opportunities, misspent time, and neglected privileges and say, "Oh, if I could have the chance I once had!" But neglected privileges do not return, time squandered is gone forever, health wasted may never be regained, and the end of a few gay hours of godlessness and recklessness is a blasted life, a hopeless death, and an early grave. The day of reckoning comes, tears cannot turn it aside, sorrows and regrets cannot put it off; "for what a man soweth that shall he also reap."

Many a man is in prison to-day reaping what he has sown. Many a man with blasted health and shipwrecked life is paying the penalty of his gay and godless years. Many a woman smitten, ashamed, disgraced, crushed, ruined and broken hearted, is to-day reaping the results of recklessness which tossed the head in independence and paid no heed to the warnings of kindly friends.

The day of reckoning comes, it will come; and if it comes not in this life there will still be a reckoning day. The great Judge of the quick and dead will appear, and men who have scoffed at God, mocked at Christ, and scorned at religion must meet the Judge. There will be sorrow then, when sorrow will not avail. There will be earnestness then, but it will be the earnestness of despair. The reckoning day will have come, and every man shall give account of himself to God. The scoffer, the mocker, the votary of vice and lust; the man who hardens his heart and blinds his mind, must yet meet his Judge. Oh, to make timely preparation, and to be found of Him in peace.

"That awful day will surely come,
The appointed hour makes haste,
When I before the Judge shall stand,
And pass the solemn test.

How careful then ought I to live,
With what religious fear;
Who such a strict account must give
For my behavior here."

The Christian.

What the Religion of Jesus Does.

It gives a peace that the world cannot take away.

It makes men pay debts that the law cannot collect.

It makes women stop talking scandal.

It makes children obey their parents.

It makes men do good with their money.

It makes those who have been vicious strive continually to control themselves.

It makes the drunkard stop buying beefsteak for the saloon keeper and go to providing for his own family.

It throws the jailer out of employment and raises the workman's wages.

It builds hospitals and asylums and furnishes the money to run them.

It makes men unselfish and women more lovable.

It throws a bright light into the valley of death and shows that there is a city of eternal beauty just beyond it.

A real Christian seldom sees a defect in his neighbor. A pure lake reflects the beautiful sky, the clouds and the whole over-hanging trees; but when it is ruffled it reflects nothing that is pure. A bad man seldom sees a good trait in his neighbor. An imperfect glass reflects nothing correctly, but shows its own deficiency. A perfect mirror reflects nothing but bright and pure images.

Christian Charity.

It is not at all uncommon for brethren to refuse to forgive another for a word or deed that they would have full confidence in asking the Lord to forgive them, had it been their transgression. It is, indeed, strange that when brethren have need every day to ask the Lord to forgive them their numerous trespasses that they will be unforgiving to others. How many of us must be barred from praying if we must first say, "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us." We remind the Lord of our weakness and pray him in mercy to forgive. We forget the human failing in our brethren and hold them to strict account for what they do. We are so very often impenitent, and yet if our brethren have offended us we demand of them that they fall down at our feet and in tears beg our forgiveness. We acknowledge to our heavenly Father that we have sinned against him knowingly and ignorantly and pray him to freely forgive it all in Christ.

We refuse to believe that our brother does anything unintentionally, and instead of forgiving him in Christ, hold him to strict account for everything that we may imagine that he has thought, done or said. There is great need for us to remember the admonition to have fervent charity among ourselves. Messenger of Peace.

Kissing Mother.

A father talking to a careless daughter, said:

I want to speak to you of your mother. It may be that you have noticed a careworn look upon her face lately. Of course it has not been brought there by any act of yours, still it is your duty to chase it away. I want you to get up to-morrow morning and get breakfast; and when your mother comes and begins to express her surprise, go right up to her and kiss her on the mouth. You can't imagine how it will brighten her dear face.

Besides, you owe her a kiss or two. Away back, when you were a little girl, she kissed you when no one else was tempted by your fever-tainted breath and swollen face. You were not as attractive then as you are now. And through those years of childish sunshine and shadows, she was always ready to cure, by the magic of a mother's kiss, the little, dirty, chubby hands, whenever they were injured in those skirmishes with the rough old world.

And then the midnight kisses with which she routed so many bad dreams as she leaned above your pillow, have all been on interest these long, long years.

Of course she is not so pretty and kissable as you are; but if you had done your share of the work during the past ten years, the contrast would not be so marked.

Her face has more wrinkles than yours, and yet if you were sick, that face would appear far more beautiful than an angel's, as it hovered over you, watching every opportunity to minister to your comfort, and every one of those wrinkles would seem to be bright wavelets of sunshine chasing each other over the dear old face.

She will leave you one of these days. These burdens, if not lifted from her shoulders, will break her down. Those rough, hard hands, that have done many necessary things for you, will be crossed upon her lifeless breast.

Those neglected lips that gave you your first baby kiss, and those sad, tired eyes will be forever closed, and then you will appreciate your mother; but it will be too late!

The Bible is the only true history that begins in eternity and ends in eternity. All other histories are unsatisfactory because incomplete on the most vital question.

One of the easiest things for some people to do is to persuade themselves that it is not their duty to do anything.

Unfaithful Shepherds.

"Take heed therefore unto yourselves and to all the flock, * * * To feed the Church of God which He hath purchased with His own blood."

O what are the shepherds doing?
My sheep are wandering about
With none to look after their goings,
None to seek them out.

My sheep are starving and dying,
[illegible] bleak and bare,
And [illegible] souls are crying,
[illegible] and shelter there.

[illegible] have come to succor them
[illegible] them out in the cold,
[illegible]
[illegible] the fold.

[illegible] shepherds, awake!
[illegible] your calling [illegible]
[illegible] "bread from Heaven," [illegible] out of the rock,"

[illegible] heard you tell them
[illegible] Savior to save from all sin,
[illegible] waited long for His coming,
[illegible] and thirsty within.

[illegible] out your people, my shepherds
[illegible] fulness of joy to-day.
The Savior is waiting to bless you,
[illegible] His sweet call and obey!

[illegible]
That washes away every stain,
[illegible] the great salvation
Through faith in the blood of the Lamb.

Be filled with the love of Jesus,
Receive the anointing within,
[illegible] in your power and proclaim Him
[illegible] that saves from all sin.

John's First Epistle.

Chapter 4.

1. Beloved, do not trust to every spirit, but test the spirits, whether they be of God:

Because many false-prophets have gone out into the Cosmos.

2. In this way recognize the Spirit of God. Any Spirit that confesseth Jesous Christ to have come in flesh is of God.

3. And any spirit that doth not confess the Jesous is not of God: And this is the (spirit) of the anti-christ which ye have heard is coming: and now is in the Cosmos already.

4. Ye are of God, little children, and ye have overcome them, because the one in you is greater than the one in the cosmos.

5. They are of the cosmos. Therefore they talk from out the cosmos and the cosmos hearkeneth to them.

6. We are of God. The one who knoweth God hearkeneth to us. He who is not of God doth not hearken to us. By this we know the Spirit of the truth and the Spirit of the error.

7. Beloved, let us love one another, because the love is of God, and any one who is loving (sanctified love here) hath been begotten of God and knoweth God. The one who is not loving doth not know God, because God is love.

9. In this way hath the love of God been made manifest in us, namely in that God hath sent his only-born into the cosmos, that through him we might live.

10. In this is the love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us and sent his Son as a token of favor concerning our sins.

11. Beloved, if God so loved us we also ought to love one another.

12. No one hath ever beheld God. If we love one another God is abiding in us, and his love hath been perfected in us.

13. In this way we know that we are abiding in him and he in us, namely in that he hath given us of his Spirit.

14. And we have beheld, and we testify that the Father did send the Son a Saviour of the cosmos.

15. Whoever shall confess that Jesous is the Son of God. God is abiding in him and he in God.

16. And we have recognized and put faith in love that the God in us hath. God is love, and the one who is abiding in the love is abiding in God and God is abiding in him.

17. In this way hath the love in relation to us been perfected in us, that we may have boldness in the day of the trial. Because even as he is are we also in this cosmos.

18. There is no fear in the love, but the perfected love casteth out the fear, because the fear hath that which holdeth in check, and the one who feareth hath not been perfected in the love.

19. We love God because he first loved us.

20. If any one shall have said, I love God and hateth his brother, he is a liar. For the one who doth not love his brother whom he hath seen, cannot love God whom he hath not seen.

21. And this commandment we have from him, that the one who loveth God loveth his brother also.

COMMENT.

"Trust to" instead of "believe" R. V.

"In flesh" instead of "in the flesh." R. V.

"The Jesous" instead of "Jesous." R. V. This specific Jesous meant, this person so known and recognized in that day. The name was not an uncommon name in Israel.

"Them" refers to the people possessed with this spirit of anti-christ.

"Talk from out the cosmos" instead of "as of the world," R. V.,—the idea being that the source of their talk was the cosmos and its spirit instead of God and the heavenly order of things.

"The truth" and "the error" instead of "truth" and "error" in the abstract. R. V. The truth of the Gospel and Revelation is a specific thing aside from the general truth, and relatively much more important. This is just what "the world" does not see and the church is not any too clear-sighted in this matter.

"Hath been begotten" instead of "is begotten." R. V.

"Only-born" instead of "only-begotten," a much more important difference than may seem at first thought. "Born from among the dead." "Brought-forth" resurrectionally is what is meant, not begotten spiritually which of course is also true. Remember that Jesous was the first and only-born of many brethren at the time of which John is speaking.

"A token of favor concerning our sins" instead of a "propitiation for our sins" R. V. in the commonly asserted theological sense.

"Put faith in the love that the God in us hath" instead of "have believed the love which God hath in us" or "in our case" R. V. an entirely different thought from what John wrote out.

"In this way hath the love in relation to us been perfected in us" instead of "Herein is love made perfect with us." R. V. What does this statement mean? I understand what John means, but I don't understand what the translators have made him say.

"In the day of the trial" instead of "in the day of judgment." R. V. I have grave doubts whether John here refers to "the great day of judgment." I think he refers to "the trial of each man's faith," "the fiery trial" Paul calls it.

"There is no fear in the love" instead of "love" R. V. "The fear" instead of "fear" R. V.

"But the perfected love casteth out the fear" instead of "but perfect love casteth out fear." R. V.

"Because the fear hath that which holdeth in check" instead of "hath torment" C. V. or "punishment" R. V.

The argument here is specific not general. John is not arguing as a philosopher, but as a polemic. The case is not a general, but a specific one, and this is the case of humanity arraigned at the bar of God on a specific charge of guilt. Therefore "the fear" and "the love" not "fear" and "love" in general.

"We love God" instead of "we love" for the same reason and also because it is the best text.

CHAS. GARDNER.

"His Father is at his side."

Yesterday the writer was at work on a railway station. B. & O. R. R. near Washington, D. C. A three year old boy was with his father on the platform: father and child were standing very near the track and looking in the opposite direction. the Cincinnati Express was coming at full speed. I took it for granted that father and child would at least "bout face," before the train passed. but neither one moved.

I asked the father afterward if the child had no sense of fear? "Not when his father is at his side," he answered.

The incident set me to thinking, and I thought that I would be so much more restful if I could feel secure in the presence of danger, like this little boy. Yes life is full of danger. risk, and often where one would least expect it.

A B. & O. conductor the other day passing from one car to another, while he was in the act of making the step onto the opposite platform, the coupling pin broke and he was let down in front of the flying train. But, there are other dangers, and if our Heavenly Father is not at our side when they come upon us like an express train, we may lose more than a leg or an arm.

The loss of one's temper is a more serious loss than an ordinary R. R. accident. Do people lose their temper? I think so, that is, their good temper and disposition.

It is not necessary to go back thousands of years for illustrations, (Moses' day.)

Just now a case presents itself, (the case of a woman.) A certain woman near here, recently buried her third husband. She is a member of the Methodist Church, and is, in her own estimation, and in the estimation of other people an honest, upright woman, but as a matter of fact, she lost her temper or good disposition many years ago, and did not know that it was gone, (she dont know it now,) but all three of her husbands became drunkards, and died drunkards, but before they died they all three most earnestly asserted that it was their wife's bad temper drove them to be drunkards, and death!

Yes women as well as men, need the presence of the Divine Father at their side, in order to maintain the Christian Spirit. or temper we call it. The Bible has much to say about the spirit. If we have not the Spirit of Christ, (no matter how well we are fixed in other matters,) we are none of his.

Conference Report.

The annual conference of the churches of God in Iowa met according to notice at Clarksville, in Butler Co. June 2nd, and continued until the night of the 11th. There was a good attendance which increased until the last. The preaching brethren present were G. M. Myers, A. J. Eychaner, Geo. Moyer, H. T. Baker, and R. J. Hill.

The time was well filled with varied exercises, as Bible readings, social and prayer meetings—conference institute work in which subjects pertaining to the good of the cause, and growth in grace and knowledge were discussed by both brothers and sisters,—preaching and business meetings, etc. A marked spirit of love and good fellowship prevailed throughout the entire meeting, the interest increasing to the last.

The subjects for the Bible readings were 1st prayer, 2nd baptism. The subjects studied and discussed were church organization, church building. church and Sunday school support, our educational work and fund, contributions, how made, duties of evangelists, elders and deacons, how to secure a general attendance at conference, family prayer, diligence in business, etc.

There were able sermons preached every night, and a part of the time in the afternoon upon subjects pertaining to the faith once delivered to the saints, obedience and Christian-living. Every topic considered was introduced by a short sermon or talk by some member, so that the whole meeting was made profitable and entertaining.

The conference board chosen for the coming year are G. M. Myers, chairman, A. J. Eychaner, treasurer, Libbie Palmer, secretary, Mrs. A. J. Eychaner corresponding secretary.

The reports for the year show the following evangelists report: whole number of sermons preached 163, number of social meetings 22, number of persons baptized 29, number of Sunday schools superintended 23. Evangelist received from the fund $257.63, amount received from all other sources $37.90, total receipts for the year $297.53.

Bro. H. T. Baker from Texas, reported his work here since his arrival here Feb. 28, number of sermons 30, amount contributed where he preached $20.90. Treasurer reported money in treasury at beginning of year $70.54, whole amount contributed during the year, including Bro. Baker's report $125.83. The amount paid to F. W. Herrick for labor with the tent $30.41. Report of incidental fund shows the amount carried over from last year $80.88. Amount paid in during the year $37.55. In educational fund, total amount carried over and received, with interest $140.81.

Bro. Myers reported one year's tuition paid for by himself at Des Moines, and forty-six weeks at Dixon, Ill., to be donated to the work, waiting until needed by some one who wishes to prepare for the ministry of the Word.

Bro. Eychaner reported a request for such assistance from a young man in Dakota. The conference instructed him to ascertain the young man's worthiness and needs.

The program of work arranged for the work of the coming year, calls for about $700, over $400 of which was raised at the meeting. Bro. Eychaner has kindly consented to go out again as an evangelist after a vacation of a few weeks, in which to arrange for a home for his family that will be more convenient to the railroad, and where he can have better school privileges for his children. He has labored hard in the field for several years and needs rest, but at present no one seems available that can fill his place. His record of work speaks for itself, his reward is in the hands of the Master and will be sure. Bro. H. L. Baker will go with him as an assistant evangelist.

The following resolutions were adopted by the conference: 1st Resolved, that each individual believer of the gospel in the state of Iowa shall consider it to be his or her duty to furnish the corresponding secretary (Mrs. A. J. Eychaner) the names and addresses of all believers with whom they are acquainted in the state. Mrs. Eychaner's address is Irving, Iowa Co., Iowa; any change will be announced. 2nd Resolved, that we the members of the churches of God in Iowa, assembled in conference at Clarksville recognize a marked improvement, both in the business and educational management THE RESTITUTION published at Plymouth, Indiana, during the past year, and hereby commend it for the growing spirit of liberality manifested, and we hope that the privilege of a still wider range of thought may find expression through its columns in the future. 3rd Resolved, that we hereby tender our thanks to the people of Clarksville for their kindness and liberality to all attending the conference, and to the young people for their kind and efficient assistance in the singing and music.

On Saturday afternoon we repaired to the river where Bro. Eychaner baptized two persons, a man and his wife into the Christ.

Conference adjourned to meet at the call of the executive board.

The Average Novel.

Again and again have we raised our voice and used our pen to warn people against the dangerous effects of following the reading of much of the cheap literature of the day. We do not condemn a book as dangerous because it is cheap; there are many works of value published in a cheap form. The greater part of the stories, however, are not worthy a place in the home. There is one thing about a cheap book, however, which we ought to remember. We step into a book-store and buy a cloth-bound volume of three hundred pages for twenty-three cents. We wonder how such a book can be produced for such a price. That book represents work performed at starvation wages. The greater part of it is done by girls, who are able to earn barely enough to keep body and soul together. When next you buy one of those cloth bound volumes for so small a sum, say to yourself, "This is the price of blood!"

The average novel is a natural outgrowth of the times in which we live. There is a demand for that which is coarse and deals with licentiousness. Novels of this class were produced in England and France years ago, but they were not in great demand in this country. As we have incorporated English and French ideas, we have come to have a literature of our own which is anything but a credit to us. Not that we have no good books but that the greater part of the stories in circulation in newspapers and in pamphlets are of the character indicated. In a recent article in the North American Review, George Manville Fenn says: "The novels of a century or so back were manly but coarse, and many a clever work retains its place on the bookshelves on account of its being licensed in its licentiousness by the brand, or hall mark, 'classic.' Then, as refinement obtained, we went through a phase of the morbidly sentimental, followed up by the sentimental romantic, which gave place in turn to productions of sterling worth, lasting up to and continued in the present day. In company with all these, of course, there were the importations from across the Channel clever, unprincipled, immoral, often filthy to a degree. In these, for the most part, the art of mystery was wanting. There was no room for it. The text was in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred sexuality. These had their readers naturally enough, but the hot-blooded exotic novel was neither popular nor plentiful."

This agrees with what we have already said. Mr. Fenn then goes on to speak of the world of to-day. He says: "Now we have changed all that. Another French fashion has been imported; it has obtained its hold upon a largely increasing clientele of readers, and is dubbed the gospel of nature. By them the honest, straightforward is pooh-poohed; Scott is a bore, Dickens a burlesque, Thackeray a tiresome satire, George Eliot old-fashioned and dull. The French novel, in short, a score or so of years ago, was read and not named; but is answerable for a new school of novelists who base themselves upon their French masters and imitate them as nearly as they dare; for there are reasons—patent reasons—not unconnected with circulation, which hinder the modern Gallicised writer from going as far as he probably would. We have held up to us masterpieces of nature and realism, and the sham philosophic but mighty efforts of a great brain, the works of Zola. One casts no slur upon the ability of the writers of these romances. They are Frenchmen, of France, and their ways are not ours. But the insidious work is going on and is having its effect. Naturally our writers are ruled by the demand. The success of one brings forth many imitators, and the result is that many of the books now published, notably those written by the so-called weaker sex, grow broader and stronger—certainly in more senses than one. The school of writers to whom we owe this advance, this imitative effort in letters, scorning the art of mystery in fiction, claim for their work that it is in its breadth and strength more masculine—they might add feminine, though the reader may wade through many a novel without finding a true woman—nothing but the animal feminine whom the Frank delights to portray. The influence is daily growing, and an example of its effects is plainly before us—an example almost ludicrous—for we find one of our principal newspapers giving its assurance (in answer to certain rumors) that the novel appearing in its columns has not been expurgated, but is exactly as it came from the novelist's pen.

"One might expect that with the advance of this class of narrative with naturalism so strongly to the fore, the old school of sensationalism would be beaten out of the field, but though the new writer, basing his fiction upon his French master, may out-Herod Herod and cause a massacre among the innocents he condemns, the mystery-lover will never be convinced, but will seek after his favorite food with as great a zest as ever. There is nothing repellant here: the natural desire to penetrate the occult is evoked, and in this lies the power which has won for many a work utterly wanting in truth to nature, plausibility and literary style—a work in fact of the most crude and rugged type—a fabulous circulation. It would be invidious to name such books, to pose as a judge, and give what at best would be only one opinion, but the question must have been asked by many a reader how it was that such farragoes of impossibilities—such tragi-burlesque played by abortive imitations of human life—could have enthralled their hundreds of thousands and kept their attention to the end. The answer is simple. It is the mystery of the story and the curiosity excited. These have a peculiar charm for most readers—most, for a tale of this kind with an ingenious, well-constructed plot partakes somewhat of the nature of the fabled Maelstrom. Even the lover of the vapid style of society novel, or of those dealing with afternoon calls and tea, liberally amalgated with upholstery and the latest fashions; the lady worshipper of the athletic giants who crush the gentle violets of society and break hearts because it is their nature to, and consequently go on macadamizing their life path with these brittle objects so liberally offered to them in novels; the patron of the libraries who is content with nothing less than character-studies, analyses of life, struggles against temptation, sexual or religious infidelity, stories of pure-minded church dignitaries fighting against doubt, or Barham's worst devil of all—the 'laughing woman with two bright eyes,' and who go through three volumes representing in Book I. the flitting fly, in Book II. the contacts with the web and the vain struggles, and in Book III. the rescue and cleansing of the tangled wings by faith, fighting or death: all these readers fall at times to the ordinary mystery in fiction. Their nature is too strong for him. The cover of the popular-sensation story is lifted with possibility a smile of contempt for the people who 'can devour such stuff,' and of course just to skim a few pages to see what it may be like. Or it may be by accident, for want of something better to hand. Then a few lines are read, and could the ingenious writer be looking on, and always supposing that in cleverness of construction and freshness of idea the story is one of the best of its class, he too would have his smile for the great-browed deep thinker and student of the higher questions and theories of the nineteenth century. For the reader has placed one foot in the literary whirlpool, the other follows, and in the vast majority of cases, complete immersion ensues; he starts on his career round and round, lost to everything but the insidious curiosity exciting plot of the book, till the brain hunger is excited, and with the desire thoroughly piqued, he reads on to the very end. Then the book is thrown down—possibly with a contemptuous, 'What trash!'"—Messiah's Herald.

A Sociable Man.

Mr. Perry was an exceedingly polite and temperate man. One day he met an acquaintance who called out: "Hello, Perry! I was just going to take a drink. Come in and take someting."

"Thank you," said Perry, "I don't care for anything."

"But," persisted the other, "come in and take something just for sociability's sake."

"I want to be sociable," answered Perry. "I am anxious to be sociable, but I can't drink with you."

"All right," growled the friend. "If you don't want to be sociable, I'll go without drinking."

The two men walked silently along for a minute or two, the sociable man in a state of great irritation, until Perry suddenly halted in front of a drug-store.

"I am not feeling well to-day," said he, with a pleasant smile, "and I think I'll go in here and get a dose of castor oil. Will you join me?"

"What!" exclaimed the other, "a dose of castor oil!"

"Yes; I'll pay for it."

"Ugh," cried the sociable man, with a very wry face, "I hate the stuff."

"But I want you to take a glass of oil with me just to be sociable, you know."

"I won't do it."

"Indeed, my friend," said Perry, gravely, "your sociable whiskey is just as distasteful to me as my sociable oil is to you. Don't you think I have as much right to be offended with you as you have with me?"

The sociable man saw the point, and it would be money, health, and morals saved, if the lesson could be firmly implanted in the minds of every young man in the land.

One of the perils of the church to-day is that the machinery and organizations that are bring multiplied on every hand absorbs the energies and vitality of the workers so that their time and strength are expended in keeping it in order and motion rather than in looking for immediate practical results.

Silas Haynes was born in Pickway Co. Ohio, May 27, 1818. Died June 3, 1893, at the home of his daughter, (Maggie Galvin,) aged 75 years and 7 days.

In 1832 he emigrated with his parents to Noble County, Ind. He was married to Margaret Rose, Nov. 17, 1839. He confessed the Lord as his Savior in early life. He united with the Old Christian Church in 1840. He with his family moved to Marion Co. Ia. there he and his wife united with a little band of Disciple Christians, and lived an honorable life.

In the yeas 1868, he and his wife embraced the doctrine of the second coming of our Blessed Lord, with power and great glory, to take unto Himself His great power and reign. A firm believer in the covenants of promises made to the fathers. He believed in the one faith, the hope of the gospel, the resurrection of the dead, for future life in the kingdom of God, when he comes and brings His reward with Him to reward all his saints as their work shall be. It was an anchor to his soul in the hour of death. He would often while on his death bed speak of the joy that will be in the morning of the resurrection. The union of loved ones, everlasting peace and joy, eternal life, freedom from sin and death, and the grave, from sorrowing and sighing, from disease and pain.

He leaves four sons and three daughters to mourn the loss of a loving companion that had journeyed through life fifty-three and one-half years, through joys and sorrows, a kind and affectionate father. We do not mourn as those that have no hope.

It was impossible to get one of our brethren to preach the funeral at the time of burial, but at some future time it will be preached. An able prayer was made at the grave, good songs were sung. The passages of Scripture selected and read were as follows, 4th and 5th chap. of 1 Thess. and the 15th of Cor. after which we saw him consigned to the silent tomb to await the coming of the Lord.

Yours in Christ.

Geo. W. Haynes.

At Argos, Ind. June 4, 1893, aged 52 years, 4 months, and 21 days, William A. Rupe.

He was born in Darke County, Ohio, in 1841. He has been a resident of Indiana since 1863, with the exception of a few years spent in Kansas. He was married to Sarah J. G. Ripley, in 1874. He was the father of three children, two of whom survive him. He leaves two brothers also. Although in sympathy with the truth, he had not been immersed. The funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. Allerton and were largely attended. He was a good neighbor, a kind husband and father. One of those timid characters who did not act much in the world. We laid him to rest in the Argos cemetery.

Conference Call.

The quarterly conference of the Churches of God of the Abrahamic Faith will meet northeast of Oxford two miles, in Brother Thomas Jackson's neighborhood July 21, 1893, Cowley Co., Kansas, to continue over Sunday and longer if the brethren think best. We hope and entreat all who have an interest in the cause of the Master and are looking for his soon coming to be at the meeting, for we believe that all intend to be reached, yet there is a strong tendency to growing cold among the true church that precedes his coming.

We extend a cordial invitation to all the brethren in this and other states. There is some important business to transact and we would like all of the brethren to come that possibly can come. Brethren let us work while we have an opportunity for the signs indicate the near approach of the Master. Let us be up and doing.

To the Mountain and Ocean Resorts.

The advantages peculiar to the Pennsylvania Lines make them the desirable thoroughfares to Bedford Springs, Altoona, Ebensburg, or any of the delightful summer havens in the cool Allegheny Mountains. By no other route can Cresson, the ideal retreat on the crest of that romantic mountain range be reached, as the Pennsylvania is the only line direct to it and the only one leading past the Puck Saddle and the Allegrippus, round the famous Horse Shoe Curve and along the Blue Juniata, the richest of America's scenic gems. For reaching Atlantic City, Cape May, Ocean Grove, Asbury Park, Long Branch, Sea Girt, Elberon, Ocean Beach, Berkeley, Newport, Narragansett Pier, Martha's Vineyard, Nantucket or any of the numerous watering places that dot the Atlantic seaboard from the Carolinas to Maine these lines are particularly desirable. For a trip to the Adirondacks, the Catskills and resorts in Northeastern New York, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Vermont, New Hampshire, and Maine, exceptional facilities for a delightful journey are offered via this direct route. CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

All who desire to contribute to the "Contingent Fund," please send remittances to The Restitution office, Plymouth, Ind., and receipts will be sent, and the fund disbursed as may be requested. Publication to be made of amounts of donations and expenditures.

We whose names are herewith subscribed, agree to pay during the year 1893, the amount subscribed, the fund thus created to be employed in answering calls to baptize persons, who being isolated from the brotherhood are unable to secure the services of an administrator.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.

VOL. XLII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 5, 1893. NO. 25.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

Lovingly, Tenderly Calling.

Jesus the loving Shepherd calleth thee now to come
Into the fold of safety where there is rest and peace;
[illegible] in the strength of manhood, come in the [illegible] of youth,
Into the fold of safety, enter the ways of truth.

CHORUS.

Lovingly, tenderly, calling is he, wanderer, wanderer, come unto me.
Patiently waiting, there [illegible] Jesus thy Savior divine.

Jesus the loving Shepherd gave his dear life for thee,
Tenderly now he is calling, wanderer come to [illegible]
[illegible] without danger, come [illegible] blessed [illegible]
Enter the fold of safety, enter the place of rest.

Linger not [illegible] folly, [illegible] day,
Seeking the sheep who are straying, seeking the lambs to-day.
Jesus the loving Shepherd calleth thee now to come,
Into the fold of safety, where there is rest and home.

Original.

Our Relationship to the Apostasy.

"If there come any man unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed: For he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds." 2 John x. 11.

From the above we learn that those who are in accord with "the doctrine of Christ," cannot in any way affiliate with those who hold a contrary doctrine without incurring the responsibility of being made a "partaker of his evil deeds," in propagating a doctrine which is adverse to the truth. The doctrine referred to is recorded in verse 7 as follows: "Many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh." See also 1 John iv. 3: "Every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God."

We can in fact by false doctrine deny that "Jesus Christ is come in the flesh," and not do so as far as mere words are concerned.

As for instance: the Scriptures universally use the word "flesh" as a symbol of mortality, and not in a single instance do they elevate flesh beyond that which is frail and temporal. "That which was born of the flesh is flesh." Christ was "born" of a woman made of flesh and blood, and consequently Christ did "come in the flesh," because no fleshly woman can possibly give to her offspring a different nature from that which she herself possessed. In Heb. ii. 14, we read: "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he (Christ) also likewise took part of the same." Verse 17: "Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren." He did not take on him "the nature of angels." If he had taken the "nature of angels," it would not have been possible for him, "through death," "to destroy him that had the power of death," "and deliver them who through fear of death were all their life time subject to bondage," for reason that he could not have died to redeem them. That which is born of the flesh like Christ was, "is flesh," "and that which is born of the Spirit "is spirit" and cannot possibly die. And if he was "made like unto his brethren" "in all things," then "he" and "his brethren," had both the same "flesh and blood" "nature," which "angels" have not. Then, to affirm that Christ and "his brethren," are incapable of death, is to contradict him by saying that he did take on him "the nature of angels," contrary to his express word that he "did not."

Hence, the doctrine of natural immortality as far as the "real man" is concerned, makes him a liar, because it denies his flesh nature and strikes a death-blow at the doctrine of Christ's death to redeem "his brethren," to whom he was "made like unto in all things."

Then again to affirm that Jesus is the Eternal Father, as Trinitarians do, is to deny Jesus has "come in the flesh," because the Eternal Father "hath life in himself," which flesh has not and never was liable to die, consequently could not have "come in the flesh," if he had, he would have been subject to death.

To teach that Christ did not "come in the flesh," is to strike a death-blow at the doctrine of the resurrection. Not having died himself, he could not have been "raised again for our justification," and hence fatal to the doctrine of "justification." It also nullifies the figure of baptism—death, burial and resurrection.

Not being of a "flesh" nature he could not die, and hence renders void God's oath, that "he would raise up Christ to sit on his (David's) throne." Acts ii. 30.

To affirm Christ "is not come in the flesh," makes void every single item of the Christian faith. The pagan dogma of a sky-kingdom for immortal souls, is the rock on which the apostate church is built, which dogma in fact denies that which they term the "real Christ," ever did die, and hence, the real Christ "is not come in the flesh," if that dogma be true.

What will this false teaching result in? See 2 John ix.: "Whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God."

In this case what is our duty? Shall we exercise the delusive charity so much talked about and allow them unrebuked to propagate dangerous doctrine without correction for fear of offending them, and lest they might think us uncharitable? Seeing those who "abideth not in the doctrine of Christ," "hath not God," would not true charity direct the reverse of this? It would most assuredly.

Says one, in what sense then did the Savior exist prior to his manifestation among men?

John says: "In the beginning was the (logos) word, etc." In verse 14: "the logos became flesh and dwelt among us." In the beginning he existed as "the Word" of promise—the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head. The phrase "seed of the woman," points to a birth of flesh, and Jesus himself says: "that which was born of the flesh is flesh, or in other words a woman of flesh can produce only flesh. He being the seed of a woman must of necessity be flesh, and not spirit, by his natural birth of or from flesh.

Now the question arises can anything exist previous to its manifestation? Only in an anticipatory sense. To illustrate: an artist conceives of a design for a picture. In his mind he sees that picture in its completeness. He views the scenery, characters, colors, etc., and by means of his brush he produces an outward expression of that picture which previously existed in his mind. If that picture did not previously exist in the artist's mind, no expression of it could have been put upon canvas. Even so, with regard to the "Word," if it did not have a previous existence in the plan, purpose, and design of the Father, an outward expression of that "Word" in flesh could never have taken place.

In Gal. iv. 4, we are given both the channel, and time when the "Word" of promise of which was with the Father "in the beginning," received an outward manifestation: "When the fulness of time was come, God sent forth his Son made of a woman, made under the law." Now, if "made of a woman," he must have necessarily have "come in the flesh," if made under the law, he could not have been made before "the law," but existed in the beginning as the "Word" only. Hence, of necessity, he "who confesses not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God." 1 John iv. 3.

The above declaration is decisive. It absolutely precludes any compromise with the apostasy which teaches the reverse.

We read concerning our Savior that "he gave his life a ransom for many." This is a very significant text bearing upon this topic. The duration of life is governed by its environment. Life manifested through a corruptible environment must sooner or later cease. But life manifested through a spiritual or incorruptible environment must last forever, such an one cannot give "his life" to ransom any one. If the Savior's life was manifested through a spirit-environment, in place of coming "in the flesh," he could not give "his life a ransom for many." Hence, to teach that the Savior's life was not manifested through an environment of "flesh," his work as a ransomer must fail, because of his inability to give "his life" on behalf of any one. Hence he "that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is in the flesh is not of God." "If there come any man unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed." This may apply to receiving such into our homes in a social manner, or it may apply to such an one being received into our house of worship as a brother. We cannot do either without effecting a compromise with the apostasy.

The Satanic expression: "Shall be as gods," and as such "Shall not surely die," is probably the origin of the error. The "gods" are supposed to be spirit, and not flesh, and hence superior to death. This is in exact accord with the apostate church, which teaches that man is a part of God, and God being spirit, and man being a part of God must likewise be spirit also, and hence is deathless—"shall not surely die," having the nature of "angels and gods."

If we receive such into our house, or worship with than in their house, we are compromising with those who are "not of God," for he that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, "is not of God."

"Great Babylon" is a "mother," and if a mother has children—harlots," and this mother and her daughters is become the habitations of devils, (and teach as devils do—"ye shall not surely die") and the hold of every foul spirit (who teach contrary to the spirit) and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird." Dear reader, it is high time to get out of that "cage," for the "hateful birds" in that "cage" deny "that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh," but like man received the nature of "gods," and as a consequence, "ye shall not surely die." Let me give a sample of a voice from that "cage," which I have just cut from one of the Chicago daily papers:

"A Voice from the Dead: Write to us, our good people, Marka Gobcevich. Dear brothers, I cannot lie in peace under ground because my brother Krsto Gobcevich, did not pay for the mass said for the repose of my soul. Brothers, listen to my voice from the grave. Go ask the secretary of the Greek Orthodox Slavonian association to pay for this mass, so that my soul may rest in peace."

The children of the deceased Marka Gobcevich read the article and were grieved, as they believed the article came from their restless father's soul."

Here is a "voice" which professes to come "from the dead, (although the dead know not anything) and this dead soul is "under ground," (instead of in heaven) and while lying "under ground," he says he "cannot lie in peace," because "my brother did not pay for the mass said for repose the of my soul." This dead-alive soul in his "under ground" home, may have to flounder about in a "restless" condition for some time to come yet, as the case has been taken into the law courts for adjustment.

Conscious existence in death is the voice which eminates from every "hateful bird" which dwells in the "cage." How can the Lord's people find a congenial home in that "cage" in association with "hateful birds" ("mother" and "harlot" daughters?) We know those who have gone to dwell there, who still profess to repudiate the above teaching of the "hateful birds." To such God sends this message: "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues."

The Christian's Hope.

Editor Restitution:

By request I pen you a few thoughts, hoping you may favor me by a publication of the same, as some of my friends in the Old Country have asked me a reason of my hope to be answered through THE RESTITUTION.

Now our position is that the only hope for this mortal race is based on the promises made to Abraham, and these promises will be fulfilled to the (immortal race) namely, "this land will I give thee for an everlasting possession." Life must be everlasting also to be in harmony with the Covenant, and so it is "these all died in faith not having received the promises, but seen them afar off." Heb. xi. 13. We understand them to be fulfilled at the resurrection. Well, says one, I dont want any land, and I have no need of a resurrection, because I am going to heaven at death. On what promise is your hope built? Well, mother was as good a woman as ever lived. She said she was going there and I want to go there to see her. Well, but does the Scripture tell you so? Well, I think the thief went there with Christ. And you say that Christ never died. Well, that may be so but the Bible knows of no Savior but the one that died. You say his body only died, but that the real man that can think, talk, etc., never died. Well, the real man says: "I am he that was dead, and behold I am alive forevermore." I think you have gotten Plato instead of Christ.

The promise was renewed to Jacob as he lay on the ground, and a ladder extended from earth to heaven and the Lord spake and said: "the land on which thou liest I will give to thee." Not a word about coming up although he might have gone as the ladder was there. It might have taken him sometime to get there but I expect he would have gotten there a little ahead of He (Jesus) after all. Leaving the earth never entered the mind of the ancient worthies.

Was not the first or mortal family taken out of the ground, and for disobedience was remanded back to the ground, and right there was the seed of the immortal family planted. "My Seed shall bruise the serpent's head," so we see it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power. Common sense teaches us that we wont expect to see a person come out of the same house he went into, but a great many apply to this point six senses instead of five.

"In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." Will it be a blessing then to let them go to heaven when he is coming and his rewards with him to give to every man as his work shall be. No, he is coming with his Bride, same as the first Adam. Then Bridegroom and Bride will bless all the families of the earth by putting them on the same plane with Adam, and giving them a right to the tree of life and allowing them a privilege to enter the city by the gate, not over the wall. Satan shall be bound all through that grand time of restoring that which was lost by Adam's transgression, but they will not attain to the high calling of the Royal Priesthood, as that part belongs to the Bride only. Man only lost his life, and home which was the earth that is to be restored back to man, but the Bride gets immortality as a gift. They are equal with the angels, can die no more. The other party can die because their right to the tree of life will be cut off in case of disobedience, same as Adam was.

Finally we say, accept God's plan of salvation and be satisfied with this old earth renewed. See Psa. xxxvii., Matt. v. 5, Rev. v. 10, also xi 15. Dont take men's plan and go up to heaven, for if you do you will be lonesome as Christ is coming and his reward is with him. He is surely coming to this earth or the reward is a delusion. God himself is coming to dwell with men. Surely the men are on the earth. He is going to wipe away all tears from their eyes. They shall hunger and thirst no more. We are to have these same vile bodies fashioned like his most glorious body, showing we shall eat and drink, as the type did after his resurrection. When this all takes place, we can sing that sweetest of all songs, "O, death where is thy sting, O grave where is thy victory." Could we sing that song if we went to heaven at death and had no more need of these old bodies? How do we get the victory over death and the grave? Let Paul answer. He says: "Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ." Not immortal soulism.

Brethren grasp the situation, and think of the anticipation of Paul. Let us look forward to that time when we cannot say we are sick, for the former things are passed away.

In that joyful morning may we be as confident as Job was, that when he calls we will answer. Let us add the required virtues, so that we may hear his voice and come forth not to shame and contempt, but to everlasting life, is the prayer of your brother in hope.

J. W. GAMBLE.

Epaphroditus, Phil. ii. 25-27.

Paul's companion in labor and fellow-soldier, was sick nigh unto death. And why was he sick? Because he overworked himself, for the work of Christ, or the good of the cause of Christ, that he might be able to supply your lack of service toward me. To aid brother Paul, when the brethren ought to have did it. But God had mercy on him, and would not let him die. Did God propose to kill this good servant of his and then take him to heaven? If not modern theology is wrong. And if he did so purpose then he changed his mind, and had mercy on him, and would not let him die and go to heaven. For God to have killed this good man, or even to let him die and go to heaven would not be merciful would it? If so how could it be a mercy to interfere and not let him go? Will some one who knows, please explain how God can kill the good people—his people, and the bad people, and the little innocent babes, and take them out of this world, some to the good place and some to the bad place, and yet be a merciful God. When this is done, please tell us how God could interfere, and keep them from dying and going out of this world of trouble to a land of bliss, and call it mercy, a favor to his people, and then in mercy bring them back and judge them and send them all back again. If you cannot do this then your theory is wrong, and it would be wise and well for you to revise it now before it is too late.

T. E. ADAMS.

Hear what the Unjust Judge saith.

And He spake a parable unto them to this end, that men ought always to pray and faint not, saying there was in the city a judge which feared not God, nor regarded man. And there was a widow in that city, and she came unto him, saying: "avenge me of my adversary," and he would not for awhile, but afterward said within himself, "though I fear not God nor regard man, yet because this widow troubleth me I will avenge her, lest by her continued coming she wearies me." And the Lord said hear what the unjust judge saith, and shall not God avenge his own elect that cry day and night unto him though he bear long with them? I tell you he will avenge them speedily. Nevertheless when the Son of Man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?

The Social Game.

"Don't go, girls, don't," said a silvered-haired friend of my mother's who visited us occasionally, when we were talking about attending a card party. Don't go, girls, don't" she repeated. "Why, Aunt Mattie," we asked, "why not go? Do you think card playing, just for amusement, wrong?"

"I do think so."

"Why everybody plays now. Just a few evenings ago we were at Professor Ball's, cards were brought, and we all played. The Professor's son and daughter both engaged in the amusement and all the best families do the same."

"Even if all those you speak of permit and indulge in card playing, does that alone make it right?"

"No, but if such families think it right, I would not like to set myself up as a pattern of goodness, and refuse their invitations, and thus tell them that I thought their actions wrong," I answered impatiently.

Aunt Mattie's face flushed a little, and I noticed her thin, white hand tremble as she brushed back a silver lock from her forehead. She looked at me for a moment with a blending of pain and tenderness, then she said:

"Mina, if you will listen I will tell you something of my past life."

I told her I would be glad to listen, for she was a pleasant talker, and I loved her society. She continued:

"A long time ago I was the mother of a darling, little boy. My husband died when my child was but three years of age. After that, all my care, all my ambition was for that boy. I tried to teach him to be manly, to do right under every circumstance. I had means sufficient to give him every advantage he needed for education and position. At the age of twenty-one he graduated in a university of standing; was a fine-looking man. I looked upon him with feelings of motherly pride and deep affection. I expected him to rise and fill some useful position.

Then as now, some played cards for amusement. I tried to persuade Joe not to play, for I always had a strong aversion to that kind of pastime. For a while he heeded my wishes. But one evening a young lady whose society he loved, and who had a strong influence over him, persuaded him to play his first game with her. What a pity woman's hand should ever lead astray! He, like many others, thought there was no wrong in it, nor that it would ever in any way do him any harm. But cards had a strong fascination for him. In those parlor games, where prizes were offered, he was usually successful; that fact stimulated him to play in other places, and for money. In less than one year from the time he played his first parlor game he was a confirmed gambler.

One night playing, he lost heavily. He lost not only his own money, but some held in trust. When the last dollar was gone, being wild from his loss and heated with wine, he arose from the table, drew a knife and buried it in the body of his antagonist. He was sent to prison for life. For ten long dark years I was the mother of a murderer; then a change came. He was taken sick; he tossed on a bed of pain for many long weeks. One night he stepped out of his prison-bed and went into the great unknown future. For many long years the grass has been growing upon his grave, but no time can make me forget my great sorrow, nor the cause of it.

Now girls don't go to card parties. Don't engage in that kind of amusement. Don't be the means of giving to some young boy a knowledge which may lead him to ruin. Woman should lead to purity and good. She will never do it by card-playing."—Western Advocate.

The Most Needed Man.

The man most needed to-day is not the millionaire, the inventor, the orator, the statesman, or the poet; but the ideal man—the man who is nearest to Him who was the model of all moral and manly beauty, whose presence was a benediction, whose words were pearls of wisdom, whose deeds were untainted by self-ism, whose manners were affable and courteous, whose gentleness caused Him to call His betrayer "friend," whose benevolent love caused Him to lay down His life to save his foes, and who asked no return for all He was and did but a love responsive to His own. The man who comes nearest to this ideal man, the divine Redeemer, is the man most needed in this bustling, restless, unbelieving, self-seeking age. Such a man, be he rich or poor, learned or unlearned, titled or untitled, ennobles humanity, lifts his fellows up from degrading vices, makes the world purer and happier, and holds high rank among the benefactors of his race and the friends of God. Therefore, the age greatly needs him, and whoever longs to serve his generation will strive to rise as nearly as he may to the stature of the ideal man.—Christian Advocate.

Light and Influence.

"He made the stars also. And God set them in the firmament of heaven to give light upon the earth." (Gen. i. 16, 17). Every soul born of the Spirit is a star in the spiritual universe for which God has been ages in preparing a place. To be where God wants us to be is to occupy the best place for ourselves and others within His gift. To be anywhere else is a disaster that may concern all who live after us. God has a plan for sending light somewhere, and that light must go from us. It may not reach its destination for long years after our bodies have returned to dust, but it must start from us, or somebody may be left in the dark forever. Lines of light billions of miles in length are coming towards us every moment from stars that may have been blotted out ages ago, and yet God has never let a single ray of light be lost. His eye has guided every one and brought it safely to the point where He wanted it to strike. Surely if He does that for the stars, He will guard closely the influence that goes out from a godly life.

Seek to make that your own which has the stamp of God, and, therefore, the stamp of eternity upon it.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 5, 1893.

The address of any correspondent of this paper will be sent to any one wishing it, on application.

IN baptism the believer sets to his seal that God is true, and demonstrates in a way no words could do, his belief in the divine origin and absolute authority of the Scriptures. •

THE man who loves the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and truth has no room in his heart for carnal prejudices; and he is able to discuss truth on its own merits,—but alas, few can do that. •

THE characteristics of Paul have been summed up in this way: 1, Tact and presence of mind. 2 Tenderness and sympathy. 3. Conscientiousness and integrity. 4. Thanksgiving and prayer. 5. Courage and perseverance. •

MANY people admit that Psa. cxxxviii. 1, is true, but strange to say they act as if the serpent's lie were a part of God's Word; and think to do him service by magnifying it above all else;—make it a fundamental article of their faith. •

THE truth as it is in Jesus is comprehensive of the Gospel, see Eph. iv., "The Truth," and "The faith," and "The Gospel," and "The Word of the Lord," and "The Word" are convertible terms, and is generally restricted to the Great Saving truths everywhere proclaimed. •

SARAH'S impatience begot the vain hope that she would be builded by Hagar, see Gen. xvi. 2, but the result was children of bondage. Gal. iv. 24. The whole world religious should profit by this fact; the promise of God seems to weigh nothing with it; it takes matters into its own hand. •

AN inquirer wishes to know "how the genealogy of Gen. xi. can be harmonized with that of Luke iii.; seeing that Moses says that Arphaxad begat Salah and therefore could not be his grandfather, and yet Luke places Cainan between them?"

This is one of the difficult questions: and any solution must be purely conjectural. Some have supposed that "Cainan" was never written by Luke but was introduced by an early copyist. But there is but one ancient manuscript (D), and that of no weight of itself, which omits "Cainan" from the text. And then "Cainan" is found in the Septuagint—the Greek version of the Hebrew Scriptures, but scholars are of the opinion that it has been introduced into the present text of the Septuagint from Luke. But the reverse of this may be true. Some copyist seeing it in the Septuagint may have corrected Luke in the copy he was making. Then [illegible] Hebrew manuscripts [illegible] correct and Luke may be the correct genealogy. Both cannot, certainly. •

JAMES says "God has chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, heirs of the kingdom promised to them that love him;" and our experience teaches us that he has not changed his mind in this regard. Few of the trusters in the Word of promise could say they did not know the inconvenience and unpleasantness of being short of a dollar or two, and having to struggle for a bare subsistence. In line with this announcement that the faithful poor as a class are selected to inherit the kingdom, comes the injunction to "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal." But why, Lord? Will he deign to tell us why? Oh, yes: "For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." We are aware that the same authority bids us be "diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." We are aware, too, that if we provide for our own we are worse than unbelievers, and all that. And we are not forgetful that the Scripture [illegible] that riches may accumulate from legitimate business, by enjoining us not to set our heart or affection upon them. What we want is to find the mean between these seeming contradictions. One thing is certain, we must live, and in order to live we are brought into competition with very questionable methods in many callings, and we are sure to be left because we cannot employ their methods. But to do business requires capital, and in most cases it must first be earned and saved. But there stands the stern command, "Lay not up for yourselves!" What shall we do with that? Nothing. It is the divine line and we must bow to it. But before we make the chips fly let us see if the key does not hang by the door?" "Lay not up for yourselves." That lets the light in. They were not their own having been brought, and delivered the goods, and glorify God in their bodies at the plow, the counter, the bench, the bar, or with jack plane or paint brush or whatsoever they do. •

Nonconformity to the World!

In prayer to the Father for his disciples in the 17th of John Jesus said, "I have given them thy word, and the world hath hated them, because they are not of the world." This is an universal rule, for Jesus elsewhere says, In the world ye shall have tribulation; why? Just because they were not of it. How were they known to be not of the world? By their conduct—by the effect the word had upon them: it could be seen that they were living for something they believed in and hoped for, while all around them were living for the present. Jesus' words prove that his disciples did not conform to the world, and this made them singular and despicable. They were but the merest handful, but few as they were, their conduct condemned the many, and annoyed them. Having followed the Master in this, of course he was pleased to commend them to His Father. They stood together and acted alike, and were alike hated; and it was to be no transient affair either—it was to extend into the future indefinitely,—were to be hated of all men for his name's sake. And they not only realized the truth of this, but they taught us the same lesson by assuring us that all who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution.

We see so much flinching when reproach comes, and so much effort to round off the sharp edges of contrast between truth and error, or light and darkness, that we often think the cost of living godly has not been counted by many of those who essay to be defenders of the faith. It is a great piece of folly to imagine a separation from sinners through God's Truth without being singular, or singular without being reproached. Those in the saving business cannot too plainly show candidates for God's kingdom and glory that they enlist to suffer now in order to reign hereafter; they cannot tone down the discipline, and widen the way of life and then wear the victor's wreath. It is those who overcome the world, not those who scheme to get around the trials incident to a life of faith, who sit down with Jesus on his throne.

Brethren, when the flesh shrinks from the ostracism and reproach of the cross of the Anointed Jesus let us remember that the friendship of the world means enmity against God, and govern ourselves accordingly. •

Death's Doings.

Death's blows have fallen thick and fast upon the little congregation of God at Salem. Within a short time I have been called to perform the last sad offices for four of its members,—first, Fremont Barber, apparently in the full vigor of life, and one to whom the little band were accustomed to look for counsel and encouragement, was, as it were cut down in an hour. In a few days his father, who had long been a sturdy defender of God's unpopular Truth, and caused a commodious house for worship to be built in the town, was also laid low; a few months later his widow succumbed to the enemy,—and on Friday last I was summoned to attend the funeral of Sister Olive Townsend; niece of Sister and Bro. Barber, and daughter of the dear Brother and Sister Townsend so well known to readers of THE RESTITUTION. She was their only daughter, aged 27 years and 3 months. She happily put on the saving name of Christ several years ago, and like her Master, has not only faithfully done her duty to those of like precious faith, but to all within her reach. She certainly convinced those who knew her that, however odd her faith may be, she had certainly been with Jesus and learned of him. And the many remarks of those not in the truth reminded me of the case of Dorcas.

Although an intense sufferer for a number of days her mind was clear, so that she could testify of her unwavering confidence in God, and of her hope of life and glory at the appearing of Jesus, and speak of the grand reunion of all the faithful. May the glad day soon roll around, and end these scenes of sorrow, I pray.

The funeral services were held some 3½ miles from town, and several hundred listen to some lessons for the living regarding death and after life, with what result the Great day will reveal.

Who are the Heirs of the Kingdom of God?

The Jews, that is, Judah's and Benjamin's descendants, say they are: that the Messiah will come and set up his Kingdom, and they will be called back again to the land from whence they have been ruthlessly banished many hundreds of years, there to receive the reins of government by which to rule the world. Are they right, or rather cherishing "a strong delusion" that shall vanish away and leave them nothing but subjects of that universal kingdom? Let us see what the Scripture says upon that subject. The Prophet Isaiah in the lxv. chap. 2-16:

"I have spread out my hands all the day unto a rebellious people, which walketh in a way that is not good, after their own thoughts; a people that provoked me to anger continually to my face; that sacrificeth in garden, and burneth incense upon altars of brick; which remain among the graves, and lodge in the monuments, which eat swine's flesh, and broth of abominable things is in their vessels; which say, Stand by thyself, come not near to me; for I am holier than thou. These are a smoke in my nose, a fire that burneth all the day. Behold, it is written before: I will not keep silence, but will recompense, even recompense into their bosom, your iniquities, and the iniquities of your fathers together, saith the Lord, which have burned insense upon the mountains, and blasphemed me upon the hills: therefore will I measure their former work in their bosom. Thus saith the Lord, As the new wine is found in the cluster, and one saith, Destroy it not; for a blessing is in it: so will I do for my servants' sake, that I may not destroy them all. And I will bring forth a seed out of Jacob, and out of Judah an inheritor of my mountains: and mine elect shall inherit it, and my servants shall dwell there. And Sharon shall be a fold of flocks, and the valley of Achor a place for the herds to lie down in, for my people that have sought me. But ye are they that forsake the Lord, that forget my holy mountain, that prepare a table for that troop, and that furnish a drink-offering unto that number. Therefore will I number you to the sword, and ye shall all bow down to the slaughter: because when I called, ye did not answer; when I spake, ye did not hear; but did evil before mine eyes, and did choose that wherein I delighted not. Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, my servants shall eat, but ye shall be hungry: behold, my servants shall drink, but ye shall be thirsty; behold, my servants shall rejoice, but ye shall be ashamed: behold, my servants shall sing for joy of heart, but ye shall cry for sorrow of heart, and shall howl for vexation of spirit. And ye shall leave your name for a curse unto my chosen: for the Lord God shall slay thee, and call his servants by another name: that he who blesseth himself in the earth, shall bless himself in the God of truth; and he that sweareth in the earth shall swear by the God of truth; because the former troubles are forgotten, and because they are hidden from mine eyes."

Now, who is this people that are so perverse and disobedient? Who? They who slew the prophets of the Lord and sacrificed unto Baal? Who cast down the ordinances of the Jehovah under their feet, and progressed in their iniquity until as a final consummation they rejected their promised Messiah and long looked-for Deliverer, and delivered him bound to the ferocious soldiery of Pagan Rome to be crucified. Who was it not the selfsame Jews who said "stand by thyself, I am holier than thou."—the proud boastful Pharisee who loved flattering salutations and greetings in the public streets? They think because they can trace their genealogy down through the ages past to the old Patriarch who was so sorely tried, and who was the great recipient of the glorious promises; because their line of descent is plainly traced down from Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Judah and his brethren, and that the God of those Patriarchs has promised so faithfully that their descendants should inherit the land again; that they must perforce be the chosen ones in that Kingdom. Daniel says, in the vii. chap. of his prophecies and 27th verse, that "the dominion and Kingdom shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High," when Gog is judged; and where will the Israelites be then, at the coming of the Messiah? They will be where they are now, scattered abroad upon the face of the earth. Then it is evident that the Israelites as a nation are not to be the heirs of a future Kingdom. Heirs of an estate are the possessors, not the subjects of it. They have the control of its resources and finances, while the subjects of it are the producers of those resources and finances. The Jewish nation will be restored to its land, and will become mightier and more powerful than any nation that has ever existed upon the earth, but at the same time they will be the governed and not the governors.

If then, they, the "chosen people," are not to be the heirs, the question recurs who are "the saints of the Most High," of whom Daniel speaks as possessing the Kingdom? Well, let us see what says Isaiah, chap. lxv. verse 1: "I am sorght of them that asked not for me; I am found of them that sought me not: I said, Behold me, unto a nation that was not called by my name;" and lxvi. chap. 5 verse: "Hear the word of the Lord, ye that tremble at his word: Your brethren that hated you, that cast you out for my name's sake, said, Let the Lord be glorified: but he shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed." Who were those that were not called by Jehovah's name and were cast out by their brother men? Who but the Gentile nations around the Israelitish camp? The Gentile nations of modern times, although they spurn the Jews from them, and spit upon them, yet the reviled scorn their revilers, and drive them from their feasts and worship, denying that they have any right or claim upon the promises made to the Fathers?

The apostles were sent by Jesus to preach the Gospel unto the Gentiles, that from among them might be taken a people for his name. Paul, Acts xxviii. 4-6, after being rejected by his own people, went to the Gentiles. The same apostle, Rom. ix. 6, 7, 8, says, "the children of the promise are counted for the seed," and at the 20th verse says, the Gentiles have attained to the righteousness of the faith; and x. 1-3, if the Jews lost the heirship by setting up their lineal descent and self-righteousness in opposition to God's righteousness, let us be careful and watch, and be warned by their loss, lest we also come short of that great blessing. Isaiah lxvi. 1, 2; Psalm xxxiv. 18; and li. 16, 17; Matt. v. 3-10. All of these references show plainly who are to be the future rulers in the blessed Kingdom of our Lord, when he shall come to the earth and establish his throne upon Mount Zion. The meek in spirit are the spiritual seed of Abraham—the chosen ones of God.

Oh! what a prize to strive for; with what vigilance ought we to pursue the race from its commencement to its glorious termination. With what steadfastness ought we to fix our eyes upon the great reward, and press forward to obtain the prize of our calling. An immortal crown of living glory; a joint heirship with the great Messiah, in the everlasting Kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world. Shall we be there to inherit the glorious reward, and receive the gracious commendation of "Well done, good and faithful servant?" Let us strive for it, brethren, strive faithfully and diligently, for great will be our reward if we come off conquerors; yea, more than conquerors through Him who died that we might have everlasting life.

"Well done, good and faithful one!"
Methinks I hear the Saviour say;
Thou hast been faithful, thou shalt win
The crown of life's eternal day."

"That thou resolved, when didst see,
As every faithful servant ought;
Now, thy reward I'll not refuse:
Receive the crown thou long hast sought.

For every triumph over sin
When thou didst crush the tyrant down,
Receive unto thyself, from him,
A brilliant jewel in thy crown."

A name that's named on none beside;
A robe washed white in my own blood,
Component of the "Mystic Bride;"
Christian; regret thou not 'tis good!"

The Jew.

The Jew still walks the earth and bears the stamp of his race upon his forehead. He is still the same being as when he first wandered forth from the hills of Judea. If his name is associated with avarice and extortion, and spoken of in bitterness and scorn, yet in the morning of history it gathers round it recollections sacred and holy.

The Jew is a miracle among the nations. A wanderer in all lands, he has been a witness of the great events of history for eighteen hundred years. He saw classic Greece when crowned with intellectual triumphs. He lingered among that broken but beautiful architecture that rises like a tombstone, over the grave of her departed splendor.

The Jew saw Rome, the "mighty heart" of nations, sending its own ceaseless life's throb through all the arteries of its vast empire. He, too, had seen that heart cold and still in death. These have perished, yet the Jew lives on—the same silent, mysterious, indestructible being. The shadow of the Crescent rests on Palestine, the signet of a conqueror's faith—still the Jew and his religion survive. He wanders a captive in the streets of his own once queenly Jerusalem, to meditate sadly and gloomily on the relics of ancient power. Above him shines the clear sky, fair as when it looked down on the towers of Zion, but now, alas, beholds only a desolate city and unhappy land. The world is his home. Trampled on and exiled, his name a badge of infamy, he still lives, full of ancestral pride. The literature of the ancient Hebrew triumphs over all creeds, and schools, and sects. Mankind worship in the sacred songs of David, and bow to the divine teachings of Jesus of Nazareth, who also was a son of Abraham. Such is the Jew. His ancient dreams of empire are gone. How seldom do we realize, as we see him in our city streets, that he is the creature of such a strange, peculiar destiny. Neither age, nor country, nor climate have changed him. Such is the Jew, a strange and solitary being, and such the drama of his long and mournful history.—N. Y. Evangelist.

When the Bible Will be no Longer Needed.

One dark night I was returning home from the country, when my way led through the unlighted village streets, then by a little gate into a narrow path that ran through twenty-four fields connected with each other by little gates or stiles, and then along a narrow lane with high, bushy hedge-rows on either hand to the town itself. My lantern showed me first the entrance to the path, then the path itself with its park-like fields, its thick, bordering woods, where the great trees flushed up into the night, and the quaint stiles, and little swing gates over hung with autumn-tinted foliage revealed themselves one by one too my view, till the last stile brought me into the sheltered lane and then the path ended at the lighted streets of the town. It is in this pleasant way that the Holy Scriptures show us first, the entrance to the path of life, then the path itself, and at length, the end of the way, where the lamp is no longer needed, and we are at home.

A Kind Thought.

Long years ago when I was a girl at boarding-school, a silver-haired old lady was in the habit of coming into our advanced French class now and then. We girls all fell in love with Madame Closson for her kind face and gentle, placid manners, and used to think it a great privelege to sit by her and find the place for her and help her with her wraps after class was over.

One day when it was my good fortune to hold the place of honor beside her, the last one to recite chanced to be Miss Parks. She was a day-pupil, a plain, awkward girl, and very dull. It was evident from her first sentence that she did not know the lesson, but Madamoiselle patiently heard her through, apparently desiring to see if there was anything in it she did know.

When we had been dismissed and I took up Madame Closson's shawl to lay it over her shoulders, I was thinking, "What a dreadfully homely, stupid girl Miss Parks is!" Could the dear old lady have read my thoughts? I think she had a soul too innocent for that, but this is the remark she made:

"My dear, what a sweet-tempered disposition Miss Parks seems to have."

The words went through me like an electric shock. For the first time I realized my own selfishness and saw it contrasted with the goodness of heart which could see only goodness in others. My eyes filled with tears and with a sudden impulse I kissed the hand she gave me as she said good-bye.

Again and again since that day, when some unkind thought has come into my mind, the memory of dear Madame Closson's kind face and sweet words has come to help me; and if I have learned to see more of God's image in those I meet than I did in my girlhood, I owe it in a great measure to the dear old lady's kind thought.—Blackholm in the Advance.

Christ the Model.

In the great galleries of art that are the glory of London, Paris, and Rome you may see the artists of the future. Young men toil there day after day, patiently reproducing copies of the masterpieces of the painters who are world-renowned. Every line, every color; every gradmation of light and shade, they put forth their utmost skill to imitate. They are not content that their picture should be something like the original. Their ambition is to make their copy so exact that none but an experienced eye shall be able to tell which is the original and which is the copy. Thus place yourself before Christ. Look at His character, so perfect, so majestic, so tender, and determine that henceforth the great business of your life shall be to become like Christ.—Children's Friend.

Sow Beside all Waters.

"When a boy," said a prominent member of a church, "I was much helped by Bishop Hamline, who visited at my house where I was. Taking me aside, the bishop said: 'When in trouble, my boy, kneel down and ask God's help, but never climb over the fence into the Devil's ground and then kneel down and ask help. Pray from God's side of the fence.' Of that," said he "I have thought every day of my life since." Continuing he remarked: "Sanford Cobb, the missionary to Persia, helped me in another way. Said he: 'Do you ever feel thankful when God blesses you.' 'Always.' 'Did you tell him so?' 'Well I don't know that I have.' 'Well, try it, my young friend, try it, try it. Tell Him so; tell Him aloud. Tell Him so that you are sure you will hear it yourself.' That was a new revelation. I found that I had been only glad, not grateful. I have been telling Him with grateful feelings ever since to my soul's help and comfort.

Faculty for Truth.

Truth depends for its power upon the concurrence of the mind as much as light depends for its power on the concurrence of the eye, says Dr. Parkhurst. A truth coming to us always says to us, "By your leave." It knocks at the door and then stands outside waiting till some one comes and answers the knocker or the bell pull. You have seen a shoemaker drive shoe pegs. If he undertook to drive a peg before a place had been made for it by the awl, he would both bruise the boot sole and splinter the peg: that is to say, he has to drive in the hole first. That is a picture of the way truth works. Truth is modest, and never goes in until it has been asked in. We personally and individually decide just how much God's word shall do for us.

The Only Father.

"My father is very rich," said little Earl, as he walked by the side of his nurse. "All this land is his, and this house, and stable, and the lake."

"My father is also rich," said the girl, as she looked up to the sky and away over the fields and woods. The green fields and meadows are all His, the blue sky and golden sun, 'the cattle on a thousand hills,' all these are His."

"And who is your father?" asked Earl.

"He is God, the Father Almighty, maker of heaven and earth," was the good and gentle answer.

GLEANINGS

The one who needs help most, is the one who helps most.

Do not grasp at the stars, but do life's plain common work as it comes.

Our reputation is worth less than our character. Care for the latter, and the former will care for itself.

A mote in our brother's eye is like a speck in a sunbeam; while a beam is a large stick of timber filling the whole eye.

The whole life of a truly religious man should be nothing else but to search out the will of God in all things, and having found it to put it into execution.

"Whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Acts iii. 21.

It has been said that selfishness is sin and self indulgence is criminal. A soul filled with self can never be any benefit to the world or to the church. No deed of charity, no cheering word for the sorrow stricken, no strengthening influence for the tempted can emanate from the heart that is chiefly interested in the advancement of self. It suspects the motives of others and is never filled with affection that resembles the love of Christ.

Walking with God is keeping step to the music of his word. We may indeed obey its precepts from a cold sense of duty, but obedience lacking the element of loving fellowship with God is drudgery. A soldier may obey his captain's orders with mechanical precision, like a well regulated machine, not even having a thrill of affection for his leader, but it should not be thus with sinners plucked from the fire by a loving hand, and saints preserved from fear by God's gracious purpose.

To be misunderstood, even by those whom one loves, is the cross and bitterness of life. It is the secret of that sad and melancholy smile on the lips of great men which so few understand; it is the cruelest trial reserved for self-devotion; it is what must have oftenest wrung the heart of the Son of man; and if God could suffer, it would be the wound we should be forever inflicting on him. He also—he, above all—is the great misunderstood, the least comprehended. Alas! alas! never to tire, never to grow cold; to be patient, sympathetic, tender; to look for the budding flower and the opening heart; to hope always—this is duty.

It is said that the soldiers who had been sent to take the good old Christian, Polycarp found him reclining in his room. Impressed with his venerable appearance, as they were about to lead him off to suffer martyrdom, the leader of the band offered him his freedom if he would only renounce his belief in Christ. "Eighty and six years;" replied the old man, "have I served Jesus of Nazareth, and He has never forsaken me;" and the old man who had passed through all the sorrows of life, and had gained the period when all the charms of earth had lost their power, with this beautiful testimony on his lips, he walked forth to meet the death which had no terrors for for him.—"A Cluster of Pearls."

Poetry.

The Bible.

Hast thou ever heard
Of such a book? The Author, God Himself;
The subject, God and man, salvation, life
And death—eternal life, eternal death—
Dread words! whose meaning has no end, no bounds.
Most wondrous book! bright candle of the Lord!
Star of eternity! the only star
By which the bark of man could navigate
The sea of life and gain the coast of bliss
Securely; only star which rose on time,
And, on its dark and troubled billows, still,
As generation, drifting swiftly by,
Succeeded generation, threw a ray
Of heaven's own light, and to the hills of God,
The eternal hills, pointed the sinner's eye.

Armageddon.

In the 38th. and 39th chapter of Ezekiel we find a very remarkable prophecy representing,

1. Palestine inhabited by a large population of Israelites who are wealthy in gold and silver, cattle and goods.

Zech. xiv. 14, specially refers to Judah as fighting there on this occasion. Leaving the natural inference that Israel includes a representation at least of the twelve tribes.

2. The Autonomy and safety of these returned Israelites seems guaranteed: perhaps by international treaty, as no military or defensive precautions seem to be adopted. Ezek. xxxviii. v. 11.

3. They are assailed by a vast host, actuated by a desire for plunder, and confronted by a third party assumed a protectorate over them.

4. The invading horde is destroyed, during which process Christ comes in power and great glory, and inaugurates his millenial reign.

6. All Israel is remembered by the Lord and know his power forever after. The heathen also acknowledge his power, Ezek. xxxix. 7.

These events are necessarily future, for no such restoration has occured of the twelve tribes since their dispersion: no such attack has been made on them, especially in the latter years. Chap. xxxviii. 8. and after the land had lain waste always—and lastly the coming of Christ forms a part of the scene and is followed by the reconciliation of all Israel to Christ, events undoubtedly yet future.

These events seem to refer to the battle of Armageddon of Revelations xvi. 16, and xx—Harma-Megiddo the Hill of Meggiddo—in the plain of Esdraelon, about 25 miles from the Bay of Acre and in the line of march of an invading army enroute for Jerusalem from the North, and apparently a good defensive position, commanding a pass from the North into the Hill Country, and the seat of numerous conflicts. It is first mentioned in Joshua xii. 21; the city of a king defeated by Joshua, west of the Jordan.

Zecharia xii. 11, refers to the "Mourning of Hadad-rimmon in the Valley of Megiddon," an allusion to the defeat and death of Josiah at the hands of Pharoah-Necho whom he encountered on the route from Egypt to Carchemish to attack Nebuchadnezzar King of Assyria B. C. 608.

It was also the field of Baraks defeat of Sisera at the River Kishon. Judges iv. 18. Barak going down with his men from "Mount Tabor" into the Valley—"by the waters of Megiddo," see chapter v. 19, which flows into the Kishon River—also the scene of Gideon's victory over the Midianites, and the death of Saul and Jonathan, 1 Sam. xxxv. 1.

The actors mentioned in the drama are:

1. Gog,—representing a title, as, Chak, Czar, Prince or King.

2. Magog,—representing country North Caucasus. Tartars, Cossacks, Ancient Scythians.

3. Rosh,—representing Russia.

4. Meshech,—representing Muscovites, Moschi Herodotus III. 94 Strabo xi. 90, Capital Moscow.

5. Tubal,—representing Tibareni, Heb. Siberians, North Caspian and East Ural Mountains, Capital Tobolsk.

6. Persia,—representing Persia.

7. Ethiopia,—representing Hebr. Cush. South Egypt, Soudan.

8. Libya,—representing Northern Africa excluding Egypt.

9. Gomer,—representing Cimmerians. Germany, "Gomer is Germany" Joma f. x. 1 Talmud.

10. Togarmah,—representing Cappadocia, Region around Caspian.

11. Sheba,—representing Region round Aden, the Gibraltar of Red Sea.

12. Dedan,—representing Arabian Coast, Persian Gulf, East Indies.

13. Merchants of Tarshish,—representing South point Spain, also England, the Western Tarshish, Gibraltar the Key.

India the Eastern Tarshish, with Aden as Key.

England represents Tarshish, the young lions thereof her colonies and offshoots, probably including all the English speaking races.

14. Israelites,—Probably representing all twelve tribes, as the tribe of Judah is especially included as fighting at Jerusalem.

Undoubtedly two points are referred to as Tarshish in Scripture, one North-West, and one South-East from Jerusalem.

Jonah embarked at Joppa (now Jaffa) on Mediterranean "to flee unto Tarshish," he must have sailed west.—Again Jehoshaphat built ships at Eziongeber on the Red Sea, to sail to Tarshish. Manifestly they sailed south, the nearest, probably to India, and once in three years brought "gold and silver, iron, apes and peacocks" all Indian products.

Great Britain represents both Eastern and Western Tarshish and the gateways thereof, in all seeming.

Apparently all signs point to the speedy outcome of this day, and yet there are many possible moves left on the board before the climax.

Israel must be gathered in greater force and under better circumstances in Palestine: not only Judah but the lost tribes must be represented, even if not known as such.

The Jews are already gathering, and the probabilities all point to increased aggregation in the near future.

Great Britain is gradually but surely enclosing the Holy Land as in a net. She has control of the Mediterrean, Egypt, the Red Sea, the entrance to Persian Gulf. She has fortified posts all round the coast of Africa to guard her communications with India. Should the Suez route fail her, she is pushing a railroad through from the Cape of Good Hope to Egypt, and straining every nerve to enable her to throw men and munitions of war into the centre of operations from India, South Africa, and even from Australia and other points. Should the Russians occupy Constantinople and threaten the Holy Land, an event foretold apparently by prophecy and rendered probable by current events.

Probably before this last grand combat of the nations culminates there will be vast changes in the map of Europe, and this need not take long.

The present chief nations as Monarchies may have been upset by wars and revolutions and been re-united in one grand confederacy under the Anti-christ, or lawless one.

These united may combine against Great Britain and her allies with intent to strip her of her possessions, the attack on Jerusalem being a step on the road to India and Egypt.

The Jews may return to Jerusalem, their autonomy guaranteed by Great Britain and the United States, who may invest much capital and be represented largely by citizens of both countries; if Professor Totten be right the ten tribes would then be represented, and both Great Britain and the United States would be interested in their defense.

Libya or Northern Africa is represented as allied to Gog,—this represents Morocco, Algeria, Tunis and Tripoli. Of these France controls Algeria, and to some extent Tunis, as well as the country south of Morocco and west of Ethiopia (or Soudan) another ally of Gog. France perhaps therefore will, as well as Germany, be allied with Gog.

Altogether it looks somewhat as if there was to be a grand combination against the English speaking races and the Jews, who will perhaps maintain some allies and have the command of vast armies from Hindostan and perhaps Arabia and Africa, besides the forces of their own race.

It is extremely improbable that Russia can ever successfully attack England in India through the mountain passes: as England would be in that case backed by all the military forces and commissariat supplies of India, brought to her by railroads already built. If the people of India ever rise against British rule, it would certainly not be in favor of Russia, which they fully understand would be a jump from the frying-pan into the fire.

It is much more probable that the attack on Jerusalem will be an incident in the march of Russia enroute to attack Egypt, and then she will fall with all her allies, by the breath of the Lord, no doubt at a moment of great and imminent danger to her opponents.

In the event of war between Great Britain and Russia it is almost certain that Great Britain will act in the offensive, attacking Russia through the mountain passes in India (already secured and railroaded,) with the object of driving Russia back beyond the Caspian and establishing protectorates of the native states as barrier buffers.

No doubt also she will attack Russia on the Pacific, from her ports in British Columbia, and China will most probably be gained as an ally in these operations.

Great Britain in all future wars with European nations, may be reckoned on as developing much greater strength, in soldiers, money, arms, navies and other resources than she is generally credited with. Partly because her policy is always to conceal and belittle her strength and partly because her colonies will develop unexpected resources when needed just as the United States did in the war of the Rebellion.

Her policy in the event of any huge combination against her, will be to protract the war by every means in her power, exhaust her enemies, supplies and resources, and disrupt them by intrigue and bribery.

An attempt (perhaps successful) of Russia to seize Constantinople suddenly, may be expected, also a forcible occupation by Great Britain of Palestine, if she thinks it necessary to her safety.

No motives of delicacy will be allowed to weigh with either of these nations, where their interests are concerned, we may rest assured.

Russia has dogged courage and tenacity and religious enthusiasm united to a firm belief (entirely Asiatic) in her destiny.

Great Britain has the characteristics of the Bull Dog, united to a cool head, constant experience in countless wars and an innate belief that she is the chosen battle-axe of the Lord.

The warning to Christains to "Watch" is not invalidated by a belief that his coming may yet be delayed. In death there is no note of time, and in such case, the hour of death to the faithful follower of Christ is practically the moment of his second advent on earth. And his coming in this way to each of us may be the next moment of our lives. "Watch therefore, and pray."

Tobacco.

Since reading the article of Bro. Hatch in The Restitution of May 10, on the above subject, I concluded to say a few words to let those of like faith know where I stand on this question. To remain silent on such an important subject is virtually to assent to it, and I think the time has come when we, as a people, should speak our sentiments when we know we are right. How to the line, as we say, "Let chips fall where they will." It is to be deplored that so many of our brethren are adicted to the use of this poisonous weed.

When we look at the Scriptures bearing on this subject, with unpredudiced minds as we do others, it must be admitted to be wrong. Let us look at a few passages: Paul says, "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good in the use of edifying," Eph. iv. 29, and in the 31 verse he says, "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking be put away from you with all malice." Now all will accept these as Bible truths and try to obey them. But other texts touching on the use of tobacco are entirely ignored. For instance Paul says again in Hebrews xii. 14, "Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." I ask, is there anything pure and holy in the use of tobacco? If not, why not put it away, as we do wrath, anger, evil speaking? Read Eph. v. 3-6, and see if you can consistently use the "vile weed" and fulfil this Scripture. Notice that it says, no unclean person hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God. Do you not know that if there is anything that will make a person unclean inside and out, it is tobacco. If we can not overcome the tobacco habit, are we then, overcomers in every sense of the word? "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the Paradise of God." Rev. ii. 7. It is safe, however, to conclude that no one but an overcomer will ever be granted eternal life, or attain to the Divine nature.

Having therefore these promises dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord. Heb. vii. 1.

Dear brothers and sisters, the only motive in writing these lines is to do good, and not to harm any one. We want to see all of one mind, practically as well as doctrinally.

"To do good and to communicate, forget not, for with such sacrifices God is well pleased." We ask you, therefore, to think of this matter seriously. For it is better to be on the safe side, even if it costs us a great sacrifice. Yours for the Truth.

We know in part, and we Prophecy in part.

The Editor of the Herald of Life, preached in Melodeon Hall, her main theme was the "burning day." She said the earth was stored with fire, it was truth, but she did not say anything about its being stored with water. There is more water than fire.

In the wilderness shall waters break out and streams in the desert. Artesian wells in the great deserts show that under the earth these deserts are stored with water. There is more water than fire in the earth. Long one-sided discussions of Bible themes are not profitable in papers or pulpits.

Dear Restitution:

I have gotten my mind quieted down enough to write a few lines for my Savior. I just came home from attending the conference at Lanark. Brother and Sister Woodward did the preaching, and they made everything so plain that even a child could have understood it.

I feel as though that meeting has built me up and made me stronger in the faith than ever.

There was not an overly large number of brothers and sisters there, but thank the Lord it is not the many we want, but we do want sound, solid Christians, who are ready to stand up for Jesus.

The Bible says, "Fear not little flock," (not big flock, but little,) for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom.

I feel as though I could employ my time no better than in reading the Blessed Book of Life, where we find so many precious promises.

Oh, may we all fulfill those promises, that we may enter into the Kingdom, is my prayer. Yours in faith.

Emma Lindsay.

Dear Restitution:

How much we prize you. I often say, how could we do without our paper; more than forty years it has been almost a constant visitor at our home. I think it was in 1850, we were at Rochester, New York, where our paper was then printed and edited by Elder Joseph Marsh, called at that The Millenial Harbinger. I remember well the time; it was then and there, we heard his first sermon on the age to come, although something quite new to us, as to preconceived opinions, yet so reasonably, that few exceptions could be taken to it. I think it was the knowledge we had great need of and our paper has been growing in knowledge. We do have so many very interesting articles, we think the week is long to wait. Some writers we do not hear from as much as we would like, we are glad to Howard has unlocked his storehouse of knowledge, and we appreciate it. W. H. Wilson and B. Wilson are very able contributors; they bring forth things old and new, B. Wilson's article in The Restitution, April 12, we fully endorse, for we think he must be correct, and we feel to thank him for what he has written on the great Metalic Image; we think it shou'd be kept before the people, for the Bible says, the dream is certain and the interpretation sure. In the days of the ten kings, shall the God of heaven set up his everlasting kingdom. May the Lord forgive, if we have tried to narrow down the signs that should be universal for such an all-important event. No matter what our preconceived opinions have been: the truth should be our only aim and object.

Mrs. H. Burdick.

Editor Restitution:

I enclose herewith a letter from Mrs. A. E. Davis from Jerusalem. If you think it would interest the readers of The Restitution you are at liberty to use it or any part of it. Yours in the hope of eternal life.

S. T. Blessing.

Jerusalem, May 30, 1893.

Dear Brother Blessing:

Your kind and welcome letter is received, also the Postal Order.

God has moved you to do this kind act. Kindness was never more needed than now. We are all horrified at the new edict issued by the Turkish government. It is that all Christians and Jews who are subjects shall be drafted into army service. The horror of serving such a government, besides leaving their families to starve is awful. There are so many Jewish proselytes who are poor and to be taken from their families means utter ruin. They tell us that the Rabbi, who had an interview of two hours with the Sultan, fainted when he came out of the palace. A fast of twenty days is proclaimed for the Jews througout the Empire.

The poor Jews who would be glad to buy land and make a little home cannot do so as they can get no title to the land now. All those who did purchase land and paid money are in a bad condition, not knowing whether they can ever really own it or not.

It is a time of distress indeed, not knowing what will come next. All the people here carry heavy hearts in view of coming events.

We have much distress all around us. We can do but little to relieve, but trust that the dear Lord will bless our feeble efforts. Without Him we can do nothing.

I have no desire to live longer, if it please God. I desire to rest. It is a comfort to know that there are a few who have faith in the promises of God. Your letter cheers me in the dark way. I give all I have except the daily bread without butter to the poor suffering starving Jews. Thank God I can earn more than I need for this and hope to be able to work as long as I live.

My pictures are selling as fast as I can make them. It is rather slow business, but I know it is all for the best. If I could not do something for others I could not endure life a moment. I have hoped to open a soup kitchen the coming winter but at present the prospect is not very encouraging. A soup kitchen is the thing most needed in this country, and there is none. I feel very insignificant in view of what is to be done. God is able to do all things, and "all things work together for good to them that love and fear him." All Jews believe that the Messiah will soon come, there is no other hope. The Romans have introduced the electric light into Jerusalem. There is not much building at present, for only Jews wish to build. There must come a change soon. It may be war. All feel a dread of what may come.

My most influential friends have died during the past year. I dread to open my letters and papers lest I may again be shocked. I read of the terrible cyclones, and crimes in America, and have no wish to return to my native land. My relatives are continually begging me to "come home." I tell them "I have no home." They will all soon cease to live, and, I would rather die here. Dear brother, this is a gloomy letter but I feel that way, so you will please excuse it. I will never feel cheerful so long as there is so much suffering. Would you like me to send you something from Jerusalem? I should have much pleasure in doing so. I am making albums of pressed flowers and sketches of many sacred places.

Thank God that you believe the truth! I shall be glad to hear from you always. May God bless, and reward you. Sincerely yours.

A. E. Davis.

Dear Restitution:

As we see in The Restitution, that our next conference is called to meet on July 21. Now brethren, we should all make a note of this and so arrange as to be at this meeting, as there is important business to be looked after.

Come so as to be there at the beginning of the meeting, as our business meeting will be on Saturday.

Brethren let us lay aside the cares of this world for a short time and come filled with the love of the truth that we prize so much, and work with all our might a few days for the glorious cause of our absent and soon coming Lord.

The place of meeting is in the west edge of Cowley County, two miles east, and one north of Oxford. Those coming from the west get off the train at Oxford, those from the east, at Kellog.

Write to Br. T. H. Jackson, or, Henry Barnes, at Oxford Station, when you will be there, and from which direction you will come and they will be glad to meet you.

We expect to continue this meeting over two Sundays if the interest is good. Come prepared to stay.

S. C. Oliver, Pres.

Conference Report.

The Church of God met near Carns, Rock Co. Neb. June 22, 1893, and held their third quarterly conference. The attendance was good. The ministers present were as follows: J. L. Herriman, Chas. H. Shultz, Elder F. M. Clifton, Elder A. F. Dugger, J. A. Nugent, M. B. Ellis.

The meeting opened by the reading of different portions of Scripture and prayer.

A number of brothers and sisters from Gordon, Neb., were with us, and we do feel to rejoice in the Blessed Lord when we see brothers and sisters so zealous. Brothers C. H. and P. S. Watkins came 160 miles by team to attend this meeting. Brethren let us awake to our duty, and work while it is day, and pray that we may all meet again in the Kingdom of God.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

It was decided to have the tent moved to Ainsworth, about the 1st of July for the purpose of holding a series of meetings at that place.

The Annual Conference will be held at the Rock Creek School House, in Rock County, Neb. Sept. 23, 1893.

Thanks were tendered Brother and Sister D. K. Hart for the use of their beautiful grove. May God bless them.

He who is faithful over a few things is a lord over cities. It does not matter whether you preach in Westminster Abbey or teach a ragged class, so you are faithful. The faithfulness is all.

God's promises to us are free gifts. If the least compensation is given or accepted, they would cease to be gifts.

All Aboard for the Saengerfest.

One fare for the round trip via the popular Nickel Plate Road. Tickets good going July 10th and 11th. Good returning to and including July 17th. Three trains daily in each direction.

Zion.

"The ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads, they shall obtain joy and gladness; and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." Isaiah ii. 10. Zion was the strength of Judea, the pride of the Jewish nation; situated among the hills and crowned with royal palaces and strong defences, and the magnificent temples, its glories burst upon a pilgrim from a distance, and as he drew near his heart swelled with holy and patriotic emotion. There dwelt the royal prince of the house of David, and there enfolded in the brightness of the Shekinah and overarched by the Cherubim was the Holy of holies, of the King of kings. Peace be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy palaces was the aspiration of every pious heart in behalf of Zion. From the bleak hills of Galilee, from the burning sands of Arabia, from the Islands of Aegean, from Chaldean plains, from the verdant banks of the Nile, from every land and nation, whither the Jew had wandered and where he had made his temporary dwelling place, his heart untrammelled, fondly turned to the sacred shrine of his affections, and the hallowed sanctuary of his religion. In the lonliness of exile, sick with daily servitude, and distressed with constrained worship in heathen temples, one strong hope lived and nerved the Jew to endure; the hope, the prayer that he might yet behold again his beloved Zion, rebuild the shattered temple and restore the neglected rites of Israel's God. Yea even now, this nation scattered and dispersed through every land, cannot forget Jerusalem, nor believe that its glory shall not be revived and its pre-eminence restored. In every land the tribes of Israel wander, live, labor, and gather wealth; but from every land they come yearly, crowds to die at Jerusalem. Each Friday those who have thus come to lay their bodies near to the sanctuary of their hearts, assemble at the old temples, ruined walls, and while floods of tears attest their grief at the departed glories of Zion, they pray in the language of David, that God would build Zion and destroy her enemies, and yet make Jerusalem a praise in the earth. No stranger can look upon the grey haired, weeping crowd, and remain unremoved. The Christian pilgrim mingles tears of sympathy for their grief with prayers that the blindness which rests upon Israel may be removed; for only thus can the heart-broken Jews become again the citizens of the true Zion, the members of the Church of God. They shall return to Zion at the Lord's set time, and they will come with songs of joy.—New York Observer.

James v. 1-9.

1. Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you.

2. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are motheaten.

3. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days.

4. Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth.

5. Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton: ye have nourished your hearts, as in a day of slaughter.

6. Ye have condemned and killed the just; and he doth not resist you.

7. Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain.

8. Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

9. Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned: behold, the judge standeth before the door.

There are clergymen standing all the day idle because they love righteousness and hate the iniquities endorsed by the churches.

Died at Niagara Falls, N. Y., June 16, '93, Brother David Hogarth in his 77th year.

It is with much sorrow that I look at what I have written, yet it is the old, old story and he died ... was buried ... and slept with his fathers. "... Lord make me to know mine end and the measure of my days, that I may know how frail I am. Behold thou hast made my days as an handbreadth and mine age is as nothing before thee."

Brother Hogarth was born in the county of Westmoreland England; crossed the briny deep at 13; landed near Scarborough, Ontario; united with the Methodists at 20; and was married Jan. 7, 1840, to a devoted companion who still lives. They settled nine miles north of Bowmanville on a clearing just large enough for a small house. On that farm fourteen children were born to them—nine girls and five boys—all of whom are living; on that farm they happily and trustingly lived together till the great enemy death broke the union; and on that farm over four hundred friends and neighbors assemble last Monday to weep with those who wept. He and his companion heard the Lord's coming preached in '41 and in '42 they embraced it with joy, were baptized by Lucius Thomas and have ever since been growing in grace and knowledge. A meeting house was built near on Hogarth's farm and up to his death the believers who weekly meet there were led by him. For many years he has taken THE RESTITUTION. He lived in the hope that he would live till Jesus comes, but like Abraham he died in the faith not having received the promise. He died "waiting for the kingdom." All that kind friends and good nursing could do was done. He fell asleep in the same room and on the same bed, where two years ago Bro. R. V. Lyon bade his friends farewell.

He was one of those few whom to know is to love. His presence itself was a benediction. Those neighbors who refused to believe what he believed, say they never knew a nobler, purer man.

"He shall sleep but not forever
There shall be a glorious morn."

When the afflicted widow received the telegram that her husband was dead, the shock was so great that she was unable to attend the funeral. Through the many changes of nearly fifty-four years they walked together. Their hope was one, so that the parting is but for a little while—till Jesus comes.

Let the mourning widow, the fourteen sons and daughters, the thirty-two grandchildren, sorrow not as those who have no hope, "for those who are counted worthy of what age and resurrection of the dead shall be equal to the angels, neither can they die any more."

Littles.

Little words are the sweetest; little charities fly farthest and stay longest on the wing; little lakes are the stillest; little hearts are fullest, and little farms are the best tilled. Little books are most read, and little songs are the dearest loved. And when nature would make anything especially rare and beautiful, she makes it little—little pearls, little diamonds, little dews. Agur's is a model prayer; but then it is a little one, and the burden of the petition is but for little. Life is made up of littles; death, even, is but for a little while—till the coming of the Lord. Day is made up of little beams, and night is glorious with little stars. —The Baptist.

Religion is a personal matter, and the less time man gives to philosophizing and generalizing, the sooner he will come to understand that he as an individual soul needs to have communication with God in order to get the most and the best out of this life, and to look forward with joyous anticipation to the life which is to come. Let men severally, seek the kingdom of God, personal faith secures comfort and contentment, while the fruit of philosophic speculation is unrest. The Interior.

The postage and wrapper on 100 cost about 20 cents so that $1.20 pays for 100 postpaid. Single copy 5 cents, 25 copies 30 cents, 50 copies 60 cents. For any quantity above 25, at rate of 1 cent each with an additional charge of 20 cents per hundred for postage.

Conference Call.

The quarterly conference of the Churches of God of the Abrahamic Faith will meet northeast of Oxford two miles, in Brother Thomas Jackson's neighborhood July 21, 1893, Cowley Co., Kansas, to continue over Sunday and longer if the brethren think best. We hope and entreat all who have an interest in the cause of the Master and are looking for his soon coming to be at the meeting, for we believe that all intend to be reached, yet there is a strong tendency to growing cold among the true church that precedes his coming.

We extend a cordial invitation to all the brethren in this and other states. There is some important business to transact and we would like all of the brethren to come that possibly can come. Brethren let us work while we have an opportunity for the signs indicate the near approach of the Master. Let us be up and doing.

CONTINGENT FUND.

Dear Restitution:

Favorable responses having been made to suggestions for a "Contingent Fund," the writer would suggest further that all calls to administer baptism be answered by the one nearest the candidate, as this will economize the fund.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.

VOL. XLII. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 12, 1893. NO. 26.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the Immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance, and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMPENSATION.

[illegible] the compensating spheres? O the [illegible] are wheels of life.
[illegible] in the [illegible] and [illegible] strife!
[illegible] the [illegible] and the [illegible], [illegible] the [illegible] and the [illegible],
[illegible] the truest power [illegible] each [illegible] source.

How shall we gauge the whole, who can only guess a part?
[illegible] the life, when we cannot spell the heart?
How shall we measure another, we who can never know
[illegible] the surface, the depth of the [illegible]?

[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

Ah! [illegible] all, we should surely [illegible]
That the measure of sorrow and joy is held by an even hand,
That the scale of success or loss shall never overflow,
And that compensation is twined with the lot of high and low.

The easy path in the lowland hath little of grand or new,
But a toilsome ascent leads on to a wide and glorious view;
Peopled and warm is the valley, lonely and chill the height,
But the peak that is nearer the storm-cloud is nearer the stars of light.

For the rapture of love is linked with the pain or fear of loss,
And the hand that takes the crown must ache with many a cross;
Yet he who hath never a conflict hath never a victor's palm,
And only the toilers know the sweetness of rest and calm.

Who would dare the choice, neither or both to know,
The finest quiver of joy, or the agony thrill of woe?
Never the exquisite pain, then never the exquisite bliss,
For the heart that is dull to that, can never be strung to this.

Great is peril or toil if the glory or pain be great!
Never an earthly gift [illegible] responsible weight;
Never a treasure without a following shade of care;
Never a power without the lurk of a subtle snare.

Then hush! oh, hush! for the Father knoweth what thou knowest not,
The need of the thorn and the shadow linked with the fairest lot;
Knows the wisest exemption from many an unseen snare,
Knows what will keep thee nearest, knows what thou couldst not bear.

Hush! oh, hush! for the Father hath fulness of joy in store,
Treasures of power and wisdom, and pleasures for evermore,
Blessing and honor and glory, endless, infinite bliss,—
Child of his love and his choice, oh canst not thou wait for this!

Original.

John's First Epistle.
Chapter 5.

1. Any one who acteth upon his belief that Jesous is the Christ hath been begotten of God: and any one who loveth the one who hath begotten, loveth also the one who hath been begotten of him.

2. In this way we comprehend that we love the offspring of God, namely, when ever we are loving God and watching to keep his commandments.

3. For this is the love of God, that we watch to keep his commandments; and his commandments are not burdensome.

4. Because anything that hath been begotten of God overcometh the Cosmos; and this is the victory that hath overcome the Cosmos, namely our faith.

5. And who the one that overcometh the Cosmos unless he who putteth faith in the fact that Jesous is the Son of God?

6. This Jesous Christ is he who hath come through water and blood and spirit, not in the use of the water, alone, but in the use of the water and the blood; and the spirit is that which testifieth, because the Spirit is the truth.

8. Because the three are they that testify on the earth, namely the Spirit and the water and the blood. And the three are for the one (purpose)

9. If we receive the testimony of men the testimony of God is greater. Because this is the testimony of God which he hath testified concerning his Son.

10. The one who putteth faith in the Son of God hath the testimony in him. The one who doth not put faith in God hath made him a liar, because he hath not put faith in the testimony which God hath testified concerning his Son.

11. And this is the testimony, namely, that God hath given us eternal life, and that this life is in his Son.

12. The one who hath the Son hath the life. The one who hath not the Son of God hath not the life.

13. These things have I written unto you that ye might know that ye have eternal life, ye who are putting faith in the name of the Son of God.

14. And this is the assurance which we have toward him, namely that if we ask for something according to his will he heareth us.

15. And if we know that he heareth whatever we ask for, we know that we have the petitions for which we ask from him.

16. If any one shall have known his brother to be sinning a sin not unto death he may ask and he will grant him life, to those who are not sinning unto death. There is a sin unto death; not concerning this am I telling you to ask.

17. Any wrong is a sin, and there is a sin not unto death.

18. We know that any one who hath been begotten by God is not sinning; but the one who hath been begotten of God is watching to keep himself, and the wicked one doth not touch him.

19. We know that we are of God, and that the whole Cosmos is lying in the wicked one.

20. We know moreover that the Son of God hath come and given unto us a way of thinking so that we comprehend the one who is true, and we are in the true one, namely in his Son Jesous Christ. This is the true God and eternal life.

21. Little children watch to guard yourselves from the idols.

COMMENT.

"Any one who acteth upon his belief" instead of "Whosoever believeth" R. V. There must be something more than mere belief in a fact to have faith.

Notice the definition of Christian love here given as it is practicable and comprehensible. John's logic here is first "that anything begotten of God overcometh the Cosmos." "Our faith hath overcome the Cosmos." Our faith in what? In the fact "that Jesous is the Son of God." This faith is begotten of God. If we have it we have been begotten of God. And we know that we have been begotten of God, because we have this faith. And also know that we love God because in this condition of faith we are watching to keep God's commandments as Jesous did.
